Colman was acquitted on a charge of shooting McRae with intent to do him bodily harm, but was found guilty of wounding him while carelessly discharging a revolver. He was also found guilty of four charges of drunkenness. Two of these charges originally containing the accusation of "conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman" were amended by the court to remove those words. Colman was thus saved from dismissal from service under the 95th article of war which requires such action upon conviction.

The commanding officer was acquitted of all other charges which included misappropriation of government property, accepting a summer lodge from a government contractor, and illegal transfer of soldiers to Selfridge field. Under court decision Colman was also reduced from his temporary rank of colonel to his permanent rank of captain and placed at the bottom of the promotion list. Army regulation require that he remain there for the next three years before he can be eligible for elevation.

Findings of the court-martial are subject to review by higher authorities who may decrease but not increase the pentalty.

Colman was jubilant at the verdict and eagerly accepted the congratulations of fellow officers. O'Connell and his assistant, Capt. W. Stanley Dolan, however, expressed astonishment at the decision, but under rules of the court refused to comment.

Shooting

Private McRae

Atlanta. Ga.

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich. — (ANP) — Col. William T. Colman 39, former commanding officer of Selfridge Field here, was ordered to stand trial September 6 on charges growing out of his shooting and seriously wounding of his chauffeur, Pvt. William McRae, 24, of Morven, N. C., last May 5, according to Capt. Richard M. Ramey, air corps public relations officer.

Colman, who had been in charge of the air [illegible] here since April 23, 1942, shot [illegible] soldier during an altercation over his discovery that the commander allegedly permitted irregularities to exisit on the military reservation. McRae has recovered from his wounds and is reportedly reassigned.

Hours after the shooting, Col. Colman was confined to a hospital for observation and replaced by Col. William B. Wright, former commander at Barksdale Field, La.

Rep. Paul Shafer (Rep. Mich.) instituted an investigation of the camp by the house military affairs committee immediately after the shooting.

"This matter smells to high heaven," said Shafer, "and I mean to get to the bottom of it. I suspect the army is trying to whitewash the officer involved and suppress a scandal. I have asked that the committee look in[illegible] reliable [illegible] which have reached me that Col. Colman was connected with two men who were charged with soliciting money on the premises to deliver permanent jobs at Selfridge Field and that the Negro chauffeur had knowledge of the situation."

Officer Who Shot Private Is Retired

NOV 10 1943

Selfridge Field, Mich., Nov. 9 (U.P.)—Capt. William T. Colman, deposed commander of the air base here has been retired from the Army under Public Law 190, the War Department announced today through the public relations officer of Selfridge Field.

Public Law 190 was passed by the Seventy-Seventh Congress to deal with "inefficiency" in the Army. Date of Colman's retirement was not announced and the War Department statement gave no additional details.

Under the law an officer retired during war emergency because [illegible]erformance "not in keeping with standards of the service" may receive annual retirement pay equal to 2½ per cent of his active annual pay times the number of complete years of service, provided the number is "over seven years." Colman was an Army officer fifteen years.

Court-martial Reviewed.

The Army's action in retiring Colman, commander of Selfridge for several years, followed a special review of court-martial proceedings here last September by Secretary of War Stimson and a board of inquiry; the court convicted Colman of three charges of drunkenness and one charge of careless use of firearms in [illegible]ooting of Pvt. William Mc[illegible] his Negro chauffeur.

The court's sentence was that Colman be demoted from his temporary rank of colonel to his permanent rank of captain. He also was ordered to serve at the bottom of the list of captains for three years.

COURT MARTIAL REDUCES RANK TO CAPTAINCY

Convicted of Using Pistol Carelessly.

BY CARL WIEGMAN.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Selfridge Field, Mich., Sept. 14.—Col. William T. Colman, former commanding officer of Selfridge field, who shot and wounded a Negro soldier at the air base May 5, was reduced to the rank of captain today by a general court martial.

The court of nine colonels found Colman guilty of five charges and acquitted him of 23 other counts. He was acquitted [illegible] charge of shoot[illegible]e soldi[illegible]t. Willie McRae, with intent to do him bodily harm, but was fou[illegible] guilty on another charge of wounding McRae by discharging a pistol carelessly.

He also was found guilty of four charges of drunkenness. Two of these charges originally contained allegations of "conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman," but were amended by the court to remove those words. Thus the court saved Colman from punishment under the 95th article of war, which requires that a convicted officer be dismissed from the service.

Acquitted of Other Charges.

He was found not guilty of all other charges, which included illegal transfer of soldiers to Selfridge field, misappropriation of government property, and accepting a gift from a government contrac[illegible].

The sentence reduced Colman from his temporary rank of colonel to his former permanent rank of captain and ordered that he be placed at the foot of the list of permanent [illegible]ins [illegible] promotion list. [illegible] sentence requires that he remain at the foot of the promotion list for three years, during which time he will not be eligible for promotion.

Colman, overjoyed by the verdict, thanked the court and was surrounded by officers who shook his hands and congratulated him.

Exemplary Sentence Sought.

The jubilation did not extend to the trial judge advocate [prosecutor], Capt. Phillip D. O'Connell, and his assistant, Capt. W. Stanley Dolan, who had asked the court for a sentence that would be an example to all army officers.

Under court martial rules, comments outside of the court by the prosecutor are deemed improper, and O'Connell and Dolan refused to say what they thought of the verdict. They sat open mouthed with astonishment, however, as they heard [illegible]d.

Out[illegible] court Colman smilingly accepted more congratulations, and said: "There are lots of captains in the army. I'll go right along with them."

The court deliberated in a closed session for three hours before finding Colman guilty. Then court was reopened and the defendant's military record was read—a formality to determine whether he had any previous convictions.

Colman Pale in Court.

The court's call for this formality indicated Colman had been found guilty on at least one of the charges, and his ruddy face paled as he realized the import of the procedure.

Then the court went back into a closed session, and voted, by secret ballot, on the penalty to be imposed. This took an hour and a half, an anxious time for the defendant, who sat outside the court building [illegible] with his counsel.

When court reopened, Colman was called to the bench. He stood rigidly at attention as Col. Hamner Huston, president of the court, read the sentence.

The court heard nearly 100 witnesses during the nine day trial, which began Labor day and continued thru a session Sunday. Early in the trial the defense offered testimony intended to show that Colman was suffering from a mental disorder when he shot McRae and when he misbehaved on drinking parties.

SELFRIDGE FIELD, MICH., Sept. 6.—(AP)—Col. William T. Colman, deposed commandant of the Army air base here, was accused at the opening of his court martial trial today of violating seven articles of war, including allegations that he fraudulently obtained the transfer of enlisted personnel, accepted a gift from a contractor employed by the government and that he misappropriated government property.

He was accused also of assault in the shooting of a negro private.

Col. Colman pleaded innocent on all counts and introduced testimony designed to show that he was suffering from a psychoneurosis of moderate severity and an organic brain disorder at the time of the shooting and for many months prior to that incident.

Named among thos[illegible]m Col. Colman w[illegible]ccused of having transferre[illegible] Selfridge Field was Lieut. Benson Ford, grandson of Henry Ford. Lieut. Ford is now serving at the armed forces induction center in Detroit.

Col. Colman was accused of accepting a vacation lodge near Oscoda, Mich., Army air field, from a representative of the Altadin Company of Bay City, Mich., whose two sons in the armed services were transferred in 1942 to Selfridge Field.

Col. Colman was relieved of his command here and placed under technical arrest following the shooting and wounding of Pvt. William R. McRae, 24-year-old soldier-chauffeur at the base on May 5. He was charged in this connection today with assault to do great bodily harm and also with careless discharge of a pistol.

Other charges included four separate allegations of dr[illegible]enness, misappro[illegible]ation o[illegible] or and services of [illegible] employes on th[illegible]ccasions, and fraudulently pr[illegible]ring the enlistment of three men for service at Selfridge Field.

The Army White-Washes

Amsterdam News New York, N. Y.

SEP 25 1943

Last Spring Col. William T. Colman, former post commander of Selfridge Field, Mich., shot and seriously wounded a Negro private who had been assigned to him as a chauffeur. It was reliably reported that Col. Colman had demanded that no Negro chauffeur be assigned to drive him, that if one were, he would kill the bl — s— o— b—. Regardless of whether the colonel threatened to kill any Negro soldier assigned to him as a chauffeur or not, nevertheless, when one did he wantonly shot him. Although the soldier did not die as a result of his wounds, he will be maimed for the rest of his life.

Following his maniacal and prejudicial outburst, Col. Colman was "arrested" and placed in a hospital for "observation." Meanwhile, his shocking action in shooting the soldier for absolutely no reason at all blew the lid off his inefficient, prejudicial and partial command of his post. An investigation followed. He was charged, among other things, while on duty with being drunk and falsely getting comparatively soft births at Selfridge Field for certain soldiers, including a grandson of Henry Ford, as well as maliciously shooting the colored private.

Last week Col. Colman was court martialed and convicted of careless use of fire arms and on four charges of drunkeness on duty. The pay off, however, is this: he was demoted to a captaincy and denied the privilege of promotion for three years. (His regular rank is that of captain—he was promoted to colonel temporarily during the war—therefore he actually wasn't demoted at all).

The entire Colman stench ranks among the most notorious army white-washings in history. It is shocking, revolting and depressing. He should have and could have been thrown out of the army on any one of the charges on which he was found guilty. Yet, this brute was penalized about as much as an officer who might have been AWOL for a day or so.

In so far as the morale of 700,000 Negro troops and the entire Negro civilian population is concerned, the Colman case has done much to lower their already close to rock bottom morale. Negro service men and civilians look upon the case as another blunt example of the lack of consideration Negroes get in the army. They believe that Colman should have been punished to the limit by the army, and that he would have been punished much more severely if the private he shot had been white.

They also recall the fact that some half dozen Negro soldiers were recently court martialed, convicted, and dishonorably discharged from the army and sentenced to Leavenworth Penitentiary for long terms for shooting up the town of Duck Hill, Miss. No one was injured in this affair.

Following the white washing of Colman, Congressman Donald L. O'Toole of New York demanded of Secretary of War Stimson an investigation of the court martial. Mr. O'Toole said: "the morale of the army and the public will be shattered by the retention of such specimens within our armed forces."

It is hoped that the War Department finally gets wise to itself and demonstrate that it can mete out justice imparially and regardless of color. The stench of the Colman case will last for a long time.

Coast Interracial USO

Center Ends First Year

Chicago Defender
Chicago, Illinois

JUL 3 1943

SACRAMENTO, Cal. — (ANP)—The interracial USO center here had recently completed its first year of successful operation with high hopes for the future.

The interracial center sponsored by the Sacramento Council of United Service Organizations was not foisted upon the community by outsiders, stated Ben Ellison, director, but was generated by local inhabitants.

Soldiers of all races, colors and creeds share the facilities of the center with complete equality in an atmosphere of harmony, stated the director. Approximately 25 per cent of the center's attendance is white, 34 per cent Negro, and 11 per cent Oriental and other races.

The center is accessible to all soldiers because it is located in the central part of the town.

Special entertainments are provided on designated nights during the week as, for instance, on Sunday night a raffle is held to determine which lucky soldier will make a long distance telephone call to his parents; Wednesday nights are devoted to highly skilled games such as chess; on other evenings amateur productions are staged by the Little Theatre association of the center. Every event presents a cross-section of the vari-colored complexion of the American population.

"Our most successful attractions have been those of united nations' participation, in which such groups as Chinese, Negro, Indian, Latin American, and other foreign-born and native American peoples have taken part," declared Ellison.

When the "Porgy and Bess" show closed a highly successful engagement here recently, Etta Moten and Todd Duncan appeared at Mather field nearby, where most of the center's habitues are drawn from, and gave an impromptu performance.

Soldiers at the post expressed their appreciation by joining in the singing and music, and conferring honorary master sergeants' chevrons on the sleeves of Miss Moten and Mrs. Todd Duncan who accompanied the artists.

Ellison, who before coming here was director of youth activities for the Los Angeles County Coordinating council, said that much of the credit for the smoothness with which Negro and white enlisted men are integrated into recreational and entertainment programs here was due to two white officers, Maj. Maurice Coulson and Capt. Charles H. Dorsey.

Besides these men Ellison stated that several community organizations had assumed responsibility for the efficient management of the center. He said that more than 170 persons give freely of their time to see that the soldiers are never lonely.

Some of the organizations represented are the Shiloh Baptist church, the United Travelers, the Russian club, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the B'Nai Sisterhood, the NAACP and the Pocahontas club and First Methodist church.

Chicago, Ill.

Plea Of Amnesia Aired As Medical Experts Take Stand

By JOHN T. WOOD

SEP 11 1943

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich. —"I repeatedly gave instructoons that I did not want a colored chauffeur."

This statement, allegedly made by Col. William T. Colman following the May 5 shooting of Pct. William McRae, was introduced this week as evidence at the court martial of the former commander at Selfridge Field who is charged with violating five Articles of War and who faces dismissal from the armed forces or imprisonment.

Colman's alleged statement was revealed in the testimony of Lieut. Col. Paul A. Petree, chief psychiatrist at Percy Jones hospital, one of four psychiatrists to testify Monday. Lieut. Col. Petree's testimony followed that of Lt. Col. Charles B. Rayburn, Capt. Leonard Hitt[illegible] and Dr. Raymond W. Waggoner, professor of psychiatry at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor.

Lieut. Col. Petree's testimony that the defendant admitted to him that he was averse to being driven by a colored chauffeur, and Colman's questioning the psychiatrist as to whether "alcohol or amnesia will be in my favor" deal a blow to the defense counsel's inquiry into the defendant's sanity. It indicated that the defense is seeking to establish that Colman was suffering from a mental disorder and was therefore not responsible for the acts charged.

Claim Amnesia

The preceding witnesses testified to the effect that their examinations of Colman revealed that the defendant, prior to and at the time of the shooting of McRea, was "suffering from a severe psycho-neurosis of the anxiety type and there were periods when he was not responsible." These witnesses also testified that Colman's condition had existed over a period of three four years and that the type of psycho-neurosis from which he suffered frequently resulted in periods of amnesia.

Lieut. Col. Petree's testimony, however, was at variance with that of the other witnesses. He told the court that although he, too, found that Colman suffered a psychoneurotic condition, he did not believe it was the type that produces amnesia. Contrary to testimony of the three other experts on mental diseases, Petree said he could not testify that at the time of the shooting Colman was suffering from any mental ailment and thus was not responsible for his acts.

Cross-examined by Capt. Phillip D. O'Connell, trial judge advocate of the court martial, Petree testified that Colman, in attempting to piece together the events leading up to the shooting of McRae, said that he had been on a picnic and that following the picnic, he returned to his office for one of two revolvers. Colman, Petree testified, admitted that he had been drinking on the night of the shooting.

Query On Alcohol

Petree's questioning of Colman occurred on May 7, and it was then that Colman asked him whether "alcohol or amnesia will be in my favor." Petree did not reveal how he asnwered Colman's question.

It was also during this interview, Petree said, that Colman, in trying to reconstruct the story of the May 5 incident, said "Oh, what's the use, I've got amnesia anyway."

Besides being accused of the shooting of Pvt. Willie McRae, 24 years old, and repeated instances of drunkenness, Col. Colman is charged with having fraudulently obtained transfers of enlisted men, accepted a gift from a government contractor, and misappropriated government property.

The court was told the colonel's drinking habit was so bad that he had difficulty in taking off and landing airplanes at the field and sometimes, while in flight, he had a frantic obsession that he must get out of the plane.

During cross-examination of one witness, Lt. Col. Rayburn of the medical corps, by Capt. W. Stanley Dolan, the assistant trial judge advocate, Dolan asked: "Wouldn't a person be in a state of amnesia if he had drunk nearly a fifth of whiskey?"

Rayburn shrugged his shoulders. The prosecutor did not pursue the line of inquiry and made no further explanation of his reference to the whiskey.

Taken to Hospital

Lt. Col. Petree of the medical corps, chief of the neuro-psychiatric division of the Percy Jones General hospital, Battle Creek, Mich., then took the stand and told how Col. Colman was taken to his hospital on the day of the shooting and remained there for five days.

On cross-examination by Capt. O'Connell, Petree said Colman had told him he had been drinking the night before the shooting and that he had gone to his office to get two revolvers.

Col. Petree then brought out a point never before made public in official announcements of the case, that Colman had said: "I have given orders repeatedly that a Negro chauffeur should never be sent to drive my car."

This was the first reference in the trial to the circumstances of the shooting, which occurred near the front steps of the administration at 1 a.m., when Pvt. McRae drove up to the building in Colman's car. The commanding officer fired one shot, which struck McRae in the abdomen. McRae has recovered and he appeared at the opening of the trial, posing for newspaper photographers.

Defense Heard First

With Petree's testimony, the defense ended presentation of testimony of the matter of Colman's mental condition and the judge advocate began to present his side of the case. It was explained the procedure of having defense witnesses first was followed in the interest of saving time. The judge advocate said that if the court holds that Colman was mentally irresponsible nothing would be gained by presenting voluminous testimony as to his acts.

The first witness for the prosecution was Maj. John Lukas of the medical corps, stationed at Selfridge field. He said he saw Colman at the commanding officer's quarters an hour after the shooting.

"His eyes were bloodshot and blurry," Lukas said. "His speech was affected and he apparently didn't know what was going on. My impression was that he was under the influence of liquor."

Drinking at Picnic Told

Maj. Lukas said Colman told him he had had a few drinks at a picnic on the afternoon of the shooting and a few drinks later. Asked whether he is a psychiatrist, Lukas replied with an emphatic "No."

Members of the court, who had spent most of the day hearing testimony involving the use of complex medical terms, joined in the laugh that swept the courtroom.

Rain Sweeps Field

It was a rainy morning as the hearing opened in a frame temporary office building across the road from the field's administration building. Sheets of rain swept across the nearby runways and upon a Flying Fortress parked within sight of the court building.

Late in afternoon the sun came out, and planes of the 332nd fighter group, a Negro group in training at the field, started streaking across the sky. The noise of the motors made it difficult to hear witnesses.

When the hearing began the courtroom was jammed with witnesses and newspaper men. The judge advocate read the list of witnesses summoned—79 in all—and called the roll. All were present or accounted for.

After the reading of the charges by Judge Advocate O'Connell, he also gave the oath to the members of the court, which originally comprised 11 colonels. Col. James F. Doherty of Tallassee, Ala., one of the members, was unable to appear because of illness, and another member, Col. Gilbert T. Collar of Columbia, S. C., was excused after a peremptory challenge by the trial judge advocate.

Plea of Not Guilty Entered

After the members of the court had been sworn to grant Col. Colman a fair trial, the president of the court Col. Hamner Huston of Tampa, Fla., administered the oath to the trial judge advocate. Col. Colman and his defense counsel, who include John R. Watkins, former United States district attorney in Detroit then were asked how they wished to plead. They arose, faced the court, and Maj. Thomas A. Ballantine of Tallahassee, Fla., chief defense counsel, spoke for the group.

"Not guilty," he said.

29 Specifications Set Up

The charges against Col. Colman, read to the court at the opening of the court-martial, detailed alleged violations of five articles of war and set up 29 specifications as to how the articles were violated. The court may fix the penalty under four of the articles of war involved, but a finding of guilty does not require that the defendant be dismissed from service.

Col. Colman, however, also is on trial under another article, known to army men as No. 95, which provides that any officer convicted of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman shall be dismissed from service.

Under this article he is charged with being drunk and disorderly May 5, the date of the shooting of Pvt. McRae, and again on April 3, April 20, and May 1. One such offense is alleged to have occurred at the Oscoda (Mich.) army air field, a subsidiary base 200 miles north of Selfridge field.

Eighteen specifications listed in the charges allege that Col. Colman unlawfully procured the transfer of enlisted men to Selfridge field "to the prejudice of good order and military discipline."

SEP 11 1943

In some of the cases he is accused of certifying that men were qualified for special assignments when they were not in fact so qualified.

In addition, he is charged with misappropriating an electric power generator valued at $800, a refrigerator valued at $175, and five bedsteads valued at $4.93 each. He also is accused of misappropriating labor and services, valued at $154, of six civilian employes of Selfridge field.

COURT MARTIAL DENIES COLMAN DISMISSAL PLEA

Chicago Tribune
Chicago, Illinois

Refuses to Vote Verdict of Insanity.

BY CARL WIEGMAN.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Selfridge Field, Mich., Sept. 7.—After 15 minutes' deliberation a general court martial today refused to dismiss the major charges against Col. William T. Colman, former commanding officer of Selfridge field, on a defense plea Colman was not guilty by reason of insanity.

The decision was announced by the law member of the court, Lt. Col. Charles H. McDonald, in seven words: "The motion of the de[illegible] is denied."

The decision followed 90 minutes of argument by Capt. Philip D. O'Connell, the trial judge advocate [prosecutor], and Maj. Thomas A. Ballantine, chief of defense counsel, and concluded two days of court action which would have taken weeks in the ordinary civil court.

Story of Shooting Told.

The defense moved to dismiss the major charges against Colman after the court martial had heard the story of the shooting last May 5 of Pvt. Willie McRae, a Negro chauffeur, at the air base.

McRae and other witnesses of the shooting were placed on the witness stand by the prosecutor, who sought by their testimony to discredit the defense contention Colman's mental condition excused him of responsibility for the shooting and other alleged acts of misconduct.

McRae, a medium size man with close cropped black hair, appeared before the court wearing a field jacket over his summer uniform, saluted smartly, and told his story with little prompting. It was the first time the army had permitted anything except a bare announcement of the shooting to be made public.

Tells of Driving to Field.

McRae said that about 12:30 a. m. on the morning of the shooting, he drove to the field headquarters building in response to a summons from the colonel for an automobile. Col. Colman was in his office with his wife and son, Harner, 4 years old. McRae's story continued:

"I sat in the car and the officer of the day [Capt. Will Orr Ross] came out of headquarters with Col. Colman and the boy. They put the boy in the car and he went to sleep. Then the colonel went back upstairs and the kid wakes up.

"I took the kid inside and was in there talking to the guard, and the guard told me to take the boy to the toilet. Capt. Ross came and helped me and then I brought the kid back out and sit down in the car for 3 or 4 minutes.

Colman Staggering, Says Witness.

"Col. Colman came out of headquarters. He was staggering and he came out to the car where I was and told me to put the kid over into the private car [Colman's private automobile]. I carry the kid over and he said 'Go ahead and leave the kid' and I walk back to the staff car and sat down.

"I was there a few minutes and he told me to come and get the kid and just as I got out he said just like something struck him: 'Damn' and he turned around and shot and I whirled and circled around the flag pole and he fired a second shot."

McRae was wounded in the abdomen.

Two other enlisted men supported McRae's account of the shooting. Pvt. Norman J. Nyland, a sentry at headquarters, said he noticed Colman appeared to be under the influence of liquor.

"He walked unsteadily," Nyland said. "Also, he asked me to get his cap, and I told him the cap was in his pocket and he took it out and put it on. Then he asked for his son, told me to go get him, and cursed me a little."

Nyland said that after the shooting he went to Col. Colman's office with a major and saw a bottle one-third full of whisky.

Pvt. Carl E. Blankenship, who was driving a patrol car on the night of the shooting, added testimony which brought in the name of Mrs. Colman.

Over the protests of Maj. Ballantine, who argued Mrs. Colman's acts were irrelevant, the witness was permitted to tell how he saw the colonel's wife go outside the building, carrying a [illegible] in her hand.

He said a yellow liquid was in the glass. Mrs. Colman's face was red and her hair disheveled, Blankenship added.

Describes Second Shot.

"After the first shot," Blankenship continued, "I got behind the colonel so I could grab him if he tried to shoot me, and then he let go another shot, saying: 'There's one for the British'."

On cross-examination by the defense, Blankenship said the colonel turned to him and said after the first shot, "Did I hurt him?"

"It looks as tho you did, sir," the witness said he replied.

Earlier the prosecutor submitted a deposition from Lt. Col. Sam W. Westbrook, formerly a flying group commander at Selfridge, who now is in foreign service. The deposition told how Col. Colman and his wife spent the evening prior to the shooting.

Drinking at Picnic Told.

Westbrook testified that at 7 p. m. he accompanied Col. and Mrs. Colman to the picnic grounds of the army post, where they broiled steaks.

"Col. Coleman brought a fifth of whisky," the deposition read. "I had one drink and the rest was consumed by Mr. and Mrs. Colman. Later we went to the colonel's office where he had another fifth of whisky. I had one drink out of that and left at 11:45 p. m."

In his final argument on the motion to dismiss the major charges, Maj. Ballantine contended the manual of court-martial provides no man may be found guilty where a reasonable doubt exists as to his mental condition and his ability to distinguish right from wrong. He reviewed the testimony of a series of mental diseases specialties who asserted Colman was afflicted with a psycho-neurosis of an anxiety type and had been under treatment; at intervals, for more than four years.

Capt. O'Connell, for the government, in his closing argument, contended the acts of Col. Colman were typical of a drunken shooting rather than the acts of a neurotic person. The fact that the accused man is a high ranking officer is all the more reason why he should be subject to discipline, O'Connell said.

Social Rivalries Recounted.

Social rivalries at the Selfridge field officers' club, and drinking bouts at a hunting lodge were recounted by witnesses at the morning session, when the trial judge advocate resumed presentation of rebuttal testimony concerning Col. Colman's mental condition.

The first witness was Lt. A. C. Wadsworth of the medical corps, who is in charge of the flight surgeon's office at the Selfridge air base. He testified that Col. Colman took a physical examination April 30, five days prior to the shooting, and was found to be qualified for full flying duty.

"He appeared to be collected and quite stable and completely free of the symptoms he had previously," Wadsworth said.

Relieved of Flying Duty.

The witness explained that the previous symptoms referred to were headaches, dizziness, and spots before the eyes, of which Col. Colman had complained when he was examined July 25, 1941, the date of his arrival at Selfridge field. At that time he was relieved of flying duty.

Maj. Charles B. Horton of the medical corps, Barksdale Field, Louisiana, then took the stand. Under questioning by the trial judge advocate, he identified himself as a graduate of the University of Chicago school of medicine and a specialist in mental diseases.

Maj. Horton said he examined Colman July 11 and 12 and concluded that the colonel was suffering from a psychoneurosis. He said he reported later to his superior officers that he believed the shooting was the result of an acute upset, and that Colman had no conscious intent to commit the act.

Blames It on Drinking.

Asked whether he still had that opinion, he said: "I no longer believe that was the undoubted cause. My opinion now is that what happened on the night of May 4-5 was the result of intoxication, not a mental lapse."

On cross examination by Maj. Ballantine of defense counsel, Maj. Horton admitted he had ruled out alcoholism as the cause of the shooting in his report to the judge advocate of the 3d air force. He admitted also he had told Col. Colman he believed the colonel could be relieved of army duty for medical reasons. He conceded he had advised the colonel's wife to "move next door" if Colman had any recurrence of mental disorders.

Col. Colman, commanding officer of Selfridge Field tried for the McRae shooting and irregularities at the army post was reduced to the rank of captain by a court martial last week composed of nine colonels. He was found guilty of five charges and acquitted of 23 other counts, which caused Shafer to ask, what kind of faith the people can be expected to have in the military when "that kind of a sentence is dealt to an officer who has shot a private under his command."

Harbored Prejudices

Testimony from witnesses revealed that Colman harbored racial prejudices that influenced many of his actions. He was reported to have said he would not have a Negro chauffeur and resented McRae's appearance at the post command to drive his automobile. Orders were issued by the commander to his aides to never assign a Negro to his detail.

The soldiers accused of the Duck Hill shooting, in which no one was injured, with two exceptions, were from southern states and attached to the 476th quartermaster truck regiment. They drew sentences at hard labor ranging from five to 15 years in federal and military prisons. Those sentenced were Cpl. Larue Steele, Pvts. James Harris and Elijah Outlaw, who drew 15 year terms; Pvts. Leroy Dorsey of Miss., sentenced to seven years, and Pvt. C. Wells, of Georgia who drew a term of five years.

Colman was acquitted on a charge of shooting McRae with intent to do him bodily harm, but was found guilty of wounding him while carelessly discharging a revolver. He was also found guilty of four charges of drunkeness. Two of these charges originally containing the accusation of "conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman" were amended by the court to remove those words. Colman was thus saved from dismissal from service under the 95th article of war which requires such action upon conviction.

In Case Lt. Colonel Who Shot Soldier

Savannah, Ga.

Washington, Sept. 24 (ANP) Sec. of War Stimson told his press-radio conference Thursday that he has asked that the record in the case of Lt. Col. William T. Coleman, courtmartialed commander of Selfridge field, Mich., be "expedited."

"Our system of court-martial procedure and military jurisdiction is that the record in each general court-martial trial is reviewed first by the authority that appointed the court, which in this case was the commanding general of the first air force," Stimson declared. "Finally it is reviewed in Washington in the office of the judge advocate general of the war department.

That record has not reached here yet, but I am taking steps to expedite in this case."

Both Reps. O'Toole and Shafer have been prodding the war department through threats of a cogressioal investigation to determine why a stiffer penalty had not been handed to Coleman other than demoting him to a captaincy.

MEMORY BLANK ON SHOOTING, COLMAN PLEADS

Asserts Picnic Is His Last Recollection.

BY CARL WIEGMAN.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Selfridge Field, Mich., Sept. 12.—Col. William T. Colman took the witness stand today in his trial before a court martial and testified he remembered nothing of what happened the night of May 4-5, when he shot and wounded Pvt. Willie McRae, a Negro chauffeur, at the air base headquarters.

Colman, former commander of Selfridge field, also is accused of procuring the fraudulent transfer of enlisted men, of drunkenness, of accepting a gift from a government contractor, and of misappropriating government property. He was removed from his command after the shooting of McRae.

Colman testified he was worried during March and April because many army inspectors were sent to Selfridge field, some without his knowledge of their presence.

Irritated by Methods.

"Don't misunderstand me, gentlemen," he told the court. "I love the work, but the methods used in going behind my back irritated me. I didn't have sufficient officer material, and when I called Tampa, Fla. [3d air force headquarters], they told me 'we're going to take more of your officers; we're going to scrape the bottom of the barrel.'

"Then the inspectors kept complaining that beds were too long, or beds were too short, or men were living in a swamp. I learned one of the inspectors, Capt. L. W. Bryan—I don't like to mention his name—was with some men from the FBI and they had with them Sgt. Myron Collins, the post sergeant major.

"Bryan, I learned later, was under orders to go thru the S-2 [intelligence] files and nothing else, but he went down to my hangars. He told me how the men should stand at the gate, he handed me a letter—gentlemen, if you had got a letter like that you would have thrown him out of the office. And this was when the regular inspectors for the 3d air force were about to give me an excellent report, which they did."

Colman Tells of Picnic.

Colman then told of a picnic which he attended the evening of the shooting. He said his wife, Jane, and Lt. Col. Sam Westbrook accompanied him on the picnic and they had a bottle of whisky, about half full.

"I know there was not more than half a fifth," he said, "because there was some question about whether it was worth taking. I don't know who mixed the drinks. I think I mixed the first, but I was more interested in cooking a steak.

"We had a fire going and I was turning the steak. On my first or second drink I could see the bone in the steak, and, gentlemen, from that time on the only person I can remember is Maj. John Lucas, [the medical officer who examined Colman after the shooting].

Can't Remember Another Thing.

Colman paused a few seconds and spoke slowly:

"Gentlemen, not for the life of me, so help me God, can I remember one other thing. That's my story. I have had four months to think it over and read testimony. There are things in there that I am reported to have said.

"If I could get within five minutes of the affair I might have some glimmer, but that moment when I leaned over the steak is the last time that I remember anything. I don't remember eating the steak. I don't remember coming to headquarters.

"Testimony shows that half a bottle of liquor was drunk in headquarters. I can't tell you. As far as I'm concerned, that bottle of liquor still is in the left hand drawer of my desk, as it was put there many months ago.

Recognizes Pistol on Table.

"I know that pistol [on a table in the courtroom]. I have seen it, and it was left in the left hand drawer and always was in the left hand drawer. I can't tell you any more, gentlemen. That's the end."

Colman paused again, then added: "Why, I cannot understand. It is beyond me."

Defense counsel led Colman thru a brief account of his career. He was born in Dunkirk, N. Y., and was graduated from the University of Michigan. He attended the army flying school at Brooks field, Texas, and was graduated from Kelly field, Texas. Then came four years' service in the Philippines, where, he said, he helped set up the flying fields and plan of defense which were used when the Japanese invaded the islands.

Later he worked with the test section of the air forces, helped develop the P-39 fighter plane, took advanced work in aeronautical engineering, and was assigned to Selfridge field, where he became commander April 23, 1942. He is 39 years old.

Cooks Trained to Start Motors.

Colman spoke for nearly an hour in telling problems he faced as commander, explaining that during the period of his command, ending May 5, more than 15,000 soldiers were trained at his station.

"I tried to have every man know everything possible," he said. "I even had cooks learning how to start an airplane motor. I figured the time might come when the cook would be the only man left."

Maj. Gerge A. Hartford, former provost marshal at Selfridge field, testified he saw Colman at 6 p. m. May 4 and that Colman seemed to be agitated. The colonel and his wife were on their way to the picnic, Hartford said. He helped put the picnic food into the back compartment of Colman's car. In doing so, he saw a bottle of whisky, Hartford said. He testified he saw Colman at headquarters after the shooting.

"His eyes were watery and bloodshot and he seemed to be under the influence of liquor," Hartford said.

Tells of Trip to Quarters.

Lt. Col. Charles G. White, Colman's former executive officer, testified he took Colman home in a staff car, meeting him at headquarters after Pvt. McRae had been wounded.

"Col. Colman greeted me jovially," White testified. "He did not mention the shooting on the way to his quarters and when we got there he talked for 15 or 20 minutes about things at the field, never mentioning that anything unusual had occurred.

"Then the phone rang and Maj. Hartford informed me McRae was about to have an operation. Then I asked Col. Colman whether he had shot anybody. He asked: 'What, did you shoot somebody?' He meant me, and I told him no, that I had been told he shot a chauffeur. He acted as if he had been drinking."

Former Secretary Heard.

Miss Ruth Hausner, Colman's former secretary, testified Colman appeared to be under severe strain during the month before the shooting.

"He was as nice as possible before that," she said, "but then he became excitable over little matters. I couldn't seem to please him. He complained of headaches and ear trouble, and frequently pointed to a sign on his desk, which said 'Relax,' and said, 'I wish I could relax'."

Miss Hausner said she was about to ask to be transferred from Colman's office when the shooting occurred and he was relieved of his command.

Officer's Sneers Described.

Defense testimony also was presented today on an incident of April 3, when, according to prosecution witnesses, Colman insulted a junior officer and gave ridiculous commands to the enlisted men.

Colman said he insulted the junior officer because he was exasperated with the man's sneering and smirking. Asked whether he had commanded an enlisted man to lie on the ground and perform indecent motions, the defendant said: "Unfortunately I must admit I gave orders to tha teffect. I didn't intend to have the man obey the commands. Looking back upon it, I see that I was absolutely unjustified."

Colman testified that a vacation lodge on Foote dam lake was not a personal gift to him but was intended as an annex to the officers' club of the air base there.

He said a power generator was sent to the lodge from Selfridge field so workmen building the place could use power saws and get it ready for use "when we went up for deer hunting."

Gift for Transfers Charged.

The prosecution charges the lodge was the gift of the Aladdin company of Bay City, Mich., which manufactured and sold prefabricated buildings for installation at Selfridge field. It was charged the lodge was a gift to Colman in return for effecting the transfer of James and Robert Granse, sons of an official of the Aladdin company, to Selfridge field.

Colman denied knowing of negotiations for the transfers. He said

STIMSON ADVISES DISMISSAL OF COLMAN

OCT 9 1943

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

WASHINGTON — Showing obvious displeasure at the light punishment given by the general court-martial at Selfridge Field to Capt. William Colman, former colonel and post commander, who shot a Negro soldier, Secretary of War Stimson last Thursday announced that he had reviewed the hearing and the sentence and had decided to take further steps with a view of removing Colman from all active service in the Army.

RECOMMENDS DISMISSAL

The court-martial reduced Colman to the rank of captain and prevented his promotion for three years. Secretary Stimson has recommended his dismissal to a board of five general officers appointed by him to hear the case.

If the board decides to remove Colman from active service he will automatically be retired from the Army and will draw a pay based on his 14 years of Army service of approximately $75 per month as compared with the more than $600 base pay he received as a full colonel.

COLMAN'S SENTENCE AROUSES

CONGRESS

Representatives Demand Investigation of Court-Martial Findings

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23—Rep. Andrew J. May, of Kentucky, chairman of the House Military Affairs committee, said last Saturday that his committee may order a "full-scale investigation" of the court-martial of Colonel William T. Colman, 39-year-old former commander of the Selfridge Field, Michigan Army Air base.

Mr. May said, however, that such an investigation was contingent on what the War Department does.

HOUSE COMMITTEE MAY LAUNCH PROBE

"If no action is forthcoming and it appears that the court-martial findings were not in keeping with the evidence, we then may order a full-scale investigation," May said.

May denied reports that his committee already had decided to investigate.

Colman was convicted by a court-martial on September 14 of careless use of firearms and drunkenness and was ordered reduced in rank to a captaincy.

ACQUITTED ON SHOOTING CHARGE

He was acquitted on all other charges, including allegations that he had feloniously shot and wounded Pvt. William R. McRae, a colored soldier, at the Selfridge Field Air base on May 5. The original charge on this count was reduced to the careless use of firearms.

The finding of the court-martial is subject to review by the War Department, and the sentence will not take effect until finally approved.

In directing Colman's reduction in rank, the court-martial ordered that he be placed at the foot of the list of captains, not to be promoted for three years.

Representative Paul W. Shafer, Republican, of Michigan, another member of the House Military Affairs committee, also has asked for an investigation of the court-martial proceedings against Colman.

"I wonder what this court-martial would have done if a drunken private shot his commanding officer?" Mr. Shafer asked, and he added, "If an investigation goes far enough, it will involve some State officials and a lot of persons in civilian life. I want to know about the slot machine racket and about a lot of other people not mentioned in the testimony."

Representative Donald L. O'Toole, Democrat, of New York, demanded in a letter to Secretary of War Stimson, an investigation of the court-martial of Colonel Colman, saying "the morale of the Army and the public will be shattered by the retention of such specimen within the armed services.

ARMY JUSTICE

An army colonel shoots a Negro soldier and gets off with a reduction of rank to captain. Colored America on reading this news last week, shook its head and rightly conjectured, "Would the punishment have been as moderate had the soldier been white?"

Even the white daily press raised this question. Almost without exception editorial comment roundly condemned the verdict of the military court which was composed of seven army colonels. The press deplored the fact that the color of the victim's skin could sway military men away from their duty to mete out even-handed justice.

Prejudice on the part of high army officer is nothing new however. Every week there is reported some new outrage against Negro soldiers on the part of army officials—a camp commander will bar them from post exchanges, theatres and service clubs; an army chief will break-up artillery units ordering gunnery experts to labor detachments; a game young colored enlisted man draws a sentence of 25 years at hard labor because he leads a protest against discrimination.

These instances are the natural result of the un-American philosophy which pervades the army. One must remember that in the main, Negro-hating southerners are in control of army policy and that the rest of white America merely lets them run the show.

The Colman case is just another incident that fits into this jig-saw of racial bigotry. Colonel Colman staggered up to his car one dark night at Selfridge Field, Mich., the army post he was commanding, and shot a colored boy who was waiting to drive him. It was a brutal, defenseless attack, but the colonel is white, the boy colored, one would hardly expect the colonel to be severely punished for wounding a Negro.

Of course colored folks are bitter. As usual when these incidents occur their morale takes a deep crash-dive. But in their bitterness, they should not forget that this case has wider implications.

According to testimony, Colonel Colman was blind drunk the night the shooting occurred. According to his own admission his mind was blank. At the worst he was drunk, at the best he was sick. If he was drunk he should be dismissed from the service for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. If he were ill there is still no place for him in military service. An army has no place for leaders who periodically go off their bean.

Army officers have autocratic authority. They are supposed to be obeyed without question. But their demeanor, poise and sound judgement are supposed to justify the faith enlisted men have in them. Here we have an example of a high army officer cavorting around his post in a dazed stupor, presenting a disgraceful spectacle to all soldiers who saw him whether white or colored.

What could these men possibly have thought when they awoke the following morning to hear the news that their commander had shot a soldier? What can privates throughout the whole army think when they hear that he has received the whitewash?

You may convince a few white soldiers that this could only happen because a Negro was involved. This line of reasoning may restore a sort of uneasy confidence and make them feel that the same thing couldn't happen to them. It might even justify to some the colonel's strange conduct.

But by and large "buck" privates who hear about this case—and many will, for army news has a strange way of traveling by the grapevine, even to far-flung outposts — will remember that Colonel Colman went beserk and shot a soldier. They may even forget he was a Negro soldier. And because the colonel got away with it, their opinion of all colonels will be lowered.

Then at some crucial point of battle a blue-eyed, blond youngster will suddenly remember that colonels aren't infallible, and he'll hesitate to carry out an order given him by one, and because he does other white boys will be killed and the final outcome of the action will hang longer in doubt.

If the seven-colonel court martial board could have seen beyond the complexion of the unfortunate soldier who was shot, and if they could have seen the larger implications which might result from Colonel Colman's conduct, they would no doubt have been more severe — they would have erased the blot which his conduct has cast on the entire officer corps, they would have dismissed him from service.

THE COLMAN VERDICT.

In the technical [illegible] Col. Colman was convicted by the court martial at Selfridge field, for he was found guilty on five minor counts. In his own mind, and in the minds of everybody else, the verdict was equivalent to an acquittal. He was not dismissed in disgrace from the army. He was not sentenced to a term of imprisonment. He was merely reduced in rank from colonel to captain. That's about all the penalty the court imposed on him for shooting a soldier without cause and for repeated drunkenness while on duty in time of war.

The verdict was a bad one if only because the offenses of which he was guilty by their very nature required far more severe punishment. He has proved himself wholly unfit for command. More particularly, the verdict will encourage a great many people to believe that military justice is tempered to officers of the regular establishment and operates in its full severity only against a man without rank and without friends in the military hierarchy.

Certainly there is less reason to show leniency to an officer who commits a crime while drunk and can't remember what happened, than to a private who presents a similar defense, but this court martial seemed to take the opposite view. Discipline and morale in the army will not be strengthened by the verdict. Further than that, a great many people—and not all of them Negroes—must be wondering today whether the defendant would have been punished so lightly if his victim had been a white boy instead of a Negro.

Selfridge Field Colonel Didn't Want Negro Driver

MAY 21 1943

BY ROBERT W. CRUMP

MT. CLEMENS, Mich. — (ANP) — The sweeping investigation by high ranking army officers and Cong. Paul Shafer, member of the house military affairs committee, into glaring irregularities at Selfridge Field, Michigan's largest air base and training field, is going forward at a rapid rate.

It has resulted into a complete shakeup of the entire officer personnel here. The investigation was launched following the shooting of a Negro private, William McRae, by Col. William T. Coleman, commanding officer of the field.

INADEQUATE QUARTERS

It is common knowledge here that Col. Colman did not like Negroes. He had given a standing order at the quartermaster depot that he was never to be sent a Negro chauffeur.

Shortly before 1 a. m., Wednesady, May 5, Col. Colman called the quartermaster department and asked that a car be sent to the administration building to take him to his home half a mile away.

An inexperienced private on duty as a dispatcher, unaware of Colman's standing order, dispatched Pvt. McRae, who was the only available driver. Col. Colman's regular chauffeur, John Henvad, was asleep.

Arriving at the administrative building, Pvt. McRae walked up the steps and met Col. Colman and his wife at the door.

"Your car is ready, sir," Pvt. McRae said.

SHOOTS WITHOUT WORD

Hardly had he uttered the words when the colonel drew his .38 calibre automatic and fired 3 shots in rapid succession into Pvt. McRae's abdomen. McRae fell, writhing to the steps. Col. Colman was placed under arrest immediately by the provost marshal.

Several weeks ago the 332nd Fighter group and the 96th Service group were moved into Selfridge field from Tuskegee. There are more than 100 Negro officers in the two outfits.

At the outset the officers' quarters were inadequate at the field, as the quarters for non-commissioned white officers were far better than those assigned to Negro commissioned officers, and while the men complained, nothing was ever done about it even though, according to some officers, there they were promised a monetary allowance in lieu of quarters.

Col. Colman, base commander at Selfridge, was said by some of the Negro officers to have been hardboiled. Restrictions, the men say, were clamped down on them as soon as they arrived.

While this does not account for the shooting of Pvt. McRae by Col. Colman, it serves to indicate that the Colonel was prejudiced. Col. Colman has been arrested and is being held for court martial. Not until the trial will the real motive for the shooting be made known, if then.

Delay Trial Of Colonel In Shooting

JUL 24 1943

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich. —(ANP)—It was learned this week that a general court martial scheduled to try several officers including a post commander who shot a Negro private here several weeks ago has been postponed upon the request of the post commander's attorneys under paragraph 52 of the manual for court martials.

The commanding officer here Col. William B. Wright, said that special orders detailing the court were signed by Brig. Gen. Adlai H. Gilkerson, acting commander of the third air force for Maj. Gen. St. Clair Street. Length of the continuance was not revealed.

To stand trial for the shooting of Pvt. William McRae, a chauffeur for the base motor pool, on the morning of May 5 is Col. William T. Colman who served as commander of the post from April 23, 1942, until May 5, 1943, when he was removed from his command.

McRae, 24, of Morven, N. C. is reported to be improving rapidly from his wounds at the Selfridge Field station hospital and is able to attend baseball games and visit his fellow soldiers of the 44th aviation squadron.

JUL 24 1943

Colonel Colman was sent to the Percy Jones General hospital at Battle Creek immediately after the gun play but was returned here on May 11 and has been restricted on the post ever since. Col. Wright revealed he will face other charges besides the McRae shooting.

Charges against other military personnel at Selfridge field for violation of the articles of war have resulted from an investigation conducted by the inspector general's office into alleged irregularities and misconduct on the post said Colonel Wright.

Investigation Of Selfridge Field Shooting Unauthorized Says Rep. May

MAY 29 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C., — Representative Andrew J. May, of Kentucky, chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, last Saturday said the investigation by Representative Paul W. Shafer, of ing public the report of his one-man investigation without committee sanction. He said the authority delegated to Shafer related only to an investigation "of the war effort and war contracts and not to a matter within the jurisdiction of a military court."

Responsibility for the shooting of Private McRae on May 5, at Selfridge Field, was placed last Friday at the door of the Inspector General's Office by Mr. Shafer.

Representative Shafer made his finding in a report which he submitted to the committee. He recommended:

MAY 29 1943

"That the Military Affairs Committee insist upon an early report on the progress of the War Department's inquiry, and that the alleged irregularities be proved or disproved promptly. If proved the committee should make certain that there shall be no 'whitewash' and that those found guilty are punished. I believe it is the duty of this committee to make certain that those responsible for the direction of our armed forces are above suspicion."

Representative Shafer's report said:

MAY 29 1943

"I definitely determined that the shooting of Private McRae by Col. William T. Colman, commanding officer, was in no way linked with alleged irregularities at Selfridge Field.

MAY 29 1943

"Private McRae had been assigned from a chauffeurs' pool at the post garage to drive Colonel Colman from the headquarters building to his own quraters. He had never before been called upon to serve as chauffeur for the colonel, and, so far as I could ascertain, he had never before had any direct contact with the colonel.

"It was established that Colonel Colman was under the influence of liquor when the shooting occurred. It was further established that for several weeks prior to the shooting Colonel Colman had been drinking to excess.

"Other actions indicated that he had been on the verge of a nervous breakdown, with the result that he was lax in the conduct of his duties at Selfridge Field. . . I found that this condition was well known throughout the post and to citizens of nearby cities."

Representative Shafer's report said that it was difficult to understand why the Inspector General's office had failed to recognize the situation, and added:

"I am confident that if the Inspector General's office had properly functioned, Colonel Colman would have been removed and hospitalized weeks ago, and the unprovoked and unexplained shooting of Private McRae would have been avoided."

WHITEWASH SUSPECTED IN KILLING OF PRIVATE

5-15-43

DETROIT----The alleged shooting of a Negro private at Selfridge Field near here last week by a white colonel, had its reverberations in Washington as the House Military Affairs Committee ordered the matter looked into without delay.

The private was William McRae, who according to a PV investigation died within 24 hours after Col. William T. Colman, until recently commander of Selfridge Field, shot him in cold blood without provocation. Officials at the field, however, declared that McRae is still living. Colman, who was replaced by Col. William B. Wright Jr, and who was described as having a "terrible temper," was removed to a hospital in Battle Creek where he is under observation.

SHOT WITHOUT WARNING

The story circulating among the soldiers here, PV learned, had it that Col. Colman ordered a car from the field's garage directing that he didn't want a "n--r" driver. When the car came for him chauffeured by McRae, he was infuriated and shot without warning.

In the meantime, Representative Paul Shafer (R., Mich.), ranking Republican member of the House Military Affairs Committee in Washington, requested an investigation into what threatens to be a major Army scandal despite the "hush-hush" that has been clamped on the incident by ranking Army officials.

"This matter smells to high heaven," Shafer said, "and I mean to get to the bottom of it."

He added that he suspected that the Army was attempting to whitewash the officer involved and suppress the scandal.

By JOHN R. WILLIAMS
(Staff Correspondent)

DETROIT, May 13—Shootings, deaths and scandals during the past week have focussed an unwelcome spotlight on Selfridge Field and have resulted in an investigation of conditions at the field, ordered by the Military Affairs committee of the House of Representatives.

The first shooting occurred early Wednesday morning, May 5, when Pvt. William McRae was shot twice in the abdomen by Col. William T. Coleman, then commanding officer of Selfridge Field.

PROWLER SHOT

The second shooting occurred early Friday morning, May 7, when William H. Hasse, ~~wealthy~~ 54-year-old resident of Grand Rapids, was shot by a colored sentry, Pvt. William Bridges.

The deaths occurred Saturday and Sunday, when 2nd Lts. Wilmeth Sidat-Singh and Jerome Thompson Edwards were reported lost after their planes had crashed in routine training flights.

The element of scandal entered the situation when Rep. Paul Shafer of Michigan charged before the Military Affairs committee that racketeers were selling permanent assignment to Selfride field for cash and that McRae was shot because he knew too much. The scandal was heightened when operatives of the Department of Justice arrested two white men, Hubert K. Marx and Charles Behrman, and by the fact that directly after the shooting of McRae, Col. Tayman's wife and their two children left for an unknown destination.

SHOT IN FRONT OF HEADQUARTERS

McRae, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Moses McRae, Morven, N. C., was inducted into the Army at Fort Bragg, August 25, 1941. He was transferred to Selfridge field December 24, 1941.

He was shot in front of base headquarters at one o'clock Wednesday morning. It is stated that Colonel Colman, 39-year-old native of Dunkirk, N.Y., had an express rule against the use of Negro chauffeurs. It is further reported that when he had ordered a car and a chauffeur, he had expected the man who usually drove for him—Pvt. John Hunvad, white—to report. But, according to reports circulated at the field, Hunvad refused to report and McRae was sent in his stead.

McRae is said to have been shot, without words or argument, as he started to alight from the automobile.

This is said to have caused speculation as to the relations between Hunvad and the Colmans.

COLONEL COLMAN UNDER ARREST

McRae, seriously wounded, was placed in the Station hospital on the post.

Colman, not wounded, but reportedly under the influence of liquor, was sent to the Percy Jones hospital at Battle Creek, 175 miles away. Mrs. Colman did no find him.

The Army reported that Col. Colman was under arrest and had been placed in the hospital "for observation."

Col. William B. Wright, former base commander at Barksdale Field, La., was appointed by the War Department to succeed Col. Colman.

The second shooting occurred at 4:30 Friday morning when two white men were caught attempting to enter the field by Sentry Bridges. Bridges claims that he ordered the men to stop and fired three warning shots. He then shot in earnest and wounded Hasse. The other man fled.

INVESTIGATORS ON SCENE

In pressing for an investigation by the House Military Affairs committee, Congressman Shafer asserted that alleged irregularities at Selfridge Field were "closely connected" with the shooting of McRae.

The congressman met a committee investigator in this city Sunday and proceeded to Battle Creek to question Col. Colman.

Mr. Shafer said his information indicated that the shooting was related with an alleged conspiracy "to sell permanent assignments to Selfridge Field."

"According to my information," Mr. Shafer said, "there has been some money paid to cover this thing up. It stinks to high heaven."

Shortly before Capt. Richard M. Ramey, public relations officer at Selfridge Field, announced that Col. Colman was under arrest, Hubert K. Marx and Charles Behrman were taken into Federal court here, charged with conspiracy to take money from draftees on promises to obtain permanent assignments for them to Selfridge Field

"I am convinced on the information which has reached me," Rep. Shafer told the press, "that the Army put Col. Colman in the hospital for mental observation in an effort to whitewash an unsavory mess."

The rumor still persists that Pvt. Willie McRae is dead. But such is not the case. Three weekly newspapers in nearby Detroit, three Detroit dailies and one in Mount Clemens, Mich., were invited to see for themselves. Four reporters appeared on May 30 and (as shown above) found Private McRae "getting along very well" in the Station Hospital at Selfridge Field, Mich. Private McRae, whose home is near Morven, N. C., was wounded on May 5 by a .38 pistol shot allegedly fired by Colonel William T. Colman, then the Selfridge Field Base commander. Shown interviewing McRae in above picture, the four newspapermen are, left to right: Edgar Racine, representing the Detroit Times and Detroit Free-Press; Russell Cowan, Michigan Chroncile; W. B. MacLachlin, Mount Clemens Monitor-Leader and representing the Detroit News; and Ulysses W. Boykin, Detroit Tribune. Lieutenant Colonel John H. King Jr., base surgeon, accompanied the visitors to McRae's room in the hospital.

TRIAL OF SELFRIDGE COMMANDER DELAYED

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

JUL 2 1943

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich. — (ANP) — It was learned this week that a general court martial scheduled to try several officers including a post commander who shot a Negro private here several weeks ago has been postponed upon the request of the post commander's attorneys under paragraph 52 of the manual for court martials.

The commnading officer here, Col. William B. Wright, said that special orders detailing the court were signed by Brig. Gen. Adlai H. Gilkerson, acting commander of the third air force for Maj. Gen. St. Clair Street. Length of the continuance was not revealed.

To stand trial for the shooting of Pvt. William McRae, a chauffeur for the base motor pool, on the morning of May 5 is Col. William T. Colman, who served as commander of the post from April 23, 1942, until May 5, 1943, when he was removed from his command.

McRae, 24, of Morven, N. C., is reported improving rapidly from his wounds at the Selfridge Field station hospital and is able to attend baseball games and visit his fellow soldiers of the 44th aviation squadron.

Col. Colman was sent to the Percy Jones General hospital at Battle Creek immediately after the gunplay but was returned here on May 11 and has been restricted on the post ever since. Col. Wright revealed he will face other charges besides the McRae shooting.

Charges against other military personnel at Selfridge Field for violation of the articles of war have resulted from an investigation conducted by the inspector general's office into alleged irregularities and misconduct on the post, said Col. Wright.

Officer Who Shot McRae Faces 29 Violations at Court Martial Hearing

Washington Tribune
Washington, D. C.

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich.—Court Martial proceedings opened here Monday, September 6, for the purpose of trying Col. William T. Colman on 9 specific violations of Army regulations. Chief among the charges which Col. Colman will have to face will be that of shooting Private William R. McRae, 24, a Colored soldier-chauffeur on May 5. The soldier has since recovered.

The defense asserted during their testimony that at the time Private McRae was shot the Colonel was suffering from amnesia and a psychoneurosis. The medical examiner and psychiatrist at the base hospital at Fox Field, Ala., Maj. Charles Horton, denied this contention, however, when he testified that he found no indication of mental disorder and no organic brain disorder when he conducted a three-day examination of the former commandant of the air base here last July.

Colonel Colman, who was relieved of his command when the shooting of Private McRae occurred, also faces a serious charge involving fraudulent methods in the transferring of Lieut. Benson Ford, grandson of Henry Ford to Selfridge Field. The Lieutenant was at the time stationed at Fort Custer.

Other charges which the Colonel faces include the accepting of a vacation lodge near Oscoda, Mich., Army airfield from a representative of the Alladin Co., of Bay City, whose two sons were transferred in 1942 to Selfride Field; four separate allegations of drunkenness; misappropriation of labor and services of Government employees on three occasions, and fraudulently procuring the enlistment of three men for service at Selfridge Field.

Claim Colonel Who Shot Private Is Negro-Hater

MAY 29 1943

By Robert W. Crump

MT. CLEMENS, Mich., (ANP) —The sweeping investigation by high ranking army officers and Congressman Paul Shafer, member of the house military affairs committee, into glaring irregularities at Selfridge field, Michigan's largest air base and training field which was climaxed by the wilful shooting of a Negro private by Col. William T. Colman, commanding officer of the field, goes forward at a rapid rate which has caused a complete shakeup of the entire officer personnel here.

Col. Colman who deliberately shot Pvt. William McRae, who was acting as chauffeur to the colonel, on the steps of the officers' headquarters, was, according to the general belief, premeditated, as it has been stated by soldiers on the ground and through the press as well that Col. Colman had repeatedly informed the man in charge at the transportation depot never to send him a Negro chauffeur.

But on the day of the shooting when no other man was available the Negro was detailed to drive the colonel's car. When the driver approached and announced that the car was ready, it is reported that Col. Colman drew his revolver and shot the driver three times.

Several weeks ago the 333nd Fighter group and the 96th Service group were moved into Selfridge Field from Tuskegee. There are more than 100 Negro officers in the two outfits. At the outset the officers' quarters were inadequate at the field, as the quarters for non-commissioned white officers were far better than those assigned to Negro commissioned officers, and while the men complained, nothing was ever done about it even though, according to some officers, they were promised a monetary allowance in lieu of quarters.

ARMY ORDERS INQUIRY AT SELFRIDGE FIELD

Col. Babcock to Head Investigation at Michigan Post

MAY 11 1943

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DETROIT, May 10—Army officers will conduct a separate investigation of conditions at Selfridge Field. Colonel Franklin Babcock of the inspector general's department in Washington and a staff of aides have been assigned to the task.

MAY 11 1943

The officers are expected to arrive at Selfridge Field within the next day or two to supplement the investigation begun by representative Paul Shafer of the House Military Affairs Committee.

The investigations center around charges of irregularity in administration of the field, together with charges of favoritism shown enlisted men.

Mr. Shafer today questioned Lieut. Col. Charles G. White concerning unusual liberties granted to Master Sergeant Myron Collins, formerly stationed at the field. Sergeant Collins last week was returned to Selfridge from Tampa, Fla., for questioning.

Mr. Shafer reported that on his arrival at the field Sergeant Collins was ordered under arrest by the inspector general's office, but later was given an extended leave by Colonel White. He was found in a Detroit hotel and today was returned to the field and held under arrest. According to Mr. Shafer, Colonel White admitted having been entertained on the non-commissioned officer's yacht last Summer.

Mr. Shafer said that he believed that Sergeant Collins might be a key figure in the alleged favoritism by which assignment of draftees to the field had been arranged.

MAY 8 1943

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich., May 7 (AP)—A second shooting, the wounding of a civilian by a sentry, occurred at Selfridge Field today, less than twenty-four hours after the disclosure that the former commanding officer of this Army air base, Colonel William T. Colman, had been arrested following the wounding of a Negro private.

Captain Richard Ramey, public relations officer at the base, said today's shooting occurred at 4 A. M., when Private William Bridges of Montclair, N. J., fired a shot into the chest of a civilian who had ignored three challenges and three warning shots.

The wounded civilian was identified as William H. Hasse, 54, whose last known address was Grand Rapids, Mich. His condition at the Army base hospital here was reported as "fair."

MAY 8 1943

Captain Ramey said Private Bridges reported that Hasse and another civilian apparently climbed over a fence on the south side of Selfridge Field, that when challenged neither of the men answered but continued to advance toward the sentry, who fired three warning shots before taking aim at one of the intruders.

MAY 8 1943

When Hasse was shot in the chest near the heart by the sentry's bullet, Captain Ramey said he was told, the other civilian escaped in the darkness.

Selfridge Field Probe Reports Are Contradictory

MAY 11 1943

Detroit, May 10 (AP).—Representative Paul W. Shafer (Republican) of Michigan proceeded today with his investigation at Selfridge Field Army Air Base after observing that he had received "amazingly different" accounts from officers already questioned.

MAY 11 1943

Shafer's investigation for the House Military Affairs Committee was authorized after the wounding of a Selfridge Field private May 3 and the subsequent detention of Col. William T. Colman. Colonel Colman was relieved of command of the base.

The Congressman declined to make known the details of initial questioning of officers except to say that they concerned "various irregularities on the post."

U. S. District Attorney John C. Lehr has said he would ask indictments against a number of Detroit area civilians for attempting to bribe Government officials into favoring inductees with assignments to Selfridge so they would be close to home.

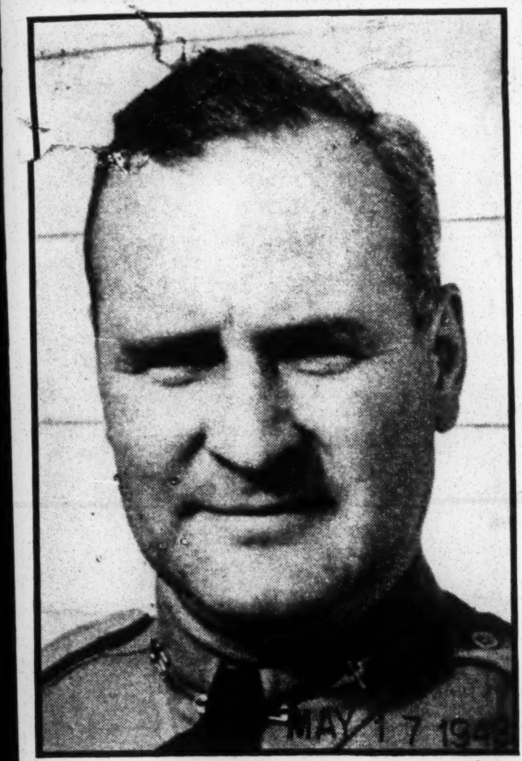
Scandal at Selfridge

MAY 17 1943

For months past, rumors of military misdoings had been piling up around Selfridge Field, Mich. Griping and gossip centered on ugly stories of unsoldierly behavior, favoritism, trading in promotions and bombproof jobs. Then came the most fantastic rumor of all: that the commande of the field, a full colonel, had been arrested for shooting a Negro private.



MAY 17 1943

Acme

SELFRIDGE'S COLMAN
Fantastic rumors came to a boil.

After 25 hours of dismayed silence, Army authorities issued a tight-lipped statement. That rumor, at any rate, was no fantasy. Private William McRae, a chauffeur, had indeed been shot and seriously wounded; Colonel William T. Colman, 39, commander at Selfridge, was under arrest and observation at a Battle Creek hospital.

The Colonel Fires. Unofficial details pieced out the story. Apparently Colonel Colman had called just before 1 a.m. for a car to take him home. His regular driver was off duty; by an unlucky happenstance, the new dispatcher did not know of Colman's standing order that no Negro soldier should drive his car. At headquarters, said eyewitnesses, McRae reported: "Your car is ready, sir." Colman drew his service pistol and fired.

A board of Army officers began an investigation of the case, and in Washington the House Military Affairs Committee prepared to conduct an inquiry of its own. That made three agencies stirring the Selfridge stew; last month the FBI arrested two Wayne County constables, charged them with getting $200 from a Detroit draftee on the promise that friends of theirs at Selfridge could fix him up with a safe, soft berth for the duration.

A Congressman Inquires. Representative Paul W. Shafer (R., Mich.) stormed that the Selfridge situation "smelled to high heaven" and vowed to get to the bottom of it; he hinted that McRae might have been shot for learning of some irregularity. In Detroit U.S. Attorney John C. Lehr said he would ask indictment of at least 50 civilians involved in efforts to bribe Selfridge officials.

Other reports that will have to be scanned:

MAY 17 1943

- ▶ That the field, once one of the Air Forces' proudest posts has been a paradise for apple-polishing noncoms who openly bartered favors, flouted regulations, overrode the authority of commissioned officers.
- ▶ That certain officials have accepted substantial gifts of property and real estate from the families of soldiers who were "rescued" from overseas duty.
- ▶ That a sergeant who was in on the fixing acquired a new car and speedboat.
- ▶ That civilians were enlisted at the field and promoted rapidly without ever taking basic military training.

Two nights after the McRae shooting, Selfridge had more gunplay. A sentry discovered two civilians scaling a fence into the field and fired on them when they ignored his command to halt. One escaped in the dark; the other, seriously wounded, was identified as a former Detroit salesman. The Selfridge pot had come to a boil.

WASHINGTON, D. C.— Scandal looms in Army circles as the result of the shooting by Col. W. T. Colman of Selfridge Field, Mich., of his chauffeur, a colored private, William McCrae. The wounding of the soldier is being investigated in connection with the alleged sale of permanent assignments at Selfridge Field, at the request of Rep. Paul Shafer of Michigan.

Col. Coleman was arrested for firing on the soldier but is now in Percy Jones Hospital at Battle Creek, Mich., for observation.

"This matter smells to high heaven," said Representative Shafer, "and I mean to get to the bottom of it. I suspect the army is trying to whitewash the officer involved and suppress a scandal."

Shortly before the announcement of Col. Coleman's arrest, two men, Hubert K. Marx and Charles Behrman, were taken into federal court at Detroit, Mich., charged with conspiracy to take money from draftees on promises to obtain permanent assignments for them to Selfridge Field.

"My information is that the shooting and the arraignment of the two men are related," said Representative Shafer. "I have asked that the committee look into reliable reports which have reached me that Colonel Colman was connected with the two men who were soliciting money on promises to deliver permanent jobs at Selfridge Field and that the colored chauffeur was shot because he knew too much.

What's Wrong At Selfridge Field?

Pittsburgh Courier

EDITOR'S NOTE—The following letter was received May 1 by The Pittsburgh Courier. I had been decided not to publish it. But incidents at Selfridge Field during the past week have given it a special significance.

Pittsburgh Pa. MAY 15 1943

DEAR EDITOR:

As soldiers of the armed forces of the United States, we the undersigned, wish to acquaint you with an ugly situation occurring here at Selfridge Field yesterday (April 14). Realizing that good behavior as well as morale is essential, especially in camps where both whites and Negroes are stationed, we, the undersigned, have reason to believe that the situation we are about to explain to you was purposely plotted, and if carried through would seriously damage the good record and prestige that we Negroes have gained and maintained on this field in relation with whites.

In one of the buildings where all troops are served beer, members almost wholly composed of a certain unit on this field (Negro), had been drinking beer. Nothing unusual had been noticed until suddenly two colored soldiers were thrown bodily from the building by another colored soldier. At this precise moment, two white photographers took pictures of this action. Immediately after this incident, all three colored soldiers concerned in this so-called "brawl" were back inside joking as if nothing had happened.

We asked the photographers if the pictures they had taken were to be published. Just then one of the members of this certain group stepped in and requested that we mind our own business. During this horse play a white officer was present and we also have reason to believe that this officer was in charge of this certain group.

Now, it seems to us that this situation was, for some reason, purposely instigated wherein if said photos were published in any nationally circulated paper or magazine, would no doubt carry an ugly story, relating falsely how the Negroes were acting at Selfridge Field. We could not gain any satisfactory reason from the white photographers, and are taking the liberty to write you in case worse comes to worse you may have a true picture of just what happened, knowing you will act in our behalf and for the welfare of the Negro soldier as a whole in easing any unfavorable situation which might disturb the peaceful relations that have existed at this base.

This letter is written in good will with the purpose in mind that no stone should be left unturned in protecting the peaceful relations of the United States armed forces between the two races.

Col. Colman's Light Sentence under Criticism

House Group Plans Probe of "Inadequate" Court-Martial

CLEARED IN PVT. McRAE SHOOTING

White Press Joins Critics in Hinting Racial Injustice

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich. (ANP)—A court-martial's virtual exoneration of Col. W. T. Colman in the shooting of Pvt. Willie McRae has aroused nation-wide protests and threats of a Congressional investigation.

Colman was convicted on only five of the twenty-eight counts on which he faced trial. These were careless use of firearms and drunkenness on four occasions.

The reference to "conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman" was removed from these charges and his punishment was fixed at reduction from his temporary rank of colonel to his permanent rank of captain.

Dismissal Averted

Consideration of a full-scale investigation of the court-martial proceedings, in the event the War Department fails to reopen the case, was announced in Washington Saturday by Rep. Andrew J. May (Dem., Ky.), chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee.

"Disgustingly Inadequate"

Rep. Paul W. Shafer (Rep., Mich.), a member of that committee, joined the demand for an investigation, terming the verdict "disgustingly inadequate."

"I wonder what this court-martial would have done," he asked, "if a drunken private shot his commanding officer?"

Cases Contrasted

Similar uneasiness is being expressed by other observers, noting the contrast with the sentences of five, seven and fifteen years given nine soldiers for random shooting in the town of Duck Hill, Miss., in which no one was injured.

The Chicago Sun, Marshall Field's new daily, said editorially:

"The court-martial . . . has done a grevious injury to the good name of the armed services, to the cause of interracial harmony, and to simple justice.

Distrust Encouraged

"Two questions emerge from this exhibition of military jurisprudence. First, if getting drunk on duty and shooting a private is not conduct "unbecoming an officer," what kind of standards prevail in the United States Army? Second, what is the purpose of a court-martial — to apply the disciplines of strict accountability, or to surround an officer with a protective cordon of fellow officers?

"Civilians will be reluctant to believe that the Colman case represents a fair expression of army attitudes toward official misconduct. Their faith can be confirmed in only one way—by executive action to set aside a pusillanimous verdict and bring Col. Colman to justice. The responsibility goes straight to Secretary Stimson and the President."

The Chicago Tribune's editorial on the case called attention to the fact that Colman was not dismissed in disgrace from the army and was not sentenced to a term of imprisonment. It continued:

"The verdict was a bad one if only because the offenses of which he was guilty by their very nature required far more severe punishment. He has proved himself wholly unfit for command.

Racial Angle Hinted

"More particularly, the verdict will encourage a great many people to believe that military justice is tempered to officers of the regular establishment and operates in its full severity only against a man without rank and without friends in the military hierarchy.

"Discipline and morale in the army will not be strengthened by the verdict. Further than that, a great many people—and not all of them colored—must be wondering today whether the defendant would have been punished so lightly if his victim had been a white boy instead of colored."

Prejudices Revealed

Col. Colman, 39 and then commanding officer of the army air base here, shot Pvt. McRae on the night of May 14 when the latter called, under orders, to pick him up in an army jeep.

Testimony from witnesses revealed that Colman harbored racial prejudices that influenced many of his actions. He was reported to have said he would not have colored chauffeur and resented McRae's appearance at the post command to drive his automobile.

He was acquitted of charges which included misappropriation of government property, accepting a summer lodge from a government contractor, and illegal transfer of soldiers to Selfridge Field.

Findings of the court-martial are subject to review by the War Department, and the sentence will not take effect until finally approved.

Army May Drop Colman From List

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson disclosed yesterday that Capt. William T. Colman, former commanding officer at Selfridge Field, Mich., found guilty of drunkeness by a court martial, has appeared before a reclassification board which will determine whether he will be removed from the Army active list.

Stimson, who said the proceedings have not yet been completed, ordered a review of the case after several Congressmen criticized the court-martial verdict as too light. The trial reduced Colman from the rank of colonel to captain. He was also found guilty of the careless shooting of a Negro soldier.

COMMAND

Selfridge Justice

As the courts-martial sitting on the Selfridge Field cases worked down the defendants in rank, sentences rose in severity. The commanding colonel, William T. Colman got off lightest: demotion to captain (TIME, Sept. 27) for drunkenness and careless use of firearms in shooting a Negro private. A lieutenant colonel found guilty of drunkenness and fraudulent transfer of soldiers was ordered dismissed from the service. A major and a warrant officer were also sentenced to dismissal.

By last week the unsavory cases at the Michigan air base were concluded. The court ordered a dishonorable discharge for Master Sergeant Myron B. Collins. The charge: accepting bribes for his "influence and action" on improper enlistments and transfers. He also got prison time: 18 months' confinement at hard labor.

Collins, 37, eleven years an enlisted man, had testified against his superiors in the previous cases. Said he ruefully when he heard the sentence: "Wasn't that a dandy?"

Sirs:

. . . The court-martial of William T. Colman [TIME, Sept. 27] . . . was an inexcusable travesty on justice and decency.

Instead of being dishonorably discharged as he deserves, his demotion from colonelcy to captaincy still places him in a responsible position commanding men. . . .

Stimson Asks Quick Action On Col. Colman

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30 (ANP)—Secretary of War Stimson told his press-radio conference Thursday that he has asked that the record in the case of Lieut. Col. William T. Colman, court-martialed commander of Selfridge field, Mich., be "expedited."

In directing Col. Coleman's reduction in rank, the court-martial of eight colonels and one lieutenant-colonel ordered that he be placed at the foot of the list of captains, not to be promoted for three years.

The verdict was announced just six hours after the court began deliberation of more than a week of testimony. It is subject to review by the War Department in Washington and the sentence will not take effect until finally approved.

In all the government presented 23 charges against Col. Colman. He pleaded innocent on all of them and at the opening of the trial sought their dismissal on the ground he had been suf-

is that the record in each general court-martial trial is reviewed first by the authority that appointed the court, which in this case was the commanding general of the First Air Force," Stimson declared. "Finally it is reviewed in Washington in the office of the judge advocate general of the War Department.

CONGRESSMEN THREATEN PROBE

"That record has not reached here yet, but I am taking steps to expedite is coming, in this case."

Both Representatives O'Toole and Shafer have been prodding the War Department through threats of a congressional investigation to determine why a stiffer penalty had not been handed to Colman other than demoting him to a captaincy.

May Dismiss Col. Colman From Army

Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson hinted this week that Colonel William T. Colman, recently court-martialed at Selfridge Field, Mich., on charges of careless use of a pistol and drunkenness, would be dismissed from the Army.

In a statement to the press, the Secretary said he had been informed of the charges against Col. Colman and had read the sentence pronounced by the court-martial, and stated that he had gone further into the records because the charges and the verdict attracted his attention.

"In view of the fact that he was found guilty of careless use of a pistol, as a result of which a soldier of the United States Army was injured, and that he was found guilty of drunkenness on four counts, I went further into the record of this officer.

"Apart from the trial and as a result of this record, I directed that the then Col. Colman be reduced immediately from the grade of colonel to that of captain. I have directed also that proceedings be instituted under public law 190, Seventy-seventh Congress, under which, if the proper board so determines, Captain Colman may be removed from the active list of the Army."

Since the trial of Col. Colman, the Selfridge Field court-martial has tried and convicted five subordinates of the colonel. All of those convicted were dismissed from the Army, and the last one, Master Sergt. Myron B. Collins, sentenced to 18 months at hard labor, following conviction on seven counts of misconduct.

Colonel Colman faced twenty-three charges, but was cleared of all except the careless use of his revolver and four cases of drunkenness. He was not dismissed from the Army but merely reduced from a temporary rank of Lieutenant Colonel to his permanent rank of a captain.

Members of Congress and others sent up an immediate protest and urged the Secretary of War to review the court-martial proceedings.

WASHINGTON — Capt. Colman former colonel in command at Selfridge Field, Mich, who was convicted by courtmartial on charges of drunkenness and careless use of fire arms in shooting a Negro soldier, is nearer to being removed from the Army's active list.

Secretary of War Stimson told his press conference last week that Colman has already appeared before a special board as ordered by him under authority of a public law. The proceedings, however, are not yet complete.

Stimson had previously said he would order Colman's retirement from active service if report of the special board indicated such action appropriate

Meanwhile, Rep. Paul W. Shafer (R., Mich.) renewed his demand for a transcript of the war department investigation and court martial proceedings against Colman. Shafer is conducting an independent investigation of the case for the house military affairs committee.

Other Counts Dismissed

Colman formerly was commanding officer of the army air base at Selfridge field, Mich. He was reduced to a captaincy after being found guilty at a court martial Sept. 14 on four charges of drunkenness and a charge of wounding his Negro soldier chauffeur by the careless use of a pistol.

The court martial acquitted the officer, however, on 23 other counts, including one of shooting the soldier, Pvt. Willie McRae, with intent to do him bodily harm.

Col. Colman, Convicted, His Rank Reduced

Ousted Commander of Selfridge Field Demoted to Captain

UNPROMOTABLE FOR THREE-YEAR PERIOD

Convicted on 4 of 29 Counts, Including Shooting of Soldier

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich.—An Army court martial on Tuesday convicted Colonel William T. Colman, ousted commander of Selfridge Field, of four violations of the Ninety-sixth Article of War and ordered him reduced to his permanent rank of captain.

lonel Hemper Huston of Signal Corps Headquarters, Tampa, Fla., read the sentence as Colman stood before the nine colonels who had deliberated four hours before reaching a verdict.

At Foot of the List

Huston said the court ordered Colman placed "at the foot" of the list of captains for three years and suspended from all temporary promotions for a "like period."

Although the court convicted Colman of four violations of the Ninety-sixth Article of War—"disorders and neglects to the prejudice of good order and military discipline," it acquitted him of twenty-five additional counts, including the felonious shooting last May 5 of Pvt. William McRae, a soldier at the air base.

Colman, however, was found guilty of discharging a pistol "through carelessness" which wounded McRae and touched off the investigation and court martial. The deposed commander testified that his mind was "a blank" when he shot McRae.

Convicted of Drunkeness

Colman also was convicted of three charges of being drunk and disorderly, but acquitted of allegations that he misused Government property and arranged the transfer to Selfridge Field of twelve soldiers, including Private (now Lieutenant) Benson Ford, grandson of Henry Ford.

The first indication that the 39-year-old Army officer had been found guilty came shortly after lunch when the court martial was reopened and the officers called for a copy of Colman's military record to determine his punishment.

Soldier Describes Details of Shooting At Selfridge Field

McRae and two other privates, one a sentry on duty at the field headquarters, described the commanding officer as "unsteady and under the influence of liquor."

Speech Irregular

Norman J. Nyland, the sentry, said:

"He asked me to get his cap. His speech was irregular. I pointed out to him that the cap was sticking out of his pocket."

McRae, in describing the shooting, said he had responded to a call for a chauffeur. Colonel Colman, he said told him to come and get his 4-year-old son, Harner Colman, from the Colman car.

As he reached the car door, McRae said, Colman suddenly cursed.

"Then he turned around and shot," the witness testified.

"I whirled around and circled around the flag pole. As I was making the circle he fired a second shot. I came back between two cars and said, "take me to the hospital."

Held Sane

Maj. Charles B. Horton, medical examiner and psychiatrist at the base hospital at Fox Field, Alabama, testified he had conducted a three-day examination of Colonel Colman last July after he had been relieved of his command. He said he found no indication of mental disorder and no organic brain disorder.

A defense witness had testified that Colman was suffering from amnesia and a psycho-neurosis at the time of the shooting.

Major Horton said that in his opinion Colman's mental disturbances were the result of alcoholic intoxication rather than mental collapse.

Colonel's Trial Set For Shooting

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich. (ANP)—Col. William T. Colman, 39, former commanding officer of Selfridge field here, was ordered to stand trial September 6 on charges growing out of his shooting and seriously wounding of his chauffeur, Pvt. William McRae, 24, of Morven, N. C., last May 8, according to Capt. Richard M. Ramsey, air corps public relations officer.

Colman who had been in charge of the air base here since April 23, 1942, shot the soldier during an altercation over his discovery that the commander allegedly permitted irregularities to exist on the military reservation. McRae has recovered from his wounds and is reportedly reassigned.

Order New Proceedings In Selfridge Field Decision

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

Colman May Be Removed From Active List

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — When Rep. Paul W. Shafer (R., Mich.) described the sentence of Capt. William T. Colman, former commanding officer of the army air base at Selfridge Field, Mich., as "disgustingly inadequate," Sec. of War Henry L. Stimson ordered additional proceedings in the case. The additional proceedings, Stimson said, could result in Colman's removal from the army's active list.

Capt. Colman, whose rank was reduced from that of colonel following a recent court martialing, was convicted of drunkeness and careless use of a pistol in the shooting of his Negro chauffeur. He was acquitted of 23 other charges, including illegal transfer of soldiers and misappropriation of government property.

One of three Selfridge field officers convicted within two weeks, Colman received the lightest punishment. His aide, Lt. Col. Charles G. White was ordered dismissed from the service as was Maj. Geo. A. Hartford, former intelligence officer at the base.

If the proper board so determines the additional proceedings ordered by Stimson could result in Colman removal from the army's active list, according to public law 190.

This law permits the secretary to remove from the active list any army officer "whose performance of duty, or general eficiency, compared with other officers of the same grade and length of service is such as to warrant such action, or whose retention on the active list is not justified for other good and sufficient reasons appearing to the satisfaction of the secretary of war."

Such an action as described above could take place only after a hearing before a board of at least five general oficers; the officer would then be dishonorably discharged if he had completed less than seven years of comissioned service, and his retirement with pay computed on his rank and length of record if he had served more than seven years.

Since Colman entered the army as a flying cadet in 1928, he has had 15 years of service and would received retirement pay, if removed. However, if retired as a captain, he would receive only $1,125 a year, as compared with a total of pay and allowances as a colonel of $6,984 or $9,484 if he were on flying duty.

After Colman's conviction on Sept. 14, Rep. Paul W. Shafer called the sentence "disgustingly inadequate, and then announced that he was reopening his probe of allegedly wholesale irregularities at Selfridge field because he believed the war department had failed to get to the bottom of things.

COLONEL'S TRIAL BY ARMY COURT DRAWS NEAR END

Nine Officers Will Hear Final Pleas Today.

BY CARL WIEGMAN.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Selfridge Field, Mich., Sept. 13.—Col. William T. Colman's fight to continue wearing the uniform of the United States army neared a close here today at his trial before a general court-martial.

Arguments will be heard tomorrow by the court of nine colonels, who then will ballot, in closed session, to determine whether to acquit or convict Colman on the 28 charges.

He is accused of shooting and wounding Pvt. Willie McRae, a Negro chauffeur, of drunkenness, of fraudulent transfers of enlisted men, and of misappropriating government property.

Two-thirds Vote Required.

Agreement by two-thirds of the court, or six members, is necessary to determine guilt on each charge. If the verdict is not guilty, it will be announced immediately. If the verdict is one of guilty, the court will be closed again and votes on the sentence will be taken.

Several of the charges have been brought under the 95th article of war—conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. Conviction under this charge carries the penalty of dismissal from service.

Col. Colman was on the witness stand during most of today's session, continuing his testimony, begun yesterday, in defense of his conduct.

Explains Army Transfers.

During the morning sesssion Colman gave his explanation of the transfer of Benson Ford, grandson of Henry Ford, and other soldiers to Selfridge field.

Colman said he first met young Ford at the Ford company's Willow Run plant, near Detroit. The meeting took place in the office of Harry Bennett, personnel director of the Ford company. In the room were Charles A. Lindbergh, now a technical adviser for Ford, and several test pilots, Colman said.

"Bennett advised me the war department had O. K.'d the transfer of Ford from Fort Custer to this field," he continued. "I believe I had to have the approval of Washington, and they intimated they had talked to Washington and would take care of it thru the 6th service command in Chicago.

Request Termed Normal.

"Then I telephoned Col. Thomas Lanphier [air forces intelligence officer in Washington] and it was made clear to me that I was to go ahead. The request for Ford's transfer here was made in the normal way."

On cross-examination by Capt. W. Stanley Dolan, assistant prosecutor, Colman was asked whether Ford's transfer was made for the convenience of the government, as regulations prescribe.

"Yes," said Colman. "It was a great convenience to the government to have people see Ford on the street in a private's uniform and to see him out here jumping hurdles."

Davison Advice Described.

The defense presented a deposition taken in Washington from Col. Lanphier, who testified he had taken up the matter of Ford's enlistment with Col. F. Trubee Davison, then chief of the personnel section. Lanphier said Davison directed him to advise Ford to apply to his draft board for voluntary enlistment, then get in touch with the commanding officer of the nearest air field and have him request transfer to the field after his induction.

Another deposition from Lt. Col. Glenn B. Arnold of the signal corps, Lansing, Mich., said Ford previously sought to get into both the army and the navy and had been rejected because of poor eyesight. Arnold said Ford's case had not been handled differently from that of any other American citizen.

It previously had been brought out that Ford went from Selfridge field to San Francisco, Cal., then to an officers' training school, and now is a second lieutenant at the Detroit induction station.

Short of Men, Says Colman.

Defense counsel also put Col. Colman on the stand to answer other charges of fraudulent transfers. Colman said requests for these transfers were made by members of his staff at his direction after he had been told the men would be useful at Selfridge field.

"I always was short of men with specialized training," he said. "I grabbed them in every direction.

"But I never said to members of the staff, 'Get that man.' I always said, 'See if you can get that man,' meaning see if you can get him under proper regulations."

SELFRIDGE FIELD SCANDAL!

Union
Cincinnati, Ohio

(St. Louis Post Dispatch)

Why has there been such a flagrant miscarriage of military justice at Selfridge Field? Why was Col. William T. Colman, convicted by a general court-martial of careless use of firearms and on four counts of drunkenness, punished only with demotion to the rank of captain, ineligible to promotion for three years? Why was the former commandant of a large army air base, who gave a shabby "everything went black" excuse for the shooting and wounding of Private William McRae, Negro chauffeur, acquitted of the charge of assault with intent to do bodily harm?

Colman first [illegible] charges of violation of 29 Articles of War, including misappropriation of government property, fraudently obtaining transfers of enlisted personnel, accepting a gift from a government contractor, and conduct "unbecoming an officer and a gentleman." The court denied his motion for dismissal on the protest that he had been suffering from a mental disorder, proceeded with what appeared to be patent attempts to whitewash the offender. The whole case reeks with the strictured justice of L'affaire Dreyfus in reverse.

If there is ever a time when the army cannot risk toppled prestige at home, this is it. If there is ever a time when the personal, parental and proud feelings with which United States citizens regard their fighting arm cannot be placed in jeopardy, that time is now. Ours is a civilian army, not a force of medieval mercenaries. Its officers must—and have done so until now—maintain an antiseptic respectability to hold the public confidence.

The Selfridge Field case is not closed. The court-martial verdict is not effective until approved by the war department. Surely this scandalous blot on an otherwise soldierly wartime shield will be erased, and justice done, when the proceedings are reviewed in Washington.

MICHIGAN REPRESENTATIVE TO MAKE INVESTIGATION OF TRIAL

The Plaindealer
Kansas City, Kan.

Selfridge Field, Mich., Sept. 24. (ANP)—While Rep. Paul W. Shafer, (R. Mich.) denounced the army court martial action in the case of Col. W. T. Colman as "disgustingly inadequate" and announced his intention of conducting his own investigation of Selfridge Field irregularities unless the army makes further inquiry, Negro and white citizens throughout the country were comparing the light penalty given the officer for shooting Pvt. Willie McRae, and the severe punishment meted out to nine soldiers accused of firing on the town of Duck Hill, Miss.

Col. Colman, commanding officer of Selfridge Field, [illegible] for the McRae shooting and irregularities at the army post, was reduced to the rank of captain by a court martial last week composed of nine colonels. He was found guilty of five charges and acquitted of 23 other counts, which caused Shafer to ask, what kind of faith the people can be expected to have in the military when "that kind of a sentence is dealt to an officer who has shot a private under his command."

Testimony from witnesses revealed that Colman harbored racial prejudices that influenced many of his actions. He was reported to have said he would not have a Negro chauffeur and resented McRae's appearance at the post command to drive his automobile. Orders were issued by the commander to his aides to never assign a Negro to his detail.

The soldiers accused of the Duck Hill shooting, in which no one was injured, with two exceptions, were from southern states and attached to the 476th quartermaster truck regiment. They drew sentences at hard labor ranging from five to 15 years in federal and military prisons. Those sentenced were Cpl. Larus Steele, Pvts. James Harris and Elijah Outlaw, who drew 15 year terms, Pvt. Leroy Dorsey of Miss., sentneced to seven years, and Pvt. C. Wells, of Georgia, who drew a term of five years.

Colman was acquitted on a charge of shooting McRae with intent to do him bodily harm, but was found guilty of wounding him while carelessly discharging a revolver. Two of these charges originally containing the accusation of "conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman" were amended by the court to remove those words. Colman was thus saved from dismissal from service under the 95th article of war which requires such action upon conviction.

The commanding officer was acquitted of all other charges which included misappropriation of government property, accepting a summer lodge from a government contractor, and illegal transfer of soldiers to Selfridge Field. Under court decision Colman was also reduced from his temporary rank of colonel to his permanent rank of captain and placed at the bottom of the promotion list. Army regulations require that he remain there for the next three years before he can be eligible for elevation.

are subject to review by higher authorities who may decrease but not increase the penalty.

Presenting the closing argument for the defense Maj. Tom Ballantine of Louisville, chief defense counsel, said that in the accusations against his client "there was no bad faith, no willful wrong doing shown. In all $8,000,000 was spent here in improving this post, and we have been hearing about the removal from the field of six army bedsteads."

Col. Phillip D. O'Connell, trial judge advocate (prosecutor) expressed sympathy for the man he was [illegible] bound to present evidence against. He said: "We all have a strain of sympathy for the defendant. The unsung heroes of this war have been men like him, the base commanders whose work was complicated by developments after Pearl Harbor. But if an army private takes a jeep without permission and goes into town he is likely to get three months' imprisonment. There should be no difference in the attitude in a case of this wind."

Colman was jubilant at the verdict and eagerly accepted the congratulations of fellow officers. O'Connell and his assistant, Capt W. Stanley Dolan, however, expressed astonishment at the decision, but under the rules of the court refused to comment. Outside court Colman said: "There are lots of captains in the army. I'll go right along with them."

The court heard almost 100 witnesses during the nine days of the trial and studied the evidence in a closed session for three hours before reporting its decision.

Colman's Court

SEP 27 1943

The Air Forces court-martial of Colonel William T. Colman (TIME, Sept. 13), one-time commander of Selfridge Field, Mich., handed down its verdict. Charged with shooting a Negro private at the field, the defendant was found guilty of "careless use of firearms." Charged with four instances of drunkenness on duty, he was convicted of "conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline." The court's sentence: reduction to the rank of captain, with promotion barred for three years.

Crime? The court had rejected the stiffer formula of "conduct unbecoming an officer and gentleman" which would have cashiered Colonel Colman. It acquitted him altogether of 23 violations of the Articles of War, involving various charges of illegally transferring soldiers, accepting gifts from favor-seeking civilians, making away with government property.

Trial observers found the verdict all the stranger because the defense against the shooting charge had taken a clear line that Colonel Colman was mentally irresponsible at the time—indicating that he probably hoped to be let off with a medical discharge from the Army. As it was, the sentence merely canceled his temporary colonelcy. It left him a U.S. officer, plainly implied that he was still fit to command.

Punishment? Public indignation bubbled up in Detroit. Congressman Paul W. Shafer called the verdict a "farce," a "travesty" and "disgustingly inadequate." The Detroit Free Press called it a "whitewash" and "an insult to the fighting forces." The Detroit Times said "it will smell to heaven," and went back 131 years to find a local parallel of military shame when "the coward Hull surrendered Detroit to the British without even swinging a punch."

Under Army legal procedure the court's findings must be reviewed by higher military authorities, who can reverse the convictions or lighten the sentence, but cannot increase it. This week Lieut. Colonel Charles G. White, Colonel Colman's former executive officer at Selfridge, was on trial

The government presented 28 charges against Colonel Colman. He pleaded innocent and sought their dismissal on the ground he had been suffering from a mental disorder. The court denied his motion.

The major charge against Colonel Colman was the shooting and wounding of Pvt. William R. McRae, Negro chauffeur, at the base here last May 5. Colonel's Scalp Demanded by Men

Believe His Dishonorable Discharge Only Action To Restore Morale

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich.—Dismissal from the service of William T. Colman, former commandant of this air base, who was reduced in rank following a court-martial last month would have little effect on the morale of Negro service men unless his dismissal came as a dishonorable discharge.

This opinion was expressed by both enlisted men and officers whose morale received a momentary boost with the arrival of Lt.-Col. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., who became executive officer of the 332nd Fighter Group last week. Though obviously please with the arrival of the new Fighter group officer, and also impressed by the interest in their welfare shown by Brig. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis Sr., Negroes here still seemed rankled by the whitewash of Colman who shot Private William R. McRae last May 5, and was subsequently convicted for "careless use of firearms," and reduced to the rank of a captain.

One officer, voluntarily discussing the case, said that most of the men in his outfit had refused to become "excited" over Secretary of War Stimson's announcement that Colman may be dismissed from the service. In view of the sentencing of other Selfridge Field officers, one of whom was dishonorably discharged for a lesser crime than that with which Colman was charged, this officer said that only Colman's dishonorable discharge, or imprisonment, or both, would restore the Negro serviceman's faith in the war department.

Such an opinion, he said, had been expressed to Brig. Gen. Davis who was believed to have been sent to Selfridge Field to get a clear picture of the servicemen's reaction to the Colman verdict.

Stimson spoke out on the Colman verdict after newspapers throughout the country had focused attention on the findings of the court-martial and Rep. Paul W. Shafer began an investigation of conditions at Selfridge Field to obtain facts in connection with the court-martial.

Amnesia Attack Before Shooting Told.

BY CARL WIEGMAN.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Selfridge Field, Mich., Sept. 6.—A court of stern faced fellow officers today heard Col. William T. Colman, former commanding officer of Selfridge field, start a fight to save his career by pleading that he was mentally ill May 5 when he shot and wounded a Negro soldier.

At the end of the day's session the nine colonels who compose the general's court martial had heard testimony from three psychiatrists that the former commander of the army air base was afflicted with frequent headaches, [illegible] before the eyes, ringing in the ears, dizziness, and was mentally irresponsible at the time of the shooting.

The court was told his condition was so bad that he had difficulty in taking off and landing the $100,000 airplanes at the field and sometimes, while in flight, he had a frantic obsession that he must get out of the plane.

Amnesia Attack Reported.

The mental specialists also testified that for five hours before the shooting Col. Coleman was in a state of amnesia during which he had no consciousness of what he was doing.

During cross-examination of one witness, Lt. Col. Charles R. Rayburn of the medical corps, by Capt. W. Stanley Dolan, the assistant trial judge advocate, Dolan asked: "Wouldn't a person be in a state of amnesia if he had drunk nearly a fifth of whisky?"

Rayburn shrugged his shoulders. The prosecutor did not pursue the line of inquiry and made no further explanation of his reference to the whisky.

Lt. Col. Paul A. Petree of the medical corps, chief of the neuropsychiatric division of the Percy Jones General hospital, Battle Creek, Mich., then took the stand and told how Col. Colman was taken to his hospital on the day of the shoting and remained [illegible] for five days.

Psychiatrist Told of Drinking.

On cross-examination by Capt. Phillip D. O'Connell, the trial judge advocate, Petree said Colman had told him he had been drinking the night before the shooting and that he had gone to his office to get two revolvers.

Col. Petree then quoted Colman as having asked: "Which do you think would be most in my favor, amnesia or alcholism?" Asked to give his opinion as to the reason for the outburst which caused the shooting, the witness said it might have been amnesia, alcohol, or general mental disorder.

Col. Petree then brought out a point never before made public in official announcements of the case, that Colman had said: "I have given orders repeatedly that a Negro chauffeur should never be sent to drive my car."

First Reference to Shooting.

This was the first reference in the trial to the circumstances of the shooting, which occurred near the front steps of the administration at 1 a. m., when Pvt. Willie McRae, 24 years old, drove up to the building in Colman's car. The commanding officer fired one shot, which struck McRae in the abdomen. McRae has recovered and he appeared at the opening of the trial, posing for newspaper photographers with a wide grin on his face.

Continuing his testimony on cross-examination by Capt. O'Connell, Col. Petree quoted Colman as saying: "What is the use—I have amnesia."

"Is there anything in a psychoneurosis that would cause a man to drink?" the judge advocate asked.

"No, it's purely voluntary," Petree replied.

Defense Heard First.

With Petree's testimony, the defense ended presentation of testimony of the matter of Colman's mental condition and the judge advocate began to present his side of the case. It was explained the procedure of having defense witnesses first was followed in the interest of saving time. The judge advocate said that if the court holds that Colman was mentally irresponsible nothing would be gained by presenting voluminous testimony as to his acts.

The first witness for the prosecution was Maj. John Lukas of the medical corps, stationed at Selfridge field. He said he saw Colman at the commanding officer's quarters an hour after the shooting.

"His eyes were bloodshot and blurry," Lukas said. "His speech was affected and he apparently didn't know what was going on. My impression was that he was under the influence of liquor."

Drinking at Picnic Told.

Maj. Lukas said Colman told him he had had a few drinks at a picnic on the afternoon of the shooting and a few drinks later. Asked ther he is a psychiatrist, Lukas eplied with an emphatic, "No."

Members of the court, who had spent most of the day hearing testimony involving the use of complex medical terms, joined in the laugh that swept the court room.

29 Specifications Set Up.

The charges against Col. Colman, read to the court at the opening of the court-martial, detailed alleged violations of five articles of war and set up 29 specifications as to how the articles were violated. The court may fix the penalty under four of the articles of war involved, but a finding of guilty does not require that the defendant be dismissed from service.

Col. Colman, however, also is on trial under another article, known to army men as No. 95, which provides that any officer convicted of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman shall be dismissed from service.

Under this article he is charged with being drunk and disorderly May 5, the date of the shooting of Pvt. McRae, and again on April 3, April 20, and May 1. One such offense is alleged to have occurred at the Oscoda [Mich.] army air field, a subsidiary base 200 miles north of Selfridge field.

Illegal Transfers Charged.

Eighteen specifications listed in the charges allege that Col. Colman unlawfully procured the transfer of enlisted men to Selfridge field "to the prejudice of good order and military discipline."

In some of these cases he is accused of certifying that men were qualified for special assignments when they were not in fact so qualified.

In addition, he is charged with misappropriating an electric power generator valued at $800, a refrigerator valued at $175, and five bedsteads valued at $4.93 each. He also is accused of misappropriating labor and services, valued at $154, of six civilian employes of Selfridge field.

Negro Leader Asks President to Order a New Court-Martial

New York, N. Y.

SEP 21 1943

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19 (U.P.)—Edgar G. Brown, director of the National Negro Council, today asked President Roosevelt to order a new court-martial of Capt. William T. Colman, former commanding officer of Selfridge Field, Mich., who shot and wounded a Negro soldier at the air base May 5.

In an appeal addressed to the President as commander in chief, he said punishment ordered by a court of nine colonels—reduction in rank from a temporary colonelcy to his regular captain's rank—was equivalent to acquittal and an "outrageous and sorry spectacle of the miscarriage of justice,"

Colman To Know Fate This Week

Courier, Pittsburgh Pa.

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich., Sept. 16—The much-delayed court-matial hearing for Col. William T. Colman, former commanding officer of Selfride Field—charged with the shooting of soldier-chaffeur William McRae around midnight May 5—finally got under way Monday, September 6.

Despite the fact that Private McRae was on the stand at length Tuesday, September 7, it took the later testimony of Lt. Col. Paul A. Petree of the Medical Corps and chief of the neuro-psychiatric division in the Percy Jones hospital, Battle Creek, Mich., to introduce the newest angle in the case—when he quoted Colonel Colman as saying "I have given orders repeatedly that a Negro chauffeur should never be sent to drive my car."

PREMEDITATED DEFENSE HINTED

Colonel Petree further quoted Colman as asking, "Which do you think would be most in my favor—amnesia or alcoholism?" (On trial, Colman, when asked for the reason for the outburst which caused the shooting, declared it might have been amnesia, alcohol, or general mental disorder).

Petree, when cross-examined by Capt. Philip D. O'Connell, trial judge advocate, said Colman told him he had been drinking the night before the shooting and had gone to his office to get two revolvers.

Colonel Colman is not only on trial for the May 5 shooting of Private McRae, but he also is answering 28 other counts for drunkenness, fraudulent transfer of enlisted men, accepting a gift from a government contractor, misappropriation of government property, and a number of similar offenses. The court-martial hearing, scheduled for ten days, is expected to reach a close this week.

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich., Sept. 6 (UP).—Col. William T. Colman, deposed commander of the Selfridge Field Air Base, entered a plea of innocent when arraigned before a court martial of nine colonels today on charges of shooting a Negro soldier and misappropriating government property.

Seven charges, alleging violations of five articles of war, were placed against Colman, who has been held under military arrest since last May 5, following the shooting of his Negro chauffeur, Pfc. William McRae, of Morven, N. C. McRae has recovered from his wounds since that time and has returned to duty.

Colman also was charged with illegal procurement of personnel, including the "fraudulent and unlawful procurement of the transfer of Pvt. (now Lieutenant) Benson Ford, son of Edsel Ford, to Selfridge Field on Oct. 15, 1942."

It also was charged that Colman procured or attempted to procure the transfer of other persons to Selfridge by "false statements as to their qualifications."

Colman originally was scheduled for trial before a court martial composed of 10 colonels but Col. Gilbert T. Collar, of the Columbia, S. C., Army air base, was dismissed by peremptory challenge.

OCT 2 1943

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Secretary of War Stimson told his press-radio conference on Thursday that he has asked that the record in the case of Lt. Col. William T. Colman, court-martialed commander of Selfridge Field, Mich., be "expedited."

Both Representatives O'Toole and Shafer have been prodding the War Department through threats of a Congressional investigation to determine why a stiffer penalty than demotion to a captaincy was not invoked.

Selfridge Field's Shooting Officer To Be Retired

Daily World NOV 4 1943

Pressure Brings Action From War Department

Atlanta, Georgia

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich. —(ANP)—Capt. William T. Colman, former commander of the Selfridge field army air base, recently convicted by a court-martial, is to be retired, announced the war department Tuesday. The announcement said that "Capt. Colman is being retired under public law No. 193 of the 77th congress." The date of his retirement is not yet revealed.

The law referred to gives the secretary of war in war time, power to place on the unlimited retirement list any officer found to be unfit for duty.

CONVICTED IN SHOOTING

Colman was convicted of drunkeness and careless use of a pistol in the shooting and wounding of his Negro-chauffeur. The former commandant was also acquitted of 23 other charges which included illegal transfer of soldiers and misappropriation of government property.

By the court-marital, Colman was reduced from the temporary rank of colonel to the permanent rank of captain, when two other Selfridge field officers, convicted within two weeks of his trial, received heavier sentences.

Colman's retirement is the ultimate result of a statement by Rep. Paul W. Shafer (R., Mich.) who termed his sentence "disgustingly inadequate" and announced the reopening of his investigation of alleged wholesale irregularities at Selfridge fields because he believed the war department has failed to get to the bottom of things.

INVESTIGATION DEMANDED

Rep. Donald O'Tolle (D., N. Y.) demanded Sec'y. Stimson investigate Colman's court-marital. The secretary later announced that he had ordered additional proceedings in the case.

The law through which the war department ordered provides that if an officer has served more than seven years of commissioned service his retirement pay will be computed on his rank and length of service.

Since Colman entered the army as a flying cadet in 1928, he would come under this provision. If retired as a captain, Colman will receive retirement pay of $1,125 a year.

Col. Colman Found Guilty In Shooting

Post
Washington, D.

Selfridge Field, Mich., Sept. 14. Col. William T. Colman, 39-year-old former commandant of this big Army air base, was convicted by a court martial today on careless use of firearms and on four counts of drunkenness and ordered reduced in rank to a captaincy.

He was acquitted on all other charges including allegations that he fraudulently arranged the transfer of military personnel to the field here, that he had accepted a gift from a contractor engaged on work for the Government and that he had misappropriated Government property and labor services.

In directing Colonel Colman's reduction in rank, the court martial of eight colonels and one lieutenant colonel ordered that he be placed at the foot of the list of captains, not to be promoted for three years.

Deliberate Six Hours

The verdict was announced just six hours after the court began deliberation on more than a week of testimony. It is subject to review by the War Department and the sentence will not take effect until finally approved.

The major charge against Colonel Colman was the shooting and wounding of Pvt. William R. McCrae, Negro chauffeur at the base, here last May 5. The original charge on this count was assault with intent to do bodily harm. The court reduced this to careless use of firearms.

Testifying on this allegation, Colonel Colman said his mind was a blank for some time before and after the shooting. To a charge that he had arranged the transfer of a number of enlisted men to Selfridge Field, including Lieut. Benson Ford, grandson of Henry Ford, he testified the assignments were made for the [illegible] of the field and that young Ford's transfer was made with the understanding it had War Department approval.

Denies He ToTok Gift

He denied he accepted a vacation lodge at Oscoda, Mich., as a personal gift from a Bay City (Mich.) contracting firm.

Colonel Colman stood at attention as the court announced his sentence. When it was pronounced he smiled broadly and thanked the officers of the court. He declined to make any comment on the verdict and sentence.

The court adjourned until Friday, when it will take up the trial of Lieut. Col. Charles C. White, who was executive [illegible] under Colonel Colman. The charges have not been disclosed.

Set Trial for Colonel in Selfridge Field Shooting

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich. (ANP) — Col. William T. Colman, 39, former commanding officer here, will stand trial September 6 on charges growing out of his shooting of Pvt. William McRae, 24, of Merven, N.C., last May 8, according to Capt. [illegible]chard M. Ramcy, public relations officer.

Colman shot the soldier during an altercation over his discovery that the commander allegedly permitted irregularities to exist on the military reservation. McRae, who was chauffeur for the commander, has recovered from his wounds and is reportedly reassigned.

Court-Martial Reduces Colman to Rank of Captain

SEP 15 1943

Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky.

By the United Press.

Selfridge Field, Mich., Sept. 14—Col. William T. Colman, former commander of Selfridge Field, was found guilty by a general court-martial of four violations of the 96th Article of War today and was reduced from his temporary rank of colonel to his permanent rank of captain.

The punishment was fixed by the court-martial of nine colonels after four hours of deliberation.

Colman was called before the board of officers and the sentence was read by Col. Hamner Huston, president of the court.

SEP 15 1943

Stood Stiffly At Attention.

Colman stood stiffly at attention as the officer read:

"It is the verdict of this court that you be reduced from your temporary rank of colonel to your permanent rank of captain and be placed at the foot of the list of captains for three years and suspended from temporary promotions for a like period."

COL. WILLIAM T. COLMAN.

The specific counts were three charges of being drunk and disorderly and the shooting "through carelessness" last May 5 of Pfc. William McRae, a Negro soldier at the base. It was the shooting of McRae which prompted investigation of Colman's administration and the court-martial proceedings.

96th Article Violated.

All the charges come under the 96th Article of War—"disorders and neglects to the prejudice of good order and military discipline."

Colman was found innocent of the other twenty-five charges, including the felonious shooting of McRae, misuse of Government property and the illegal transfer of personnel, including the transfer of Pvt. (now lieutenant) Benson Ford, grandson of Henry Ford, and eleven other soldiers.

The case against the 39-year-old defendant was completed after nine days of deliberations in which more than seventy witnesses were heard.

Reinstatement Of Air Wardens Urged

FEB 1 4 1943

The dismissed and disbanded representatives of the Negro Civilian Defense organization of the Atlanta Metropolitan Area Saturday called upon Director George M. Phillips to rescind his Februry 8 order and grant Negroes representation in planning for the area corps for the sake of efficiency and morale.

The confusion which had been brewing in the Atlanta and Fulton County Negro Civilian Defense Corps for several months came to a head last week with the dismissal of the entire Negro staff and disbanding of the organization by Phillips.

Those dismissed were W. H. Aiken, local contractor, who was liason officer and director of the corps; Attorney A. T. Walden, Director of Zone II; R. C. Eberhardt, insurance official, director of Zone IV; his assistant, J. H. Calhoun, real estate man; E. A. Pollard, funeral director, head of Zone VII. Rev. M. L. King, pastor of Ebenezer Baptist Church and chairman of the Negro Advisory Committee for Fulton County.

AIKEN LIASON OFFICER

FEB 1 4 1943

Aiken was appointed liason officer for the Atlanta Negro Civilian Defense corps and authorized to set up a volunteer office at 158 Auburn Avenue, N. E., in January. 1942, by General Peyton, then Civilian Defense Director for the city Prior to that time, ex-Governor Talmadge had appointed a Negro Advisory Committee to the State Citizens' Defense Committee, headed by J. W. Holly, of Albany. Similarly, the county defense director C. J. Currie, had approved a Fulton County Negro Committee, with the Rev. M. L. King as chairman and Rev. D. T. Babcock and C. N. Ellis and C. A Scott as members. J. H. Hanley was named chairman for the Fifth Congressional District Aiken set up an organization of Negro leadership and under the auspices and direction of his staff more than 1,000 men and women were trained in several areas. This organization functioned well, receiving the commendation of higher officials. Supervision was over Negro citizens only.

FEB 1 4 1943

Shortly after Phillips assumed the area civilian defense directorate, he elected to close up the central office maintained by Aiken and discontinued the small appropriation set aside for its operation The Negro organization protested and asked continuance of the staff and budget, necessary authorization and provision for training, placement and equipping of comparable Negro corps and representation on the planning committee.

IGNORED BY PHILLIPS

Phillips ignored the repeated requests of the Negro leadership to confer with him and did so only after the Regional Director of the United States Office of Civilian Defense intervened. At the conference, he refused to agree to retain Negro Zone Directors, however agreeing to appoint Negro district wardens; said it was not within his power to grant Negro representation on defense councils against tradition; that Negroes could not be trained as auxiliary policemen because the police department refused to train them and that Negroes could not be trained as auxiliary firemen unless the Negro committee was able to secure by purchase or gift the required transportation equipment. The Negro group later voted unanimously to stand by their original requests. Another meeting was held and further negotiation promised. Then the February 8 order of dismissal and disbandment came.

The Negro leadership contends that it and the Negro citizenry are loyal to their country and desire to do their full duty on the home front as well as on the battlefronts. Further, it is contended that democracy and respect for human personality be practiced at a time when Americans, including Negroes, are fighting and dying on a hundred battlefields of the global war which engulfs mankind.

PHILLIPS INTEGRATES NEGRO CD CORPS

Changes in the Atlanta and Fulton County Negro Civilian Defense organization, to integrate the Negro units with those of whites instead of continuing a separate administration, were announced Monday by George M. Phillips, area OCD director.

The office of corps director for Negroes, held by W. H. Aiken, and several other administrative posts have been discontinued, Mr. Phillips said, and district Negro wardens will work through the metropolitan organization. The district wardens have authority in predominantly Negro districts; will appoint their precinct and sector wardens, and supervise their activities.

Women War Workers Get Escorts

OCD

MACON, Ga., March 1.—(AP)—A major function of Macon's auxiliary police battalion, Company Company A, comprised of 90 men, will be to see that young women engaged in war work are safely escorted to their homes at night.

That announcement was made by Captain Paul Weinfeld, company commander, at the formal opening of the new company headquarters last night. Captain Weinfeld pointed out that parental fears could be dispelled for the young women who are forced to walk from bus stops to their homes as they leave their jobs in defense plants late at night. It will be one main objective of the auxiliary police to offer safe escort to such young women.

This is the first of several auxiliary headquarters to have one-way radio communications, and Weinfeld said that officers' private cars would soon be installed with one-way receivers.

The battalion is composed of six companies, five white and one Negro, and each has approximately 90 members who aid the undermanned regular police.

PRACTICE DEMOCRACY

MAR 6 1943

The war has brought to many minds a clear understanding of the evils wrought by the division of the population because of race, creed and color. An increasing number of influential citizens have become outspoken in condemning segregation and discrimination. But talking about unity and democracy is not enough. The following statement by Director James M. Landis of the Office of Civilian Defense is offered as testimony that unity and democracy can be practiced by providing Americans a chance to work side by side indiscriminately. Mr. Landis says the Civilian Defense program affords the opportunity for all races and creeds to become better acquainted with each other. Since they can work side by side it follows that they can also fight side by side. There is no need for segregation in either industry or the armed forces.

"I am proud that our Civilian Defense program has been singularly inhospitable to racial innuendoes. Common danger and common decency can recognize no barriers. In fact the Civilian Defense program affords an unusual opportunity for neighbors of all races and creeds to become better acquainted with each other. Every time an American works side by side with an American of another race or color, he gives the lie to Hitler's racial nonsense.

"Unity is, of course, an aim that would be dictated by reasons of sentiment and plain humanity. But today it is demanded by the stark, grim consideration of winning the war. This war will be lost if it is won by or for one creed, one race, one color. If it is a war for democratic ideals and democratic freedoms, it must be waged in this united manner both abroad and at home.

MAR 6

"This is why the OCD has urged that defense movements, either local or statewide, represent as best they can the groups that make up the community. At the top in the planning stage we want horizontal participation of all groups, so that at the bottom where plans are translated into action by millions of workers it will be the community as a whole that responds to America's needs rather than merely a religious, a political or an economic group.

MAR 6 1943

"I cannot overemphasize the need for this approach. Almost every Axis-propagated rumor seeks to threaten that concept. Differences that normally arise between men and women active in any enterprise are exploited into differences of faith and of objective, until frequently bitternesses arise so deep that we lose sight of the continual threat of the common enemy. And on occasion we tend to forget that that which we must never forget, day in and day out, that this hateful racism, this fundamental belief in slavery of the Nazis must forever and at any cost be driven from the face of the earth.

"It is too easy, however, to talk; it is difficult so to arrange one's life as to be a potent force in the waging of war. Particularly is that true of this war, when the battle lines themselves must of necessity be far away. But the function of civilian defense is to answer that question—to devise ways and means of effectively catapulting the energy and the resources of America's thousands of communities into the war."

MAYOR WM F. DEVIN SCORES AIR RAID WARDEN RACIAL BIAS

Political, racial, or religious controversies have no place in civilian defense and no member of any civilian defense organization should use his position in that organization to participate in any such controversy.

So declared Mayor William F. Devin Tuesday night after he had asserted. In his report to the people on city affairs, that "a matter has come to my attention recently which causes me to comment about the subject of racial discrimination."

MAY 5 1943

"I want it definitely understood that the Air Raid Warden organization and the entire civilian defense are organized solely for the purpose of furthering the war effort and of protecting the lives and property of Seattle citizens," the mayor said.

"Today in some parts of the world the racial prejudices of mankind have been fanned into flames of conflagration which are engulfing entire nations. These flames no doubt started from small prejudices but were enlarged easily and quickly through intolerance and misunderstanding.

"There can be no place in American goevrnment for this kind of discrimination. America has prospered and grown strong for many reasons, one of which i love of justice and equality of opportunity. These qualities have become a part of the very fiber of American democracy. We cannot and must not forsake them now."

In this "all-out global war" the Negro civilian citizens of Rutherford County have contributed their bit to the home front. Among other contributions the following may be mentioned to show that Negroes in this war like in all the other wars in which this country has been engaged, are none the less patriotic.

Scrap drives were sponsored in all of the larger schools and some of the smaller ones. New Hope High School and Grahamtown High School leading in contributing more than 4,000 pounds. Organized War Bond and Stamp Sales were conducted in the two high schools. Records show that more than $100 have been contributed to the Red Cross. More than 6,000 ration books have been issued by the Negro teachers. Twenty women completed the home nursing course conducted at Grahamtown School.

More than 50 pupils and teachers have qualified for First Aid certificates. Three men of Forest City have qualified and are actively participating in the Auxiliary Firemen Corps. More than a score of boys and girls have received training at some of the NYA centers and are now actively engaged in defense plants. Victory Gardens and chickens are now a definite part of the greater number of colored homes. The Negro ministers have either rebuilt or remodeled most of the churches, thus causing a greater sense of responsibility among church folks.

Neighborhood clubs are nothing new in Harlem. In the past, however, they have never worked together. Indeed, in some instances, they have come to open conflict.

Venture Began in August

Last August the Juvenile Welfare Council at 200 West 135th Street, directed by Children's Court Justice Stephen S. Jackson, began gradually to weld the clubs together. The common denominator was patriotic motive—aid in civilian defense, collection of rubber and scrap and sale of war stamps. In October sponsors of the movement, including Miss Ann Petry, Nathaniel A. Burrell, Daniel Burley and Ludlow Werner, diverted the combined clubs into a common projejcjtj. This was the staging of a variety show for the Harlem Servicemen Center.

The actors, who range in age from 13 to 21 years, worked hard at this project under direction of Richard Campbell. The Harlem Recreation Center and the Harlem Branch of the Young Women's Christian Association helped. The show was highly successful. The children, though members of different clubs, worked smoothly together.

The next step in the way of a special contribution by the clubs to the war was a public showing of the variety program and plans for this are now booming along, with prospects of greater success than the original showing.

Policeman Helps Children

The children are working together in getting out posters, selling tickets and making scenery. Patrolman Glendon Bryant, 6 feet 4 inches, an experienced Juvenile Aid Bureau worker, has been assigned by Commissioner Valentine to help the children and under his guidance they seem inspired.

While the variety show is taking shape the adults behind the movement are negotiating for large plots of ground for the club's Victory Gardens. Tentative sites in the heart of Harlem already have been chosen and the idea is to have each club tend its own portion of this ground.

The adult sponsors think they have the movement started, but are making no optimistic prophecies. They keep saying "We just hope it will work out."

Negro Aid In Mailing Books Asked

Behind Schedule In Distribution

Falling alarmingly behind schedule in the mailing of North Carolinians' war ration book No. 3, the Office of Price Administration mailing center at Charlotte appealed today for Negro school teachers and leaders of Negro organizations here to volunteer for assistance in this tremendous task.

Aubrey Elliott, principal of Alexander Graham Junior High School and mailing center supervisor, said Clinton L. Blake, principal of the West Charlotte High School for Negro children, will receive offers for assistance in this work and will instruct the volunteers.

The Negro division of the mailing center will begin its activities tomorrow morning in the basement of Central High School, where several hundred white persons and a few Negro civil service helpers already are on udty.

AMPLE SPACE

Mr. Elliott said the basement is so extensive and includes such a relatively large number of rooms that the Negro division can be provided with ample working space without congestion being caused at the mailing center.

The center was opened June 10 and has averaged about 50,000 books distributed each work day, operating five days a week. The original schedule provided for the work to be completed by June 20 so that arrangements could be made to start the work of obtaining belated applications and mailing the requested books to these applicants. Aleary approximately 1,000,000 applications have been received at the mailing center, which must issue almost 4,000,000 books. Only about 400,000 books have been mailed so far, it was estimated.

SC Negroes Help Fight Inflation

Columbia, S. C., State

The Negro home front pledge campaign committee, composed of Negro leaders representing all sections of the state, met at the South Carolina State college in Orangeburg Saturday to plan its drive to combat inflation and "black markets." J. A. Gresham, district information officers from the Office of Price administration, stated the purpose of the meeting, the dangers of inflation and the need for organized efforts in holding down prices.

M. F. Whittaker, S. L. Finley, C. A. Johnson, C. V. Bing, A. R. Rucker, H. H. Butler and A. M. Anderson, in brief talks, discussed inflation during the first World war and the dangers of this evil in the present crisis. They explained how Negroes, who will suffer greatly from inflation, might be organized to fight this condition.

The state committee decided to set up in each county a home front pledge committee in co-operation with the county civilian defense organization. It was pointed out, however, that in a number of counties Negroes have not been included in civilian defense units. They will not be able to make their contribution unless they are made a part of the official county unit, the committee said.

September 22, 1943

The work of the state committee was divided among the following subcommittees: Ministers and pastors, school principals, colleges ,farm extension and home demonstration agents, vocational agricultural teachers and women organized under the block system.

John P. Burgess, state chairman, presided throughout the meeting.

Colored Man Shares Food With Refugees

PINEHURST, Aug. 31.—Tommy Russel, a generous and kindly colored man of this section who enjoys sharing his blessings with those less fortunate than himself, is setting an example of patriotism this summer with his contributions of food sent regularly to the refugee shildren in New York who have been brought from the battle fronts in Europs.

Tommy has a victory garden beside his little home in Eastwood, from which he gets fresh vegetables to feed himself and his family. Every week there are beans and squash, cucumbers and cabbages, onions and other vitamin giving foods left on the vines after Tommy and his family had their fill. Wishing to do his part towards aiding the victims of our warring enemies, Tommy has been gathering those extra vegetables, crating them, and shipping them to a regugee children's agency in New York. He has already sent three crates during July, and he averages a crate every two weeks.

No freight charge is made by the local office for Tommy's worthwhile endeavors towards aiding our allies. He is recognized as one of this section's least known but most deserving patriots.

Voice Of The People

A WORD OF PRAISE

To the Editor of The News:

So often we fail to give credit to the Negro when he deserves it. I for one am guilty, so that I might redeem myself just a bit, I'm writing this to the "Voice of the People."

I carried my brother to town Sunday night to catch a bus to return to Wheeler Dam after a 10-day furlough here. When I left the bus station it was 10:30 p.m., so I decided to pick my husband up as he got off from work at 11 p.m.

However, at Third Avenue and 17th Street, I was stopped by a Negro woman air raid warden (or whatever title she has. Anyway she wore an official band). I asked her to let me continue my journey as I was afraid I'd miss my husband. The reply was an emphatic "No," so I switched off my motor and remained there until she gave me the "go" signal.

Her block was in total darkness in a few seconds and she stopped each car, streetcar and pedestrian with great efficiency. It was a beautiful piece of work and I feel like our "hats" should go off to her. This Negro woman's name is Hattie Sherman age 76 years. She has lived on Third Avenue for 34 years.

New OPA Order To Place Negroes On Ration Boards

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON— The Office of Price Administration this week issued a long awaited administrative order to its regional and district offices to place Negroes on war price and ration boards.

Proper enforcement of this order will have far-reaching effects on Negroes and Negro communities throughout the country, including the South. No sectional exceptions are made.

The order, issued by Prentiss Brown, administrator of the OPA, is dated May 7, and has now been sent to all district and regional offices. Under the qualifications of board members, the order states: "The membership of each board shall be such as to represent the community as a whole. Selection of all members of any one board from the same political party, sex, religious faith, RACE, economic level, social level or occupation, shall be avoided except as under special circumstances such selection may be necessary and unavoidable.

"When appropriate, the board, and the panels thereof, should include a housewife and members from labor, from agriculture, and from various MINORITY and RACIAL groups."

Whereas the defense councils make the nominations, the responsibility for the selection and appointment of board members is in the district director of the OPA.

The general functions of the boards, as enumerated in the OPA order, point up the importance of having Negroes represented. These functions include (1) informing the public of the nature, purposes and methods of price control and rationing; (2) informing the district offices of public response to OPA's programs, and the need for changes in operating procedures; (3) acting on all rationing matters assigned to the local boards; (4) receiving complaints of price violations and either transmitting them to the district office or taking such other action on them as is required by regulations and instructions; and (5) providing local leadership for meeting community problems associated with the price control, rent, and rationing programs.

The absence of Negro representation on local boards, particularly in the South, has been one of the factors contributing to an inequitable administration of the OPA program where the Negro is concerned. Many of these evils still exist— differentials in prices in Negro neighborhoods, overcharging points for rationed commodities, and refusal of adequate and equitable rationing to Negroes.

The order for the inclusion of Negroes on ration boards is a culmination of a series of efforts toward this end. The N.A.A.C.P. first broached the subject in June of 1942. Their suggestion was turned down by Deputy Administrator John Hamm, who said the administration feared that a specific directive to state and local officials, particularly in the South, might endanger the entire administrative set-up in the Southern area.

The Defender pointed out the evils arising from the lack of Negro representation on such boards in February of 1943, and brought the matter to the attention of Administrator Brown with a list of questions on the problem. The Defender later conferred with Mr. Brown and suggested a statement of policy on the inclusion of Negroes.

George Weaver, director of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, held several conferences and wrote memoranda to Brown on this same point. He presented forceful arguments in which he showed how successfully the selective service system has utilized Negroes, and how the post office deparement makes use of the services of Negroes but maintains but one service for the communities. Much of the credit for the administrative order is due George Weaver.

The problem now facing the OPA is machinery for enforcing the order, which may be resisted in some of the "backwoods" areas of the country.

SALVAGE DRIVE IS HELPED BY NEGRO

Bristol Cook Is Proclaimed One-Man Committee

RICHMOND, July 26 (AP).—Robert Scott's ability as a cook is something the war production board knows nothing about, but the WPB does know that Robert is just about the nearest thing to a one-man salvage drive that you can find anywhere.

Robert, the Negro cook at a Bristol cafe, started one of the greatest grease-collecting campaigns the Old Dominion ever has or ever will see, according to C. H. Luebbert, executive secretary of the state salvage committee.

Receives Letter

Not being satisfied with being the first person in the country to "give a grease anniversary" celebrating one year of grease-collecting, Robert has just sent Luebbert a letter enclosing a renderer's receipt showing that he has sold 1,023 pounds of grease since June 13, the date of the anniversary celebration.

During the first year, Robert, single-handed, collected 5,550 pounds of grease for the war program.

"I am taking my vacation next month, and I am going to spend the most of my time gathering up grease, and what about old silk and anything you think needed most? Please let me have a list. I have a list of names of about 75 or 100 to call on first. Have two hours in the morning and one and a half in the evening."

Virginia Negroes are active in all phases of civilian defense and have representatives on the Defense Councils of 66 counties, cities and towns, according to the report of James F. Nicholas, supervisor of Negro Defense Activities, covering the period between June 1, 1942, and June 30, 1943.

From the beginning of the Civilian Defense organization in Virginia, it has been the policy of the State Office to encourage Negro participation on all levels.

The 1940 census places the Negro population in the State at 631,449. Of this total, 405,305, or 61.3 per cent, live in the 66 counties and towns that have Negro representation on their Defense Councils.

The work of Negro air raid wardens and auxiliary police has been outstanding and there is no record of friction or disturbances of a serious nature that have resulted from the actions of any Negro air raid warden or auxiliary policeman.

Since June 1, 1942, the Supervisor of Negro Defense Activities has made 126 visits to 64 counties, cities and towns in connection with Negro participation in the protective and war service activities.

The supervisor's report says that, "Taking the State as a whole, the work that the Negro people have done is very commendable. Some localities have better programs than others; but, when we consider the needs of the respective communities and all the disadvantages that some of them have to work under, it is, perhaps, a correct appraisal to say that most of them are doing about as well as they can." Several outstanding examples of Negro civilian defense activities in different cities and towns are listed.

Colored Families Save Tin Cans

Twenty-three small colored children met at the Negro agricultural agent's office Friday, August 6th, to organize a Junior Salvage committee. These children were selected from each block in the colored sectors to contact the people who live in those blocks and constantly remind them to save their tin cans and fats.

All families will be requested to prepare the cans as the volunteer workers will demonstrate and put them in containers conveniently located for the city workers to collect without any trouble.

We are looking forward to full cooperation from all families and ask that you give these young workers proper respect and encouragement.

Jefferson Gets New Post In OCD

APR 24 1943

WASHINGTON — The appointment of Bernard S. Jefferson, associate professor of law at Howard university, to the staff of the national Office of Civilian Defense has been announced by Director James M. Landis.

As a member of the National Organizations Section, Jefferson will present OCD services to organized Negro groups.

"We are particularly fortunate to have Mr. Jefferson as a member of our staff," Landis said. "Negro organizations play an important role in creating a better understanding of the nation's war programs and the part their members can take in civilian activities is vitally necessary to the war effort."

Jefferson will help to present to organized Negro groups the federal war programs which depend for their success upon the work of volunteers. Among these programs are manpower, child-care, transportation, war savings, conservation, rationing, nutrition and health.

Part of his job will be to assist Negro organizations to serve their communities through local defense councils and to receive from such organizations suggestions which might be helpful in the promotion of various aspects of the Civilian Defense program.

Every Home To Be Asked To Display Compliance Pledge

Dover, Tenn., Times September 2, 1943

47c

Every home in Dover and Stewart County will be asked to display in their windows a voluntary compliance pledge not to pay more than top legal prices and to accept no rationed goods without giving up ration stamps.

This sweeping program was mapped at a joint OPA-OCD meeting at Clarksville High School this morning. The campaign was explained by Hardin H. Conn and Mrs. A. H. Roberts, representing the OPA and the OCD.

Western Grizzard, Civilian Defense coordinator, who presided, appointed a committee to direct a house-to-house campaign that is intended to come in contact with every family in the city and county. This committee is composed of C. H. Moore, chairman; Mrs. Gobble Davis, Block Leader; Ralph Winters, of the OCD; Dr. Richard N. Owen, representing the churches; Stanley Gower, the press; N. L. Carney, rural schools; T. B. Foust, OPA; Jesse F. Perry, civic clubs; Miss Verda Williams, city schools; Charlie Runyon, speakers' bureau; H. W. Short, county agent, and H. L. Allison, the colored people. The drive will be from September 12 to 18.

A total of 6,000 stickers for the estimated 2,000 homes in Clarksville and the estimated 4,000 in the rural communities will be provided. The stickers read:

"I pledge to pay no more than top legal prices; I accept no rationed goods without giving up ration stamps."

Mr. Conn said the battle on the home front is to see that the things for which the boys are fighting will not be dissipated. He described inflation as an insidious enemy that must be defeated.

Rationing and price control are designed to prevent inflation and to assure a fair division of the necessities of life. Rationing, he is a fair system in that it issues ration currency against a national stock pile. Price control and rationing must go hand in hand.

The only way the program can be effective, he said, is through voluntary compliance—the American public accepting it and abiding by it. If the pledges are carried out there will be no black markets, he concluded.

Mrs. Roberts conceded that OPA had drawn much criticism, but she asked what would happen if OPA was abolished? The new compliance pledge is a movement of compliance rather than inforcement, she explained.

The pledge campaign was begun in New Orleans, Mrs. Roberts stated. The pledges were signed by practically every family in New Orleans and overnight prices dropped. It is an example, she said, of what can be done when the people cooperate.

This was one of a series of more than 100 meetings that are being conducted over the state. The campaign is expected to be nation-wide.

Solicitor Garrett Flays Acts Of Negro Auxiliary Groups

CD

The Bibb county grand jury yesterday returned a no bill in case of James Walker, Negro auxiliary policeman, charged with murder in the death of Willie B. Jones. Nine other Negro auxiliaries were charged with Walker as accessories in the slaying.

Solicitor General Charles H. Garrett, following the return of the no bill, lashed out at certain factions of the Negro auxiliary police force, stating that "the Negro auxiliaries are unnecessarily cruel and vicious in making arrests in some instances."

"The Negroes should have part in the organization," he said, "but should be under the direct supervision of white officers and if they are not willing to accept the sacrifices and obey orders they should not have a part in the undertaking."

Garrett declared that he had no complaint against the white auxiliaries, citing their untiring efforts in the patriotic endeavor, but stated that he had "two or three" homicides involving Negro auxiliaries in his office and "several complaints where they were said to have assaulted persons unnecessarily in making arrests."

Walker and the nine other auxiliaries were charged with the murder of Jones, following an affray in front of a Negro night club here July 17. The case was to have been heard at a previous grand jury session but was postponed until later because of the absence of two of the witnesses. The ten Negroes were charged in the warrant with making an assault upon Jones "with a pistol, and wooden bludgeons, police sticks, blackjacks, and other blunt instruments."

The case of Claude Lundy, another Negro auxiliary, charged with murder in connection with the death of Richard Felts, will be heard when the grand jury convenes next Tuesday, Garrett declared. Felts died Sept. 2 in the Macon hospital of gunshot wounds allegedly inflicted by Lundy on May 22. Lundy was released from the Bibb county jail under $1,000 after he was held by a coroner's jury in the death of Felts.

League Hears Plans Of City Defense Council

Corps Will Reach Into Life Of Every Family

FEB 3 1943

A very effective meeting of the Atlanta Civic and Political League was held at Ebenezer Baptist Church Tuesday evening, with several important reports highlighting the program. J. W. Dobbs. president, who has just returned from a months trip to the southwest, presided at the meeting.

Miss E. Fannie Granton, of the Atlanta School of Social Work, called upon League members as citizens to help carry on the program which has been sponsored by the Atlanta Urban League in combatting social diseases. Each person was asked to have a blood test and examination, and urge his neighbor, associates, employees and others to do the same.

The prospective Citizens Defense Council, which will organize the rationing, welfare, health and recreational phases of Civilian Defense, was described by Warren A. Cochrane, executive secretary of the Butler Street Branch, Y. M. C. A. Mr. Cochrane pointed out how this corps will reach into every family of the city, with a block organization similar to Civilian Defense Corps, but distinctly apart from it. This matter was thoroughly discussed as well as the efforts to maintain Negro leadership in the protective corps. As a result, a committee was authorized to be appointed to work out a program to be presented at the mass meeting to be held in connection with the Lincoln Douglas Day program at Big Bethel A. M. E. Church on February 14th. It was also agreed, upon recommendation of W. Y. Bell and T. M. Alexander, to set up a publicity committee to organize information on all phases of the League's activities in connection with community life.

The committee on organization reported progress in setting up precinct groups all over the city in that committees have been appointed in each section. Most of these committees were represented, and during the next two weeks meetings will be called to elect officers for each precinct of the city.

The president, J. W. Dobbs gave an interesting account of his trip to the southwest and old something of what Negroes are doing in that section. He emphasized the necessity of paying poll taxes to remain on the voters' list, and the need for an effective organization.

Bibb School Children Take Spotlight in Scrap Drive

November 7, 1943

Bibb county school children took the spotlight in yesterday's Macon scrap parade, and the float entered by John W. Burke school earned the first prize $50 War Bond prize, with Charles Bruce school's float in second place for a $25 War Bond prize.

Similar War Bond awards offered for the best floats from Negro schools went to Burdell school as first prize winner and to L. H. Williams school as second prize winner.

A secret committee of judges selected these floats as the winners from entries representing almost all of Bibb county's public schools. All of the school floats portrayed some part of the scrap collection program.

BIG CROWD WATCHES

Boy Scouts, firemen, policemen, members of the Marines, the American Legion and the State Guard marched with the youngsters in the parade, which was viewed by a crowd that jammed Cherry street from the city auditorium down to Broadway.

The Robins Field band paraded for the scrap drive too, and Cochran Field gave the use of its jeeps for the occasion. Other army equipment came from Warner Robins, while the Lanier High boys' band furnished part of the music.

Scrap collecting became a colorful enterprise as it was shown in the floats, posters, and pantomime scenes. The John W. Burke school's winning float showed a WAC, WAVE, sailor, Marine and soldier busy at a melting pot turning out planes, tanks, jeeps and other weapons which can be made from scrap.

The second prize float from Charles Bruce school showed small boys dressed as soldiers with a wall of scrap between them and the enemy as protection. The Bellevue school entry featured Uncle Sam, while Virgil Powers float pictured two groups, one dressed like gold rush days with a sign saying "Not the spirit of 49 — gold digging" and the second group dressed in old, scrappy clothes with a sign saying "But the Spirit of '43—scrap collecting."

SCRAP HAPPY

Girls from Lanier High bore a huge sign: "Scrap happy. Hi soldier! Here comes help!" Joseph Clisby school pupils carried dozens of big signs showing the different kinds of scrap collecting, and Gresham children dressed up in scrap metal helmets and armed themselves with scrap metal guns.

The Negro schools taking first and second place planned their floats around terse, pointed slogans. Burdell school's float showed a huge shell made of a scrapped hot water boiler with a big sign saying, "Christmas present for Tokio." The L. H. Williams float featured a Jap dummy hanging from a gallows, with a sign reading "Our scrap to hang the Japs."

Wreckers also had a part in the dramatization of scrap needs, as they were used to haul broken-down jalopies marked "4-F" in the parade, followed by a jeep marked "After." Another such jalopy was marked "Death of a jalopy" and was followed by a tough little Army vehicle marked "Birth of a jeep."

Jay-Cees were sponsors of the scrap parade at the request of the Bibb county salvage committee headed by W. Mac Davis. Walter Doyle acted as chairman of arrangements with Lamar Swift, Capt. J. C. Spangler, and Claude McCollough as committee members. The Jay-cees carried a giant poster during yesterday's marching, to show the 102 Jay-cees in the Scrap.

Collection of scrap will be carried on throughout the county on Armistice Day, November 11, at which time 40 trucks from Camp Wheeler will be routed by schools to pick up the scrap turned in there.

Schools getting the most scrap have been offered prizes by Macon newspapers, with $100 War Bonds for the top white and top colored schools, $50 War Bonds for second place schools and $25 prizes for the third place winners.

There are 30 colored members in the organization which is known as Zone 6 and was organized by Earl Watson, who is warden. The organization is composed of first aiders, block wardens, auxiliary policemen and firemen.

The feed was opened by Cyrus Matthews (col), who led his fellow members in singing the National Anthem, which was followed by "God Bless America," after which he returned thanks. Earl Watson in a brief talk explained that the town was giving the feed to show appreciation of the cooperation of the colored people in Civilian Defense. Mr. Watson also thanked them for their loyalty in the organization.

Negro Leaders Preparing For Salvage Drive

The negroes in Americus, under the leadership of Eddie Bryant, chairman of the negro Scrap Drive Committee are organized to do their share towards making the drive a success. According to Bryant, with the assistance of the other members, associated with him, the students of Staley High school and the McCoy Hill school will locate and assemble the scrap and tin cans at the various homes, prior to November 10, at which time the individual small piles assembled at the homes will be reassembled in a large pile on the campus of the Staley High school, ready for collection, November 11th.

Bryant is asking all of the colored citizens and housewives to co-operate with him and give the students full sympathetic assistance.

In the county, F. M. Staley, negro county agent announces that the rural schools will be responsible for assembling scrap at a central location, using the school as the central point. The Sumter County Farmers' Board and the neighborhood leaders located in each community will co-operate with the rural teachers in making the drive a success.

The negroes in the city are being urged to donate money collected from the sale of the scrap to the Negro Boy Scouts. The rural people will donate the money derived from sale of scrap to their respective school.

Negro Auxiliary Officers Spend Busy Evening

Bus Disturbance Draws Heavy Fine

First, Ben Fountain drew a knife on a bus driver and then threatened to slash an auxiliary who was attracted by the disturbance, police reported.

THEN WILLIE FULLER, who was also on the bus, wanted to jump into the scramble along side Fountain, it was reported.

Fountain was fined $100 and Fuller $50 in recorder's court.

Later in the evening, auxiliaries arrested Irene Little for being drunk. She tried to get an ice pick out of her pocketbook and the police had to take it away from her.

* * *

ROY HUBBARD got into an argument with the arresting officers and he was nabbed when he reached into his pocket for a knife, the court was told.

As police were taking these two to a box, David Tucker dove towards one of them with another open knife and a third auxiliary tripped Tucker and took the weapon away, officers said.

Tucker was fined $50, the woman, $33; and Hubbard, $15, by Judge George Nottingham.

More than 15,000 persons are expected to march through the downtown streets of Birmingham this morning in a monster Loyalty Parade climaxing the observance in the county of Civilian Defense Loyalty Week. The procession will be in 20 sections, including three from Bessemer and four Negro divisions, and after passing through the downtown streets will end at the Municipal Auditorium where participants will join in a mass rally. All the various local defense organizations will be represented in the parade which will be reviewed by a group of civilian defense officials and Army, Navy and Marine officers.

Speakers at the mass rally to follow the parade will be James M. Landis, national OCD director, and Charles H. Murchison, regional OCD head.

The rally will bring to a close a week of interesting events in connection with the Defense Loyalty observance, which included a simulated air raid and a blackout. These demonstrations also gave evidence of the efficiency of the defense organization in the city and county and reflected much credit upon the leaders of this movement for their efforts in perfecting their respective organizations.

Birmingham may never, one hopes, be actually in need of being defended, but it is good to know that should such a need ever arise we have a well-trained, smoothly functioning group which can be relied upon to give a good account of itself in any emergency.

CDVO Calls Negro-White Unity Rally Tomorrow

Daily Worker

New York, N. Y.

What is reported to be the first Negro-white unity rally in the United States called by the Civilian Defense Volunteer Office will be held at Poe Park, Grand Concourse, north of Fordham Road, at 8 P.M. Sunday, when prominent community leaders and artists will join the people in pledging to work for racial and national unity.

Plans for the rally grew out of a meeting at the home of Jean Muir, motion picture star, 51 W. 86th St., two weeks ago, where Mayor F. H. LaGuardia led in the signing of a "Pledge of Unity" and where a "Pledge of Unity Committee" was set up. It is this committee which laid the groundwork for Sunday's rally.

The Pledge of Unity, signed by some of the most prominent persons in the City of New York, read:

"We, the citizens of New York, say it can't happen here, but we want to make sure: Moved by a deep sense of anguish and horror that in the midst of a war being fought for democracy there should be manifestations of racial hatred and violence against Americans of any race, color or creed, we pledge:

"1. That we shall not be moved by mob action against any fellow citizen;

"2. That we shall not listen to nor repeat any rumors designed to divide us among ourselves.

"3. That we shall at all times live up to the spirit of our American citizenship and do what is in our power to forward mutual understanding and friendliness among all the various groups which make up this city and our America.

"This pledge is supported and has been signed by Mayor F. H. LaGuardia."

Signatures followed.

Roderick Stephens, co-chairman of the Bronx CDVO, will be chairman of the rally. Speakers will include Dr. James Waterman Wise, the Rev. Edler Hawkins, Miss Muir, Maurice Hindus, author; W. C. Handy, "Father of the Blues," and Herbert Chenko, CDVO.

The Proudest Kids in America

The Worker

By AUNT ANNIE

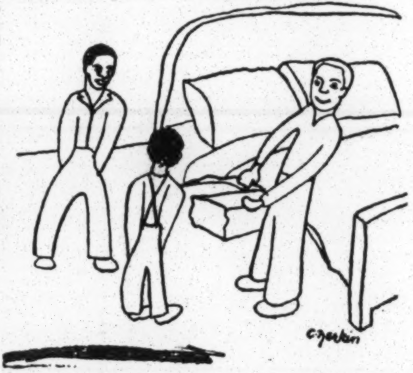
New York, N. Y.

Last week, I saw some of the proudest kids in America. They were a bunch of Negro and white boys and girls from Harlem and Upper Manhattan, New York City, heads of kids' salvage clubs, who met in the Civilian Defense office to get their insignia as members of the U. S. Junior Citizens Service Corps.

Those treasured insignia, red and blue on white silk badges, meant they had each given ten hours' work to helping win the war, and were promising to give an hour a week till victory comes.

"We've been collecting salvage," said Cleopatra Humphrey, a cute 15-year-old Negro girl, "and doing mostly anything that's needed. We had parties to raise money for the Red Cross, and gave plays and charged a war stamp admission. But I like getting the salvage best. We have so much fun at it, going from house to house and the people giving it to us."



Rubin hid his salvage under the bed

Cleo, who is "General" of the girls' salvage club in her junior high school, has put in lots more than ten hours—she's been at it for nearly two years. So has her little sister, Geraldine, who is a "Major" in the club.

Nine-year-old Anthony Clarke, and his pal Robert Negron, eight, both Negro boys, are captains in another salvage club that's gone after waste paper collection. They know that waste paper can be made into bombs and parachutes. They save every tiny scrap. So does their friend Rubin Rosario, a white boy of nine in the same group. Only Rubin's had trouble finding a place to keep his salvage. He used to hide it under his mother's bed. "But now I've got a better place," he says, "in the closet."

USO CENTER

Last Sunday, the new Keo-Way USO center was formally opened. The public had waited a long time for the creation of facilities adequate to house the activities of this agency which heretofore has been forced to carry on a big work with inadequate accommodations. FEB 18 1943

But the long wait has justified itself for now this agency is housed in one of the most complete set of quarters to be found anywhere in the country. Contrary to projects generally handed out which the Negro conducts and frequents most, in this center nothing has been left undone to make it equal to that of any other town or section.

Des Moines has done itself proud in this effort much to the credit of the sponsoring agencies and those in charge both officially and unofficially.

Of course with this beautiful beginning goes a responsibility resting on civilians as well as the officials to pitch in and see that those for whose pleasure and comfort the center was set up, get all the good possible out of it. These facilities will go a long way to provide proper entertainment and comfort for service men and women while off duty thus raising the morale of our fighting forces.

The citizens of Des Moines must be proud of this project and the best way to show it is to give those in charge their wholehearted support.

Director Explains USO Program

FEB 25 1943

Because of the number of queries and comments regarding the program of the Keo-Way USO in the community and groups that are admitted to the Center, Miss Ann T. Wolfolk, makes the following statement:

"The common task of USO will be to provide services in the communities near camps where the young men and women of the armed forces spend their free time. In some communities where there are a number of defense workers and the community agencies can not provide any or all of the services for defense workers, the USO provides some program for them.

"The Keo-Way USO at the present time is serving only men and women in the armed forces with the help of associated civilians who are on the Volunteer Staff. These associated civilians have made application and stated in what capacity they would like to serve. Each associated civilian will carry soon a membership card. FEB 25 1943

"The Keo-Way staff welcomes anyone who would like to do some type of service and will be very grateful to have you. Someone will be on hand to take applications during the hours the Center is open."

W. Y. Bell, Jr. TO USO POST

Atlanta, Feb. 12. (ANP)—Effective this week, William Y. Bell, Jr., executive secretary of the Atlanta Urban league, was granted a leave of absence by the board of directors of that agency to become associate regional executive of USO with headquarters in Atlanta, it was announced by A. T. Walden, chairman of the board.

Bell's duties will include coordination of USO activities for Negro soldiers and industrial workers primarily in Region 7 comprising the states of Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina and Florida. He may also be called upon for periodic work in Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico.

FEB 12 1943

He will be responsible to H. W. Pope, consultant for Negro service, in the national USO office in New York, who has responsibility for coordination of Negro work on the national level.

Bell will be the first Negro to be employed by the USO itself for regional work. FEB 12 1943

It is understood that the great number of Negro soldiers in the south, and the tense race relations existing now in many sections where USO centers have been set up and where others will be established, are among the most important factors which influenced the selection of a Negro for the regional staff. FEB 12 1943

By means of a special arrangement he will continue to give advice and direction to the program of the Atlanta Urban league. This arrangement is possible because most of his work with USO will be centered in Atlanta, making possible much extra work with the Urban league program.

The announcement of an acting executive secretary will be made as soon as the board completes its arrangements with one of a number of persons being considered for the post..

Although he is not a member, Bell was recently cited by the Atlanta Omega chapter as having made the outstanding record of achievement among Negroes in Atlanta last year.

NATION'S USOs TO HOLD OPEN HOUSE FOR PUBLIC ON SUNDAY

The Keo-Way USO, 1333 Keo-Way, will hold open house Sunday, for the general public, March 28, in celebrating the annual Open House Day to be observed by more than 1,200 United Service Organization clubs and centers in 47 states, national headquarters in New York announced this week.

MAR 25 1943

The purpose of the USO Open House Day is to enable the American people at first hand to observe a USO club and to become acquainted with the services rendered and the accomplishments of USO within the past year. In each community where USO operates the slogan for the day will be, "This is your USO. Come and See it."

From 1 to 6 p. m. the public will be invited to inspect the clubs and see USO in action. Programs at each club will take the form of a community-wide celebration, in which prominent local officials and citizens, USO representatives, civic, religious and patriotic groups, service men, their families, and USO volunteers will participate. Tributes will be paid to the 600,000 volunteers and hostesses who have aided USO programs. Radio stations in many parts of the country will broadcast the ceremonies.

Examples of art and craft work, photographs and other products of hobby groups executed by service men will be on view. Other displays will depict USO services to the armed forces and the growth of the organization. Music will feature programs at all clubs, and so far as rationing permits refreshments will be served.

A WORTHY SERVICE RENDERED

Informer Houston Tex.

The Dowling Street USO Club in Houston recently observed its first anniversary and reported that "during the year 80,636 service men visited the club; lodging was provided for 4,005. Free services included 1,000 showers monthly," and many other services to our boys in uniform.

This is indeed a worthy service rendered; it will always be remembered by the service men who received its benefits.

The boys and girls of 13 to 21 years who comprise the 200 or more Neighborhood Clubs in Harlem are branching out In the earlier days of the war, they pitched in on such drives as scrap collection, war stamps, civilian defense and other important home-front matters. Now they are going in for acting in a big way.

Recently they produced a highly successful variety show and entertainment for a packed house of servicemen, in collaboration with the Harlem Recreation Center and the Harlem branch of the YWCA. It went over with a bang. The kids have decided to give the same show with elaborations publicly, at the Mecca Temple, 133 W. 55th St., May 7.

The boys and girls insist that the proceeds go to buy special equipment for the Harlem Servicemen's Center, 2348 Seventh Ave. Anything left over will go into the children's own "defense fund" for the Neighborhood Clubs.

These youngsters don't need any hints that Hollywood talent scouts are "in the house" to spur them. They think it's great fun—and their parents agree that it keeps them out of mischief. Most of the club activity, besides acting, is planned by the children themselves.

USO Concentrating Attention on Negro

THE CALL Kansas City Mo

"The Call" Kansas City Mo.

NEW YORK.—(ANP) — Even though USO has been in operation over a year, it is only recently that the care of the Negro on leave has been giving the particularly concentrated attention it is now receiving.

FEB 5 1943

The task of putting into operation an organization the size of USO was so vast and had to be acomplished under such heavy pressure of time that many important matters could not immediately be given the time and attention they required.

Nevertheless, USO had at its very inception a keen sense of responsibility to the Negro servicemen. Among the first policies it drafted was one which reads in part as follows:

"USO services are made available to all members of America's forces and to war workers in certain overburdened areas, as extensively as resources permit in some communities separate for the Negroes are required by law.

In other communities adequate services may be provided in the same facilities. Wherever the camp is located, the USO should endeavor to help the entire community regardless of race, should feel a responsibility to all members of the armed forces located there."

FEB 5 1943

The policy states furthermore that while it is not the primary function of the USO to solve deep-seated problems of race relationship, USO is obligated by the religious heritage of its member agencies to demonstrate respect for human personality, and by its inter-racial and inter-agency character to further tolerance and understanding.

"The Call"

In line with this policy, USO immediately allocated funds for the establishment of the needed number of club houses and units for the primary use of the Negro troops.

FEB 5 1943

Today these operations total approximately 108. The staffs of these centers and the recreational activities in them parallel those in centers used primarily by white troops. One of the newest, located in California, serves as many as 8,000 men a month with an enrollment of some 300 hostesses. As in other clubs of this size, there are facilities for dancing, games, refreshments, reading writing and religious programs.

There is also a special bureau for servicemen's wives to assist them in finding employment. This clubhouse and others of its type gives ample proof of the harmonious relationship possible between such centers and the residents of the community in which they are located.

In its southern clubhouses, USO has provided equally comprehensive programs and in many instances has met with community assistance for exceeding expectations.

FEB 5 1943

The Negro director of a clubhouse in Louisiana has gained local respect to the extent that he now sits on the mayor's committee to deal with any troublesome situations which might arise. This example is not unique. Other communities have adopted similar practises.

FEB 5 1943

Outside of these standard clubhouse provisions made for the Negro, USO also maintains extension services which are established in localities where the number of Negroes is too small to warrant the erection of a separate clubhouse.

FEB 5 1943

In such cases, the private resources of the community are frequently engaged and recreation is provided in local buildings such as schools, gymnasiums, auditoriums and the like.

In those communities where the same facilities are used by both races, the results have been, unfortunately, less happy. A good many factors play a role in the difficulties here, the chief one being that the majority of Negroes do not use these facilities freely.

USO has tried to make it clear to all concerned that these centers are for the use of all members of the armed forces, but to many Negroes this is purely a theoretical privilege. A major part of USO' efforts is now being exerted to rectify this.

All operations in behalf of the Negro serviceman are in the hands of staffs housed at headquarters in New York City. Most of the policies on Negro matters are dictated by an advisory committee headed by the chairman of the Board of directors of USO, and composed of expert representatives of the member agencies: Salvation army, YMCA, YWCA, National Catholic Community service, Jewish Welfare board and National Travelers Aid association.

FEB 5 1943

It is inter-racial in composition, operates with headquarters staff and is at the service of the regional executives throughout the country. A special consultant is employed to insure proper interpretation and execution of all policy decisions. He is steady personal contact with community and clubhouse activities.

The concentration of these two groups is now focused upon enriching the programs in these centers already established and in establishing new ones where needed. Regional staffs have undertaken intensified study and analysis of communities into which Negro troops will be moved, believing that thorough investigation will reveal an increasing number of communities which are agreeable to clubhouses where separation need not be practised. Greater effort is also being made to insure Negro staff participation in all USO staff conferences as well as their representation in USO Councils.

Special attention is also being given to those problems which arise from the use of the same facilities by both races in the conviction that ways may be found by which these facilities can be made more effective for the Negro constituency.

At this writing, the problem is still a very complicated one. Variations in both pace and method which USO must necessarily pursue in different parts of the country make progress slow and uneven. But once all the plans under way become accomplished facts, a major chapter may then be written in the development of tolerance and understanding among all people.

Art, Music, Religion Highlight Negro USO

Columbus, Ga. Ledger
October 12, 1943

BY JANE RAYMOND

A touch of religion meets the eye wherever you look in the USO Army and Navy Negro YMCA, two-story brick building at 841 Fifth avenue—popular with more than 12,000 Negro soldiers on a week-end.

It is in the "spiritual nook" arranged in one corner of the reading room where the walls are covered with mounted paintings, charcoal drawings and pencil sketches by Fort Benning Negro soldiers who developed their art talents at the USO centers; the church directory hanging in the office of E. E. Farley, executive secretary of the center; or the pulpit on the stage in the second floor auditorium where vespers, assemblies, and dances are held.

The "spiritual nook" was designed by Farley. A small book case contains Bibles, and many of the best theological books await meditation. An easy chair sits beside it. Above the bookcase, under a painting of Christ, a poster made by a Negro soldier invites "Come unto me all ye that are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

With 18 years of YMCA work behind him, all dealing with Negro troops at Fort Benning, Farley has contributed much to the fine service given thousands of Negro soldiers and hundreds of civilians participating in the programs of the Columbus Negro USO center.

EMPHASIZE RELIGION

"We have a definite religious emphasis at our center. We believe the best people ought to be found in churches, and do everything we can to encourage church-going and building spiritual values," Farley said.

Bible discussions are held on Sunday mornings, while coffee and doughnuts are served free. Some hundred men regularly leave the center afterwards to attend church services at one of the forty-odd Negro churches of Columbus, Phenix City or Girard. Vespers are held Sunday evenings, conducted by chaplains from Fort Benning, local ministers, or soldiers themselves.

Oftentimes special vesper meetings are held to introduce such visiting speakers as white ministers from Columbus, presidents of Tuskegee or Moorehouse Negro colleges, or talented soldiers from Fort Benning such as First Lieut. Van J. Malone, of the Reception Center, who is now a chaplain.

Noteworthy, besides the obvious religious emphasis, are the inclinations towards other culture. Original paintings by soldiers are well-mounted and decorate the reading room; good books may be seen on the shelves; a piano stands near the center of the room under a good light; well drawn posters announce special coming programs, or rules of the club; a fine library of classical recordings shows much use; books on etiquette, courtesy, and other character-building material are available.

ARTISTS INVITED

Artists, musicians, and writers are invited to speak at the vespers, because there is religion in art.

"All outstanding art has been motivated by Christianity," Farley said.

The USO center must meet the needs of every man, regardless of his background, he added. The Negro soldier at Fort Benning depends upon his USO Center for recreation, more than anything else, because existing facilities for community recreation among the Negroes is inadequate to meet the over-crowded conditions of an army camp town.

Greatest problem of the Columbus center is making limited, cramped space do for a program so varied that every Negro soldier will have a place to feel at home, whether he is one of the 6,000 illiterates stationed at Fort Benning, or a highly trained soldier such as the man who holds a Ph. D. degree, or another who taught English at the University of Paris before the war.

The number of soldiers attending the USO club seems incredible. But by actual count, 1,300 men is the lowest number attending the club on one day since the center was opened July 24, 1941.

Figures taken on a clocking machine, around pay day, ran for one week: Monday, 5,597; Tuesday, 6,983; Wednesday, pay-day, 12,521; Thursday, 3,356; Friday, 2,287; Saturday, 8,066;; and Sunday, 12,554.

Figures taken the week before a pay-day week, when fares for trips into town are scarcer, showed the attendance did not slack, as might be expected.

Cramped conditions of the USO building are reflected conditions of the USO building are reflected in the lack of storing space. Every inch is used. The tiny heat room was turned into a check room. The checking service, of great benefit to soldiers who want a place to leave their cleaning and heavy parcels while they're in town, results in piling things into a closet so full that a warbrobe falls out when the door is opened.

Cold drinks and other stocks for the canteen, formerly stored in the heat room, are thrust out into an alley under a shed-roof. Lacking space for a dark room, necessary for hobbyists interested in photography, Farley enclosed part of the stair-case landing with beaver-board.

Sides of the stage were put on slides, so props, music, costumes and spare lumber might be stored underneath the platform. Sixty-five rolling beds used to rent to soldiers spending the week-end in town, are crammed into a small room, which also serves as the orchestra's store room, with drums base violin and other instruments piled to the ceiling.

FOR BED SPACE

A third floor of an adjoining building, opening into the second floor of the USO center, has been leased for additional bed space. About 75 standing cots, made-up with blankets, sheets and a pillow are available in the extra dormitory. The only closets on the second floor, about the size of a small storeroom, has been turned into officers' quarters and contains four single beds.

Members of the Girls' Service Organization act as hostesses on the Tuesday night dances. An army wives club meets on Wednesday. Other special programs include the poet's corner, photography classes, art classes, indoor and outdoor games scheduled regularly, meeting once a week.

Information, personal counseling, music, radio, popular recordings, writing paper, home hospitality, package wrapping and mailing are other services offered.

Lt.-Col. M. R. Ashworth, former Ledger-Enquirer publisher now serving overseas, was original chairman of the board of directors, of which County Commissioner T. G. Reeves is present chairman. Other directors are Dr. Joseph S. Cook, treasurer, Wilbur Glenn, J. D. Kirven, Rev. H. I. Bearden, John L. Sconiers, Henry Pease; I. C. Moyer, recording secretary; Dr. T. H. Brewer, vice chairman; E. E. Farley, P. L. Taylor, Dr. K.H. Terry, C. W. Marshall, Rev T. W. Smith.

Chester Community Organizations Share Welfare And Recreational Facilities With USO Clubhouse

New York, N. Y.

CHESTER, Pa.—When the large number of Negro industrial workers sent into this city outgrew the only USO clubhouse here, community organizations comprised of many races and faiths promptly offered to share their recreational and welfare facilities. This cooperative program has proved so popular that today the clubhouse, operated by Negro directors, is used mainly as a lounge and operational headquarters while the major part of the services for workers is conducted as a community enterprise.

In the case of dances, for instance, the USO provides for the party but the dances themselves are held at the permanent YWCA building and in the gymnasium or on the outdoor platform of the Federal Housing Project. One dance was held recently at Columbus Center which is owned by the Italian residents, and a monthly rally holds sway at the Synagogue, athough this is for draftees and not industrial workers, but here too the USO is managerial host—in partnership with the Veteran's Aid Society.

The war workers are so pleased to be part of community life, according to William C. Anderson, director of the club, that they reciprocate not only through personal effort but by monetary donation as well. All the posters announcing the dances held at the YWCA are constructed and painted by the workers at the Sun ship plant on their own time, and at the Columbus Center dance, a contribution of $187.50 was made to the USO by the Sun ship workers.

"The USO here hardly seems like a war organization," declared Mr. Anderson, "it has its roots so deep in the community. My associate, Mrs. Alene Briggs Brown, and I have been invited to sit on almost all the city and county social and welfare committees. Currently, Mrs. Brown is also cooperating with the management of the Sun ship plant on a program to combat absenteeism. This program, which has the approval of the War Department, will be put on in the yards and broadcast to all the workers, and possibly over a nation-wide network. It will present the problem from both the management and the labor point of view—each group stating its side and then arguing out a possible solution."

Classes In Sex Education

At the suggestion of the women workers, the USO is also about to institute classes in sex education. There will be two groups, one for boys and girls under sixteen, another for those over that age. This program too will have community assistance. Moving pictures, picnics and games for the children of the some 350 families in Lamokin Village, the Housing Project, are provided regularly by the USO and held on the Project grounds. And classes in art, under the instruction of a volunteer city teacher, are conducted in the USO lounge. Religious discussion groups have also been established. These are more educational than formally religious, with lay citizens leading the discussions.

According to estimates, Chester has grown from about 60,000 people to nearly 100,000 during the war years, and the Negro population has increased from abou' 10,000 to over 20,000 of which almost all are employed in the great shipping plant and other war indusries here.

"With so many people relying on us as the main-spring of all recreational war activity," said Mr. Anderson, our responsibility is a vast one. There is only one way to date in which I feel we have not fully met it and that concerns itself with offsetting the bad influences which naturally spring up in a city of mushroom growth. Although there are 17 Negro churches here — a considerable number — there are some 170 taverns — an even more considerable number. I feel that if the workers were offerred high-class entertainment, they would not frequent these 'hot-spots'.

"I am now working on a plan to bring in name-bands and recognized singers. The community will provide me with the halls, so that space is no consideration. We will charge admission to cover cost and I am certain that most of the workers will be only too happy to support this type of decent entertainment once it is offered to them."

Travelers' Aid Handling Large Increase In Work

Columbia, S. C., Record
October 15, 1943

Total services given by Travelers Aid Societies of the country in 1941 were 808,913; in 1942 there was an increase to 3,398,963, and in the first six months of 1943, 2,398,963. Miss Agnes Anderson, regional field supervisor of Travelers Aid, told members of the board of directors of the Columbia Travelers Aid Society at their regular monthly meeting here.

"These statistics are for local Travelers' Aid Societies and include neither USO Travelers Aid nor Service to Troops in Transit," Miss Anderson said. "In this time of war we are seeing a mobile nation—moving people bringing to each new place their problems and their more positive contributions. This increased mobility is naturally reflected in Travelers Aid services."

While USO Travelers Aid has undertaken to handle cases of men in the armed forces and those directly connected with the war, Miss Anderson pointed out, it is impossible to draw an arbitrary line and say in this total war exactly who is connected with the war and who is not.

Handle Big Increase

In cities where there are neither military forces nor war industries there has been an increase in the services of the Travelers Aid Societies and the local agencies have assumed the responsibility for caring for this increase.

In August in Columbia, Miss Anderson said, the total Travelers Aid services by all the staff and volunteer—USO and local—were 8,029. The USO Unit's chief emphasis was on housing as far as information and direction services were concerned and work with women and girls in difficulty in those cases which required more social planning.

Through USO Travelers Aid, Miss Anderson told the board, a medical social worker has been assigned to work with patients at the venereal treatment center at Pontiac. She assists selected patients to make plans after their treatment is completed and in becoming better adjusted to their situation. Last month around 102 cases were under care.

A Negro Travelers Aid worker for the USO unit has been ap proved, Miss Anderson said. Her duties will be to develop a program for Negroes so that Travelers Aid will be readily available to this group. A few Negro volunteers are already serving. There has also been much discussion of the need for a Service to Troops in Transit program here but as yet no steps have been taken to establish it.

Typical Cases

Miss Anderson, in closing, told two typical case stories given her by Miss Adelaide Philson, executive secretary of the Columbia Travelers Aid Society.

"These services," she said, "will always be needed. The Columbia Travelers Aid Society will remain in the community after the war agencies have gone. It will then be faced with an enlarged program, a public expecting a high quality of service and a mobile nation. We should begin now to prepare for the responsibilities which will undoubtedly be ours."

Mrs. Emmett Madden, president of the society, presided at the meeting. The usual reports and routine business were dispensed with and after Miss Anderson's talk a round table discussion of Travelers Aid problems was held.

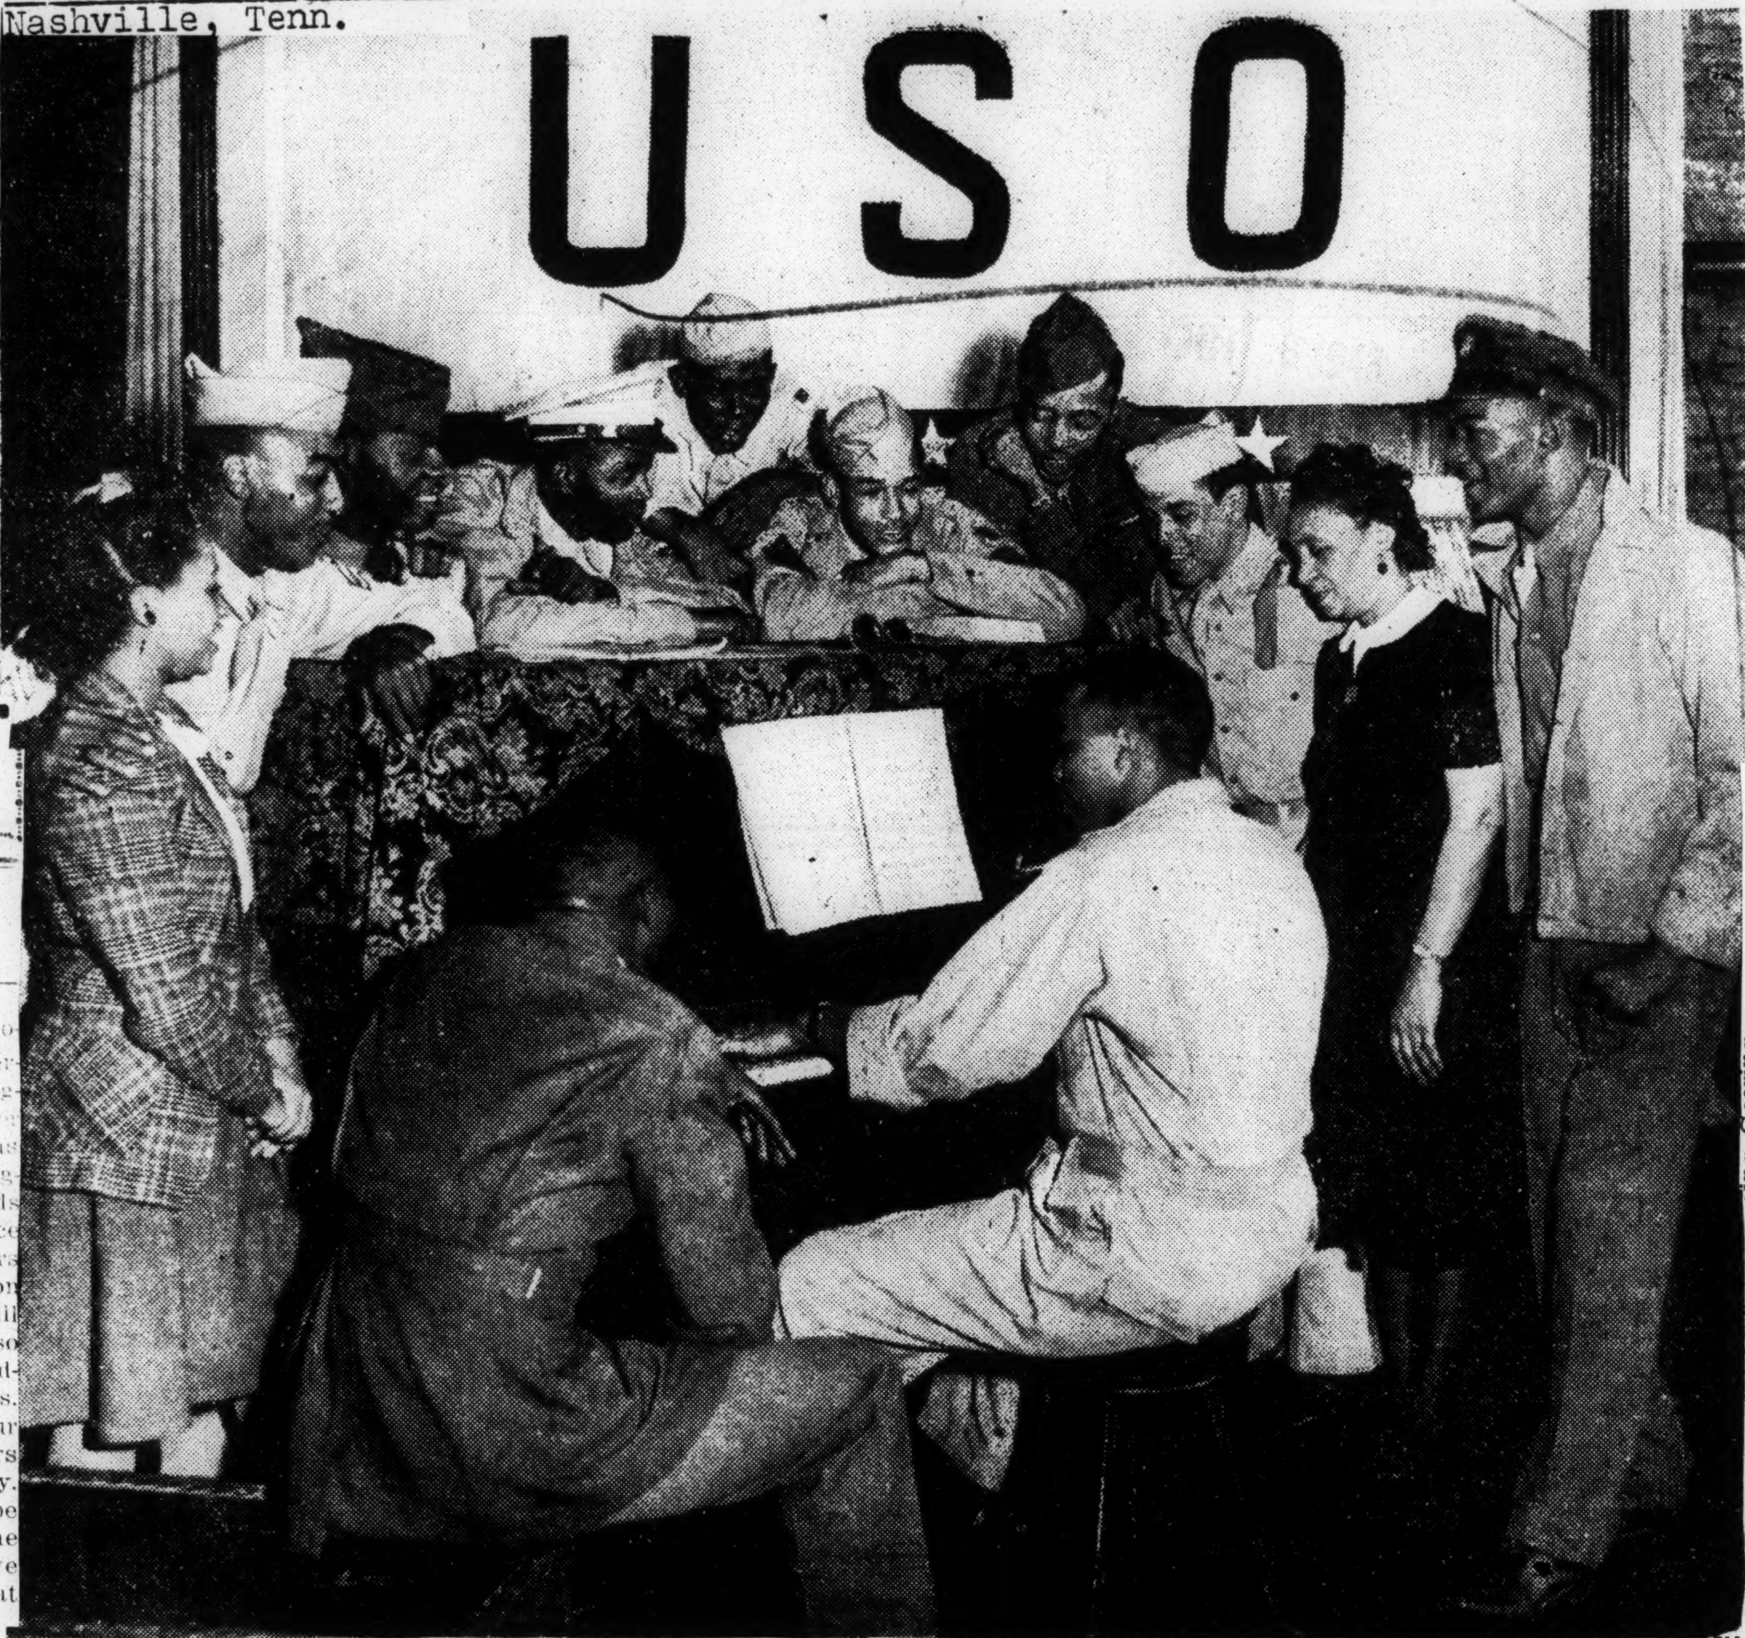
Nashville, Tenn.



The service men's lounge in the Y. M. C. A. building here is filling a great need. Here is a case:

"When a fellow private told me there was an U. S. O. in Nashville, I decided to spend my furlough here," said a handsome P. F. C. from a camp down near the border in Texas.

When questioned as to why he preferred Nashville to his home in Georgia, where his mother, brothers, sisters and sweetheart were, the soldier answered: "When I leave home, it's months before I can get straight again. My mother grieves, and for the longest I can see her tear-bathed face, and it interferes with my work. So I inquired about the lounge set-up here, and upon learning htat there was one, I came. Believe me, I knew what to expect: Competent staff of hostesses who feel and understand the soldiers' problems. I'll say for Nashville that the southern hospitality quite exceeds any I've found yet and the army has kept me moving for 14 months."

Rooms Sought For Families Of Negro Soldiers

Housing facilities for the wives and families of Negro service men coming to this area are being sought by the Jefferson USO room registry.

A total of 25 persons were housed in October, said Mrs. Mary Sowrs, chairman, but 125 more rooms are needed. She praises the cooperation of those who had responded to the demand, and urged that others open their homes to accommodate the many who are moving to this area.

The Jefferson USO program is combined to meeting the housing needs of families of men at Fort Eustis, Camp Hill and Camp Patrick Henry. Persons having rooms to offer may telephone the chairman at 2-2418 or the room registry at 5-1271.

Terminal Station USO Club Will Be Opened Here Shortly

JUL 11 1943

MRS. AUBREY NEAL

MRS KATHRYN SAMPLE

A USO lounge for colored service men will be opened at the Terminal Station at an early date in the future, it was announced last week. The lounge will be used by service men in transit and will be operated by volunteer workers under the supervision of a full time worker with Travelers' Aid, Mrs. Audrey Neal, who is already in the city making preliminary arrangements for the opening. As a worker with Travelers' Aid Mrs. Neal's duties will include the services of that organization for the general colored traveling public as well as service men.

Numerous volunteers have already been secured by the local committee to work on the program and it is hoped that many others will come forward and offer their services. There will be much work of all kinds which require part-time or occasional services of many types of workers and there is a job for everyone who wishes to help this worthy cause along. Persons desiring to do so should register at once with Mrs. Neal, telephone 3-3975.

The lounge itself will be constructed in a portion of the colored waiting room and house the office of the Travelers' Aid representative, lounge chairs, desks for letter writing, and such other conveniences as needed by traveling service men will be available. Volunteer workers will be trained by Mrs. Neal to handle detail duties for short periods of the day as the lounge will be open for long hours in order to render the greatest amount of service. A shortage of workers will of necessity lessen the number of hours in which the lounge can be available and lessen its usefulness and thus the need of numerous workers is apparent. Casework duties in connection with the general situation will occupy most of the full-time worker's time.

Mrs. Neal is well qualified for her work here. A native of New Orleans, she is a graduate of Xavier College of Pharmacy, holds the degree of bachelor of arts from Texas College, and a Master of Arts degree from Atlanta University School of Social Work.

Preparation for Travelers' Aid work was secured at Columbia University. Her experience includes casework with New Orleans Welfare Committee, Emergency Relief Administration, New Orleans Department of Public Welfare and Negro Child Center of Depelchin Home, Houston. She was at one time resident social worker at Fisk University Social Center, and later instructor of Sociology and Child Welfare at Texas College, of Tyler, Texas.

Mrs. Neal has had the assistance of Mrs. Kathryn Sample, field supervisor of National Travelers' Aid, in making preliminary arrangements. Mrs. Sample is a native of Florence, S. C., and a graduate of Benedict and Columbia.

The proposed North Charleston recreation center fo rnegro troops is being certified to the Federal Works agency by the war department as essential to the war effort, Mayor Henry W. Lockwood announced yesterday he had been informed in a telegram from Senator Burnet R. Maybank, who said he is doing everything possible to promote the project.

The recreation center has been urged for several months by negro leaders and by Brigadier General James T. Duke, commanding officer of the port of embarkation, who pointed out that recreational facilities here for negro service men are totally inadequate.

Senator Maybank's telegram was as follows:

"Major Inge, war department, telephoned my office today stating they were writing a letter to FWA advising they consider North Charleston recreation center for colored troops essential to war effort. Rest assured will keep behind officers FWA and will do everything I can to assist."

MILLION COLORED SOLDIERS SERVED BY 118 USO CLUBS

Globe and Independent

Service Men to Benefit From National War Fund Drive

Nashville, Tenn.

Negro Servicemen to Benefit By National War Fund in Combination Drive

NEW YORK—More than a million visits a month are made to the 118 U. S. O. clubs by our men in uniform—to dance, play games, eat, read, write letters, or just to laugh and loaf. And this number includes only those clubs exclusively for Negroes. There is no way of taking count of the thousands more visits that colored servicemen make monthly to clubs in Northern areas which cater to all races.

JUN 1943

Thus spoke Henry W. Pope, consultant for Negro services of the United Service Organizations, in connection with the launching of the first drive of the newly formed National War Fund which is getting under way.

The U. S. O. is one of the sixteen war relief and service organizations which have recently combined their fund-raising activities in the National War Fund to keep things going on the war front, the home front and the United Nations front.

"Negro leadership, together with leadership by other groups, is giving its best to the common task of fortifying the heart and soul of men in uniform," continued Mr. Pope. "Together we seek to achieve victory and a lasting peace to follow this global war."

More than 53,000 persons volunteer their services to the U. S. O., he explained, and it is up to the public to see that these services to our men continue and improve by giving to the National War Fund; for it eliminates duplication, reduces administrative expenses and conserves the energy of community leaders in the huge task of collecting funds for the support of these agencies.

The war agencies participating in the National War Fund, includes besides the U. S. O. (United Service Organization), United Seaman's Service, War Prisoners Aid, Russian War Relief, United China Relief, British War Relief Society, Greek War Relief Association, Polish War Relief, French Relief Fund, United Yugoslav Relief Fund, Belgian War Relief Society, United Czechoslovak Relief Fund, Queen Wilhelmina Fund, Norwegian Relief, Refugees Relief Trustees, U. S. Committee for Care of European children.

COLORED USO ACTIVITIES

Members of the Women's Chorus of Mount Olive Baptist Church, Rev. T. D. Howard, pastor, presented a complimentary musicale before a mixed audience of service men, USO hostesses and visitors on Sunday afternoon. Their offerings varied in nature and found a warm reception from their listeners. Hostess Roy Williams was sponsor for the project. Director R. C. Wallace expressed the gratitude of the staff and USO volunteers for this special service. Other community groups have indicated that they should have to make such presentations from time to time, Wallace said. "Little by little our community is realizing that it has a definite responsibility to our service men which it may serve through the facilities and activities of local USO clubs."

Tonight at 8 o'clock a social hour will be sponsored for service men. Informal games and a community sing will be offered on Tuesday night. Regular game night activities and recordings will be offered on Thursday night.

Junior hostesses and the Girls' Service Organization will hold their weekly meeting on Friday night at 7:30 and 8:30 respectively. Senior hostesses will meet at 4 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon. All hostesses are urged to attend the particular meetings of the groups with which they are affiliated.

A bingo party will be sponsored by the drama and speech committee, under the direction of Mostess H. W. Collins, on Saturday night. Junior hostesses will present a special program Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock, under the direction of Hostess Clara Greenlaw, chairman. The vesper hour, 7 p.m., will be featured with recorded classics.

Members of the Girls' Service Organization and their chaperones, under the supervision of Hostess Prudence Allison, attended a picnic and dance on the post at Camp Campbell, Ky., last Saturday. The affair was one of the most enjoyable of the current outdoor season.

The several hostess organizations operating in Franklin St. USO Club have rendered good service during the year serving effectively to boost the morale of service men, Wallace said. Service wives have been placed in local homes through the room registry service and volunteers have sought to fill their social and recreational needs.

A Men's Service Club is in the process of coming into being to supplement the activities of hostesses in the club. During the week of August 15 a meeting of the men will be held to complete the organization of this group.

Plans are being considered for the formal opening of the new club home on Ninth Street near College early in September. The building is attractive in its appointments and is now awaiting only the finishing touches and the arrival of equipment and furniture.

White Cleric Quotes Mrs. Bethune as Saying Young People 'Won't Take It'

Ga

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y.—The Rev. Theodore C. Bobilin, white, pastor of the Hempstead Methdist Church, spoke at the interracial goodwill services Sunday, arranged by the USO Extension Service, James O. Thomas, director.

JUL 24 1943

"The greatest problem in America today is the race problem. Some think it is food; some armaments, and others, manpower. One of the Allies' greatest victories in this war, to date, is the victory in North Africa. I feel that if we are unable to solve the race problem in America, our loss will be greater than the loss of North Africa would have been to the Allies," the pastor said. He continued:

Colored Race on March

"The battle in our country has been lost in a spiritual way when we permit race riots to exist. That they are countenanced should put grief in the hearts of our people, as would the loss of North Africa. The Christian Church must assert itself and turn the searchlight of publicity upon the whole question.

47e

"Basically, the colored people are on the march; so are the Chinese and the Russians. The Japanese also are on the march, but they are marching in the wrong direction.

JUL 24 1943

Entertains Mrs. Bethune

"Some time ago, I entertained at my house, Mrs. Mary M. Bethune, a very cultured, and nationally known educator. She has a beautiful soul. As we sat around the dinner table, she recounted so many things, inconvenient and embarrassing things that her color had caused her to be subjected to, that I was amazed and shocked—in fact, I wonder how she could have stood them.

"She told me many things about not being able to get a meal in so many places, and in others, that lodgings were out of the question. I asked her how she could stand them. She told me that she was the daughter of a slave, and that she had been taught that way; that she could take it. But, she added, the youngsters of a trio, which she had brought along to entertain us, would not take it.

"The colored man is on the march. Some say he should be kept in his place. I agree with that. The colored man's place is right along side of us, marching together. Let's be honest. There are hoodlums, both black and white, but there are many wonderful examples of successes in the colored race which urge the colored people on. None of us can read the life of that great colored scientist, Dr. George Carver, without being thrilled.

47e

"The very soul of our nation will be lost if we attempt to keep the colored people back. But the struggle can be won if those who think differently will have a lofty faith in one another, and in God. We must have faith and a will to win. We must find what is unique in America.

"Basically, a person is not an American if he does not believe that every individual is entitled, to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. There must be a rebirth of our devotion and love for our country.

Lower Class Will Control

"In America, there is an upper 15 per cent of thinkers, a 15 per cent of low thinkers, and a middle class with little interest in how things go. We need look no further than Germany.

"With all its culture and scientific contributions to civilization, the apathy of the upper class of thinkers made it possible for the lower class to inject its propaganda into the nation. So today, it is under the dominance of a group which has resulted in the destruction of one of the mightiest cultural sanctuaries on earth.

"In the same way, if the upper 15 per cent of thinkers in America, and the middle class are not alert, the lower 15 per cent will dominate and control this nation."

108 USO CLUBS IN U.S. FOR COLORED SOLDIERS

Average Monthly Attendance Is 10,000 Persons Per Club

MAY 1 1943

NEW YORK—(SNS)—Negroes serving their country in the armed forces of the United States enjoy recreational opportunities at 108 special USO clubs throughout the country, Henry W. Pope, consultant for Negro Services at USO national headquarters in New York announced Friday.

"Negroes who have joined the ranks of those fighting to preserve democracy have received the attention of USO from the day of its formation more than two years ago," Mr. Pope said. "As camps for Negro soldiers have increased in size and number, USO has endeavored to meet the needs of the men for leisure-time recreation. To date, 14 per cent of total USO operations is engaged in serving Negroes, and Negroes constitute [illegible] per cent of USO volunteers.

"The latest report for which statistics are available discloses that the total attendance at 108 clubs for Negroes now exceeds 1,000,000 monthly, or an average of about 10,000 per club. This figure includes volunteers and repeat visits of Negro soldiers. In addition, many Negroes make use of other clubs where no separate count is kept.

"Directed by a staff of 132 professionally trained workers, and assisted by a corps of 53,000 volunteers, the programs offer a wide range of activities. Dances and social gatherings of all kinds are held. Movies are popular. Religious programs are also well attended.

"A long list of other activities are reported by the clubs, such as community sings, talent night, music appreciation hour, handicrafts lectures and forums, card parties tall-tales hour, bingo, ping pong and bowling tournaments, camera clubs, quizzacles and many others.

"Taking place in pleasant, homelike surroundings, in the company of volunteer hostesses, all these activities go a long way to help brighten the off-duty hours of these troops, from which they return with freshened spirits to their military duties.

"USO clubs include comfortable lounges, writing rooms with free USO stationery, showers, game rooms, snack bars and social halls. Some clubs have a rent-a-bike service, a free camera loan service, free checking, irons and ironing boards, shoe shine stands and other welcome and handy conveniences.

"An important feature of all USO clubs is information service. More than 67,000 information services were given at 108 USO clubs for these soldiers in a recent month for which full data is at hand. This includes advice on rooms, transportation and 'where to go and how to get there' in the local town.

"Service men often have personal problems about which they wish to consult an older person. The door of the USO club director is always open for this purpose. More than 11,000 soldiers were given personal counsel in the 108 clubs, according to the latest monthly report.

"The report also showed that 24,285 persons were given religious material, 326,986 pieces of USO stationery were used in writing letters home, and that sleeping accommodations were used 5,594 times."

Service Men's Centers Filled Over Week End

Service men's centers supplying free sleeping accommodations to visiting soldiers were jammed to capacity during the week end, although there were beds to spare the preceding week end, a survey today indicated.

Each of the five centers providing free sleeping quarters for white soldiers and one for Negroes reported they were filled to capacity Saturday night and were unable to take care of the soldiers requesting a place to sleep.

Figures on the number of soldiers for whom beds were provided and who called on the service centers for other accommodations will not be available until reports are filed tomorrow with the Service Men's Committee.

The YMCA was filled both Saturday and Sunday nights; the YMHA, which does not operate on Sunday, was jammed Saturday night and about a dozen men were turned away, it was reported. Joe Werthan's Service Men's Center reported a capacity crowd both Saturday and Sunday nights, but said few requests were made that could not be filled. The Salvation Army which maintains 250 free beds at the Masonic Lodge, reported it was filled to capacity on Saturday night only and that a few men were sent elsewhere; and First Presbyterian Church said "quite a few were turned away" after the 150 beds were filled Saturday night.

The Negro YMCA reported it was "overrun" with requests for free beds and that the 100 available were filled.

The Salvation Army reported that all beds have been filled each Saturday night for several weeks, but that few of the soldiers desiring sleeping accommodations were from the maneuver area since regulations permit only a 12-hour pass and require that the soldiers are back in their areas by midnight Saturday.

The Rev. Pickens Johnson, chairman of the Service Men's Committee of the local Defense Council, commented that he "understood that each place providing sleeping space for soldiers was filled during the week end," but added that the committee was powerless to suggest any adjustments until a meeting is held to ascertain whether the need is great enough to arrange additional sleeping quarters. He said he had been told that "very few" soldiers lacked accommodations.

Free sleeping quarters now are being operated in keeping with the plan devised after Lt. Gen. Ben Lear, then commanding the Second Army, set up regulations banning passes other than those for 12 hours, Mr. Johnson said. Regulations specify that overnight passes are granted only when the soldier presents satisfactory evidence to his unit commander that a relative is in Nashville, Mr. Johnson pointed out.

The Service Men's Committee will hold a meeting this week, although a definite date has not been set, to hear reports from the lounges supplying beds for soldiers, he added.

Recreation Is Discussed By Civic Leaders

Though each month 87,000 persons visit the Columbia USO clubhouses and 100,000 are entertained at community and church centers through the city's soldier-civilian program, the need for greater recreation facilities, especially for the teen-age group was disclosed and discussed at a meeting of civic leaders, yesterday morning at the Laurel Street USO building. George A. Buchanan, chairman of the Richland County Council for National Defense, presided.

After hearing a number of speakers representing the viewpoints of welfare, anti-vice, parent-teacher, student, Red Cross, and military organizations, the group voted to adopt the motion of J. W. Duncan to have Mr. Buchanan appoint a committee to study the recreation facilities now available and plan additional entertainment for boys and girls in their teens.

Members of the committee, whose names have not yet been announced, will determine whether it is possible to make more extensive use of the facilities Columbia already has. Leaders hope that some of the centers and clubhouses operated by the city and the USO can be offered to high school students during slack hours.

The meeting was called at the instigation of Clark Brockman, chairman of the Defense Recreation committee, who appealed to parents to encourage their sons and daughters to visit the recreation centers more often.

City Councilman Lott Lawson suggested that the schools be opened in the afternoons and evenings for youth programs. After the meeting, Mr. Lawson said that he intends to bring up this proposal at the meeting of the Columbia School board this week.

The lack of adequate facilities for Negro civilians was emphasized by Everett C. Spurlock, Negro USO director, who explained that although he believed his organization's program for soldiers was satisfactory, there is a need for more recreation for Negro youths.

Brig. Gen. Robert T. Perrin, of the One Hundred and Sixth division at Fort Jackson, complimented the city on the way in which service men are being taken care of. He declared that "Columbia handles the soldier recreation problem better than any town I've ever been in, during my 26 years in the army."

That a large number of girls under 20 suffering from social diseases are being picked up on the city streets was revealed by Edmund S. Farr, chairman of the vice committee. The army, Mr. Farr said, is much farther advanced in its work toward controlling these diseases than civilians here are. "The group we have to watch closest is the group of girls who are between 14 and 18 years old, not paid prostitutes," he explained. "We are making progress at our Pontiac home, where we sometimes care for as many as 160 girls at a time. Ninety per cent of our patients have not had a high school education and 75 per cent of them are married. The home is not a detention school — we have the right to keep the girls there until they are well, under the health law for quarantine."

Other speakers expressed the opinion that many parents are so busy they haven't time for their adolescent children, though they promise themselves that they will make up for their neglect after the war. Some felt that there should be a minimum age limit for girls who wish to attend military dances, and others were concerned over the fact that teen age boys seem to feel left out of entertainment since so much of the recreation offered is for soldiers and their girl friends.

Among those who participated in the talks and panel discussion were the following:

$18.000 Available For Building New Colored USO Unit

The city council, through Councilman S. E. Booth has just completed negotiations for the erection of an $18,000 YMCA-USO recreation hall in the colored quarters for the use of negro soldiers of the bombing range. Funds for the building are furnished through the Federal Works Agency, whose representative W. M. Toms, of Orlando, construction engineer, was here this week completing final details for the project.

Councilman Booth conducted the voluminous and complicated negotiations in securing the property, which is located on three lots across the street from the colored school building. The school board donated the lots to the city in order that the city could sponsor the project, which was a necessary requirement, and apply for a grant of $18,000 for the building. These funds are now available. By agreement the city has agreed to deed back the property to the school board after the close of the war, when the property is deeded back by the government to the city. Councilman Booth has spent two months preparing the voluminous details for the transfer, which entailed the compliation of ten folders of 35 pages each of detail work.

Vincent White, YMCA-USO colored representative has already arrived and has set up temporary quarters in the building formerly known as the Big Apple. White has recently finished training at Columbia University and comes highly recommended as a director.

APR 10 1943

There was much ado around Fort Huachuca last Saturday when its many troops and officers participated in dedication exercises which marked the opening of the new Fry Amusement Center, reputed to be one of the finest of its kind in the nation. Equipped with the most modern facilities and furnishings, its creation was made possible by funds raised by patriotic Negro Americans.

Soldiers Get Taste Of St. Louis' Democracy

Pittsburgh, Pa. Courier

AUG 1943

47c

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 5—It was 97 in the shade July 28. About 2 p. m., approximately 175 travel-weary soldiers poured from an in-bound Eastern train and "fell in." Their two white commanding officers hestitantly surveyed the huge Union station. Finally they espied a USO booth. Timidly approaching the blond girl in the booth, they asked where they could find the USO. The smiling young lady directed them to the municipal auditorium, four blocks to the east. Re-assured. the officers returned to their men and gave the order to march.

Arriving at the beautiful, air-conditioned Service Men's center in the tax-supported municipal auditorium, the company came to a grateful halt. Some of the men sensed something was wrong. Probably the officers did too, for, leaving their men to 'cool their heels' on the sun-baked sidewalk, they entered the club set up for the convenience of Uncle Sam's fighting men. They didn't stay long. They didn't need to. They were okay, but their men were at the "wrong" USO.

SWELTERING HEAT

So, as the temperature rose to a merciless 98, the officers and men again took the streets for the 20-block hike to the "right" USO, at 2809 Washington avenue.

SPLENDID DISCIPLINE

As the boys filed in the building, there was a rush—an orderly rush, however, for a place in front of the huge electric fan. About 50 immediately formed a line at the drinking fountain, demonstrating the wonderful discipline they had learned in the Army.

While this was going on, one of the officers, a Lieutenant Chambers, was again trying to make arrangements for his "boys." This time, though, he was not turned down. Giving the order to be ready to "hit it" at 4:15 p. m. (It was then after 3 p. m. and the station was 16 blocks away) Lieutenant Chambers and Lieutenant Woodson, the other C.O., disappeared. Perhaps a taste of the air-cooled lounge of the "wrong" USO (or the "right" USO, depending upon how you look at it), was too much of a temptation.

SOLDIERS DISPLEASED

At any rate, this reporter circulated among the men, getting their reactions to the shameful treatment they had received. One said, "I could have told the C.O. what was going to happen. My brother was through here not long ago and got the same thing."

Another said, "Sure, it was hot, but our officers said 'march' and march we did."

Said one of the clerks, "We never turn down white soldiers if they come here."

In other words, 175 citizens of the United States, in the uniform of their country, were forced to spend over half of their two hours and 15 minutes stay in this great metropolis of ours, trying to get a drink of water—because their skin happens to be dark.

The men, members of Co. A 8 MRTC (a medical detachment), were enroute to Fort Clark, Texas, from Camp Pickett, Virginia.

New USO Open 'Around Clock' For Servicemen

JUN 19 1943

SHREVEPORT, La., June 17—Although formal opening has been postponed until arrival of Venetian blinds for the windows and other equipment, the Shreveport USO at 1051½ Texas avenue, has been operating 24 hours daily for the past month to provide fun for colored soldiers from nearby Barksdale Field, other Louisiana camps, and those coming here to pass a short time.

The floor space of the USO, directed by Nathan E. Johnson, covers about 9,000 square feet. There are two large rooms filled with big easy chairs, tables and couches. There are ping pong tables, cards and other games. In one of the rooms is a juke-box and a piano and dancing space can readily be cleared.

For those of different inclinations, there is a completely furnished writing room with table and paper and four shelves filled with victory books for the reader. A newspaper rack and magazine shelves contain the latest copies.

A conference room is also provided for the exclusive use of private meetings or musical rehearsals in which entertainers may polish up before making their appearances before the soldiers.

A camera club is in the process of formation and an instructor will be available at certain times to teach the soldiers how to take and develop pictures. A well furnished dark room is already in use. Mrs Johnson, wife of the director, operates a snack bar which serves candy and cokes. A kitchen with stove, refrigerator, and equipment is in back of the club rooms and plans have been made to begin serving meals soon.

HOSTESSES HAND-PICKED

A charm class to instruc girls to be hostesses at the club and a war wives' class are among the clubs which have been initiated at the USO. President of the War Wives' club, designed to provide entertainment for soldiers' wives, is Mrs. John Hardee, wife of the sergeant who directs the band at Barksdale fiield. She is also a USO clerk.

Girls serving as hostesses must make application at the USO and they must be passed on and approved by the house committee before they are accepted. All civilians entering the club must sign their names and make known who they are.

Shower facilities have been installed at the club and Mr. Johnson is urging any one to donate extra cots so that sleeping quarters may be provided for soldiers who wish to stay overnight in Shreveport.

The weekly schedule being worked out calls for movies on Saturday nights and dances at other times with Sergeant Hardee and his Barksdale band providing the music.

The Emerson YMCA's USO center will celebrate the first anniversary of its opening of facilities to servicemen from Great Lakes and Fort Sheridan, Ill., July 17 and 18. During this period more than 4,000 Negro sailors and soldiers have visited the center and enjoyed the hospitality of over 127 senior and junior hostesses who have promoted 1,281 different activities and given over 21,000 hours of volunteer service.

The plans call for three special events in observation of the end of the first year of activities. On Saturday evening, July 17, there will be the anniversary party for servicemen. The hostesses have prepared a grand program for this occasion, and it is expected that all persons participating one or more times during the year will come out to help make merry with our boys. The Women's Defense Corps of America (Fred Hutcherson chapter, Mrs. Elizabeth Croomes, president) will co-operate and be present at this party.

The second event will be an open house at the Emerson YMCA Sunday, July 18, from 4 to 7 o'clock. The community is invited to visit our center and meet the boys who hail from everywhere. All the facilities of the YMCA will be open to the men and the senior and junior hostesses will be present to greet the public and to entertain the men. Wedding Trouble Allayed, Thanks to Negro USO-'YW'

October 13, 1943

JANE RAYMOND

It was a dilemma! A bride enroute and a groom without an idea of how to fix the wedding he was supposed to arrange.

So, the bewildered Negro soldier from Fort Benning rushed into the USO Negro YWCA club, at 936 Fifth avenue, for counsel. Fortunately, the Army Wives club was holding its weekly Wednesday luncheon, and the some 32 women attending turned a sympathetic ear.

With the aid of Frances Penman, USO Negro YWCA director, they took the couple under their wing, and planned the affair, going so far as participating in the wedding themselves.

This is an example of service the club has been doing since the nine-room dwelling house was opened as a USO Negro YWCA center two years ago. Figures, taken at random, show 7,412 services were given during a normal month, and some 9,864 persons served in a "record month."

INDIVIDUAL SERVICE

Special emphasis is placed on service to the individual, although nightly group meetings of some sort for special occasions are held. Individual services, besides information, package wrapping, handling money orders and mailing, include furnishing electric irons and electric sewing machines for soldiers' wives who come into the club to use such appliances. Kitchen privileges are also furnished to army couples who wish to fix a meal.

Some 35 civilians and soldiers regularly attend the "Let's Sing Hour" on Mondays at 8 p. m. Tuesday nights are featured by shorthand and typing classes conducted by Fort Benning soldiers, who regularly instruct about 20 out-of-high-school civilians, WACs and soldiers. It is expected the Thursday and Tuesday morning classes, discontinued during the summer, will be resumed this fall.

ARMY WIVES MEET

Forums and the Army Wives' club meet on Wednesdays.

The army wives hold a luncheon, highlighted by seasonal affairs, such as their approaching Hallowe'en party. Variety is given to the forums by featuring such special programs as the Book Reviews in October. Ten best sellers, both fiction and non-fiction, will be reviewed during October, beginning wtih "Valley of Decision," which will be told by Felix Paul, Boy Scout executive.

Friday and Saturday nights are free of scheduled club meetings. These two week-end nights are kept open for parties and dances. A "Parade of the Spooks", a costume party, and a Hallowe'en festival, to include a weiner roast and dancing, have been planned for two Friday nights in October. Officer candidates from Fort Benning generally participate in the Saturday night dances.

SPENCER PROGRAM

A "Twilight Hour" of vespers at 7 p. m. is customary on Sundays. The Spencer High school band will present a special musical program on October 10, and the Negro WACs from Fort Benning will be featured in another program on Oct. 24, in conjunction with the regular vespers.

Frances Penman, USO Negro YWCA director, of Macon, earned her degree at West Virginia State college. She was assistant director of the USO Negro YWCA at Columbia, S. C., before coming to Columbus over a year ago.

USO Center to Triple Space By Acquisition of Building Adjoining Present Quarters

The Richmond USO Club will more than triple its club space by taking over the three-story building next door at 205-207 East Grace St., Stirling King, chairman of the club's committee of management, announced yesterday after receiving word from Chester I. Barnard, of New York, president of USO, Inc., that arrangements for securing the new quarters had been completed.

Announcement also was made yesterday that a Negro USO Club will be established in what is now the Price Funeral Home building at 212 East Leigh St. At present there is no USO club for Negro servicemen in the city, but Fred H. Townsend, Negro worker, has been carrying on USO activities elsewhere in the city in co-operation with other groups.

Mr. Townsend's office, now located at 201 East Clay St., will be moved to the new club location on March 1, according to Dr. Joseph T. Hill, chairman of the Negro club's committee of management. The funeral home is moving to 210 East Leigh St.

Attendance Increased

Leasing of the additional building for the Richmond club at Second and Grace Streets was necessitated by a steady increase in attendance. Glen F. Thistlethwaite, club director, said the original building, put into operation last Fall, is inadequate to meet the needs.

Present plans call for use of only the first and second floors of the newly acquired building, Mr. Thistlethwaite said. There will be a place for dancing, more showers and lounge-room facilities and emergency sleeping facilities. Because of the increased space available, it will now be possible for the Travelers Aid-USO to set up a desk in the present lounge room offer complete services of its program.

Enlarging of the club will necessitate increasing the USO staff here, and already one additional worker has been authorized but no one has been selected as yet.

The old and new quarters will be connected by an archway. The building just leased, now used as an automobile showroom, is owned by E. W. Newman, of Ashland, and arrangements for renting it were made through Pollard & Bagby, real estate agents. The lease is for the duration.

Work To Be Started

Mr. King said renovation of the building would begin just as soon as the USO comes into possession of the building, but it will be several months before the work will be completed.

Attendance of servicemen at the USO Club was 6,228 in October, 6,282 in November, 23,132 in December and 18,227 in January. The percentage of soldiers, as distinguished from sailors and marines, was 78 per cent in October, 68 per cent in November, 69 per cent in December and 58 per cent in January.

Some indication of the popularity of the club was shown in the fact that at least 200 servicemen visited the place Thursday morning. This is a large number for a week-day morning, Mr. Thistlethwaite said. Peak Saturday load was 4,000 two weeks ago. Recently, the club went on a 24-hour-a-day operation basis.

As to the Negro facilities, the agency has leased the first floor of the Price Funeral Home building, but has an option on the second floor. There will be a room for dancing and other social activities, showers, lounge, reading and writing room and a snack bar. When the club is ready for use, it is expected that other persons will be employed to assist Mr. Townsend.

USO activities for both white and Negro servicemen are carried on under the guidance of the local USO board, headed by William Frazier, as chairman.

The Richmond USO's campaign for funds was held as part of the Richmond War and Community Fund drive last Fall.

COLORED USO OPENS ADDITION

BISHOP O'HARA SPEAKS

Judge Wilkes MacFeeley Makes the Presentation

The dedication of the new addition of the colored USO, 812 West Thirty-sixth street, which is sponsored by the National Catholic Community Service, was held yesterday afternoon with the Most Rev. Gerald P. O'Hara, bishop of the Atlanta-Savannah Diocese, and Judge Wilkes S. MacFeeley, chairman of the Savannah USO Council, as the principal speakers.

In his address to the large numbers which gathered for the dedication program, Bishop O'Hara referred to the time when a world war involving the United States was but a threat.

"At that time, which now seems so remote, instructions were sent to all Catholic parishes within the State of Georgia stating that all halls and possible places of gathering should be placed at the disposal of the members of our country's armed forces," the bishop stated, "and that this should be done without any thought of compensation."

At that time, when nothing nad been done for the recreation of the negro soldier here, a negro morale officer, one of the comparatively few negro soldiers then quartered in this area, approached leaders in this community in an effort to establish a recreation hall here. The officer was then brought by Arthur Floyd, director of the SSSS, to the Rt. Rev. Msgr. P. James McNamara who, with co-operation, immediately established a recreation hall at the St. Mary's School Hall which has since been incorporated in the USO as a National Catholic Community Service designation. From the start success has attained this club, Bishop O'Hara declared.

To those whose work has made possible the successful operation of the club, the bishop extended congratulations. He expressed the hope that all would work harmoniously toward the attainment of that Christian democracy whose philosophy of action is found in our country's Declaration of Independence.

The building was presented by Judge MacFeeley, who summarized the achievements of the USO. In his informative talk he stated that some $50,000,000 has been expended by the USO in providing recreational facilities for our country's armed forces both in the United States and abroad.

"This service has been rendered without distinction of race, color or creed," Judge MacFeeley declared. "A maximum of accomplishment with a minimum of spending has been made possible by over 700,000 volunteer workers assisted by 4,000 professional workers," he stated. These workers are representative of Protestantism, Judaism and Catholicism and most specifically of the six affiliated agencies constituting the USO, he added.

The invocation was pronounced by the Rev. Fr. A. J. Gall, S. M. A., following a prelude by an orchestra from Camp Stewart. Greetings were extended to the newly enlarged club by various Savannahians and civic leaders. Following Bishop O'Hara's address, the benediction was given by an army chaplain. The dedication ceremonies ended after the singing of the National Anthem by the audience.

Dedication Set At Negro USO

New Club Building Plans Open House

A short dedication program, followed by Open House, to which the public is invited, will feature the formal opening of the USO for Negro soldiers this afternoon at 902 Tuscaloosa Avenue.

Maj. Jesse Johnson, judge advocate of Camp Sibert, will deliver the principal address; Mayor J. Herbert Meighan will accept the building on behalf of the City of Gadsden, and the Fourth Regiment RTC band of Camp Sibert will give a 45-minute concert. The program, which begins at 4 o'clock, will be concluded at 6 o'clock, after which Open House will be held until 10 o'clock.

Although still lacking a few items for the convenience and pleasure of the service men, such as Venetian blinds, lending library and a motion picture projector, the building has been modeled according to standards set up by the USO Building Commission in New York, and is comfortable and inviting.

The building, all white, has a stucco front, clapboard sides. The lounge contains tables, reading lamps, smokers and a modern snack bar, where sandwiches, cigarets, soft drinks, ice cream cones and peanuts are sold at modest prices by Rheba Morris, snack bar manager.

The social hall, which is 107 by 40 feet in size, has gleaming hardwood floors, shiny game tables, writing tables with shaded lamps, chairs with seats of simulated leather in ivory, green, canary and brick shades, comfortable upholstered circular divans, smoke stands, ash trays, two pianos, and huge electric fans.

Adjoining the social hall are well-arranged powder rooms for girls, and bathrooms for service men where showers, towels, soaps and razor blades are provided.

Nine thousand service men have visited the club since its opening June 10, E. L. Lipscomb, club director, said, and with only one or two exceptions their behavior has been exemplary.

Varied forms of entertainment are provided at the club, which is open from 10 a. m. until 11:30 p. m. daily. Two dances are given weekly, Camp Sibert companies alternating. A second weekly dance is sponsored by war wives. Other amusement includes games, quiz programs and community singing.

Lipscomb is assisted at the club by L. B. Johnson of Carver High School.

USO TO OPEN CLUB FOR NEGRO TROOPS

McKELVEY-POWELL BUILDING BOUGHT FOR NEW CENTER

Establishment of a new USO club in the McKelvey-Powell building on West Broad street for use of negro service men was announced today by Wilkes S. MacFeeley, president of the Savannah USO Council. The building is now being repaired and the club will be opened in a short time.

The following announcement was made in connection with the opening of the new USO project, which will be operated by the Army-Navy Y. M. C. A. and the USO-Y. W. C. A.

"Inter-racial collaboration in the United States took an important step forward today with an announcement of the establishment of a new USO club here for the use of negro troops.

"A citizens committee for negro social service, organized and incorporated early this year and primarily concerned with the welfare of service men, has suyccessfully consummated plans to purchase and make available a suitable building for a USO-Army-Navy Y. M. C. A. for the benefit of the negro service men.

"In setting up this citizens committee the desires of the negroes themselves was carefully considered and therefore it is in keeping with their wish that the committee be composed of twelve white and twelve negro citizens. By-laws of the organization guarantee the preservation of this balance. The monogram presented in the seal of the corporation, two circles interlocking about a cross, attests the spirit in which the work of the committee is being done.

"Through generous contributions from both colored and white citizens the committee has been able to finance the purchase of the McKelvey-Powell building at 714-716 West Broad street and have it leased to the USO for the duration, plus six months. The USO is now putting the building in suitable repair and expects to have it in service very soon. After the war it will be held for the benefit of negroes in the community.

"In order to make the plans of the committee a reality the negro citizens raised among themselves $3,149. A letter was sent to white citizens known to be interested in meritorious community activities. To date $3,992.59 as been received from 171 white contributors. The committee urges those who have not already done so, to send their checks to Walter S. Scott, treasurer, 460 West Broad street, Savannah. The wholehearted participation of our citizenry is expected.

"The National USO has announced that this club will be operated by the Army-Navy Y. M. C. A. and the USO-Y. W. C. A. A representative of the latter will have an office in the building.

"J. Q. Jefferson, formerly director of the Hinesville USO, has been appointed director of this club. Born and reared in Alabama, he finished Tuskegee Institute, Talladega College and New York University. At New York University, under Chick Meehan, he became an all-America football tackle. He was educational adviser for the CCC camps for six years. Director Jefferson will have an adequate staff technically trained to assist in the development of a well-rounded program, which will include housing, information guidance, counseling, recreation, church relationships, directories and religious meetings as well as travel service.

"The USO-Y. W. C. A. director is Sarah Horry, who finished Agriculture Technical College in Greensboro, N. C. She taught in high school in North and South Carolina and recently came from the NYA project at Chester, S. C., where she was a youth counselor.

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—In a brilliant recital at the Post Theatre Tuskegee Army Flying School on Tuesday evening, Dr. R. Nathaniel Dett assisted by Mrs. Marian Pierce, soprano; Mrs. Gladys Gomez, pianist, both of Tuskegee Institute, and Jewell Smith, baritone, of the Air Base, concluded his work as special music adviser to the USO. The recital was given under the supervision of E. L. Raiford, director of the USO, at Tuskegee.

The program included a number of piano solos from Dett's newly published piano suite entitled "Bible Vignettes" and many of the composer's earlier works that have become world famous.

Other activities of Dr. Dett as music adviser at Tuskegee included two large scale community sings conducted in the Tuskegee Institute chapel in March, which were attended by more than 4,000 persons and which were effective in uniting the spirit of the community with the USO effort.

Another important contribution Dett to the USO program at Tuskegee was the organization of a Community Choir under the leadership of Mrs. F. D. Patterson, chairman of the USO Music Committee. The choir is composed of the best talent in the community and will remain to assist in the local war effort with music renditions.. The Tuskegee Institute Choir, under the direction of Dr. W. L. Dawson, also appeared on both of these programs and were enthusiastically received.

USO TO OPEN CLUB FOR NEGRO TROOPS

McKELVEY-POWELL BUILDING BOUGHT FOR NEW CENTER

Establishment of a new USO club in the McKelvey-Powell building on West Broad street for use of negro service men was announced today by Wilkes S. MacFeeley, president of the Savannah USO Council. The building is now being repaired and the club will be opened in a short time.

The following announcement was made in connection with the opening of the new USO project, which will be operated by the Army-Navy Y. M. C. A. and the USO-Y. W. C. A.

"Inter-racial collaboration in the United States took an important step forward today with an announcement of the establishment of a new USO club here for the use of negro troops.

"A citizens committee for negro social service, organized and incorporated early this year and primarily concerned with the welfare of service men, has suyccessfully consummated plans to purchase and make available a suitable building for a USO-Army-Navy Y. M. C. A. for the benefit of the negro service men.

"In setting up this citizens committee the desires of the negroes themselves was carefully considered and therefore it is in keeping with their wish that the committee be composed of twelve white and twelve negro citizens. By-laws of the organization guarantee the preservation of this balance. The monogram presented in the seal of the corporation, two circles interlocking about a cross, attests the spirit in which the work of the committee is being done.

"Through generous contributions from both colored and white citizens the committee has been able to finance the purchase of the McKelvey-Powell building at 714-716 West Broad street and have it leased to the USO for the duration, plus six months. The USO is now putting the building in suitable repair and expects to have it in service very soon. After the war it will be held for the benefit of negroes in the community.

"In order to make the plans of the committee a reality the negro citizens raised among themselves $3,149. A letter was sent to white citizens known to be interested in meritorious community activities. To date $3,992.59 as been received from 171 white contributors. The committee urges those who have not already done so, to send their checks to Walter S. Scott, treasurer, 460 West Broad street, Savannah. The wholehearted participation of our citizenry is expected.

"The National USO has announced that this club will be operated by the Army-Navy Y. M. C. A. and the USO-Y. W. C. A. A representative of the latter will have an office in the building.

"J. Q. Jefferson, formerly director of the Hinesville USO, has been appointed director of this club. Born and reared in Alabama, he finished Tuskegee Institute, Talladega College and New York University. At New York University, under Chick Meehan, he became an all-America football tackle. He was educational adviser for the CCC camps for six years. Director Jefferson will have an adequate staff technically trained to assist in the development of a well-rounded program, which will include housing, information guidance, counseling recreation, church relationships, directories and religious meetings as well as travel service.

"The USO-Y. W. C. A. director is Sarah Horry, who finished Agriculture Technical College in Greensboro, N. C. She taught in high school in North and South Carolina and recently came from the NYA project at Chester, S. C., where she was a youth counselor.

Negro U.S.O. Hall O.K.'d., Site Studied

The FWA regional office at Atlanta has wired Mayor William Kleeman that an allotment of $18,000 for a Negro USO building in Clarksville has been approved.

A committee from the City Council and one from the colored citizens USO committee are now studying a number of sites. The City Council has voted to purchase the site for the building which will be of permanent construction. The building will be located in the neighborhood of Burt High School, Mayor Kleeman said.

Work should start on the project within 30 days, it was stated. At present a building on Franklin Street is being used temporarily for colored soldiers' activities under the direction of the USO. A colored USO director has already arrived in Clarksville and is in charge of the programs.

It was also revealed that architectural plans are already being drawn for the new health center to be erected on Main Street just west of Fourth. The architectural contract has been let to Speight & Hibbs and Wilson, Bell & Watkins. Mayor Kleeman said work on this project may start within two weeks. The health center building will be of a permanent type and will cost approximately $40,000. Its exterior appearance will be similar to the new USO building under construction on Main Street east of the McGregor Bros. warehouse.

The city is providing the site and the Government is paying for the construction. The center will be used by the Montgomery County Health Department which is now located in the courthouse basement.

Colored USO Work Going On

With the arrival of a duly authorized director from the National Office of the USO, plans are underway for increased activities at the colored club at 1040 Franklin Street.

Director R. C. Wallace comes to this work with considerable experience with various social agencies. Until recently he was employed with the Tennessee Valley Authority at Knoxville and and has just finished his initial course for USO directors in New York City.

It is his hope that local social agencies and civic groups as well as individuals will lend cooperative efforts to put over an effective program for the men in the armed services.

Contacts have been made with Mayor William Kleeman, Prof. V C. Moffitt and directors of local USO units as well as several camp officials, who have expressed commendation for the official recognition by USO for the activities sponsored by the citizens of Clarksville.

The public is invited to cooperate and participate in the program sponsored for the soldiers at all times.

Colored USO Hall Is Given FWA Approval

Approval of the Federal Works Agency of the colored USO buildining in Clarksville assures construction of the project, in the opinion of Mayor William Kleeman. Last week the military disapproved the hall and for some time it was believed the project had fallen through.

Mayor Kleeman and City Attorney Charles V. Runyon contacted Senator McKellar and it was learned today that the FWA had definitely approved its construction. The hall and lot on which it will be constructed will cost about $18,000.

While the city has not yet purchased a lot for the building, it was learned today that an option had been obtained on a lot on Ninth Street between College and Main. This lot is likely to be purchased.

FUNDS APPROVED FOR RECREATION

$48,000 For Negro U. S. O. Unit—$75,000 Allotted Job North of City

Telegrams from Senator Burnet R. Maybank and Representative L. Mendel Rivers last night announced that action of President Roosevelt yesterday completed Federal Works administration approval for two recreational building projects here totalling $123,000.

One of the projects is a $48,000 negro U. S. O. unit at Frasier field, in President street, backed by Mayor Henry W. Lockwood and Colonel James T. Duke, commanding officer of the Port of Embarkation, in a drive begun last summer. The other is a $75,000 recreational project for both negro and white troops to be located in the North Charleston area.

Messages reporting approval of the Frasier field unit were sent by Representative Rivers to Mayor Lockwood and to Frederick H. McDonald, chairman of the new Community Development council which in the last few days took action in the matter on behalf of the mayor, following an appeal by a delegation of negro leaders. William L. Califf, North Charleston druggist and civic leader, was notified of approval of the unit there by Rivers.

Colonel Duke Pleased

Senator Maybank also wired Mayor Lockwood of the action taken on the two projects.

Colonel Duke, who was active in reviving efforts to obtain the negro U. S. O. here, said he was greatly pleased at the approval, declaring the project would provide recreation for the negro troops under his command, and do a good deal to help relationships here.

Mayor Lockwood expressed gratification and said he hoped work would begin soon on the negro project, for which the city has donated the site. He thanked all organizations which have worked to obtain this end.

Both Mr. McDonald and Colonel Duke emphasized the need for such a program, since there are now virtually no recreational facilities here for negro troops. The site donated is near Burke Industral school, and already has a swmmng pool and other provsons.

Colonel Duke sad priorities and other difficulties hindered approval for many months, and that the way was finally smoothed when the grant of two large buildings at the Santee-Cooper project, used during construction work there, was obtained. Material in these buildings, the colonel said, will be used in the U. S. O. project, which will be of frame structure.

North Charleston Move

He reported that the move for a North Charleston center is of more recent origin, and said he did not know definitely what site would be chosen. The intention is to provide recreation for both white and negro, he declared, and added that taking over of the Berkeley Jungles club had been suggested.

Senator Maybank's telegram was as follows:

"F. W. A. advises approval of project 38-143, recreation facilities at North Charleston, estimated cost $75,000; also approved project 38-208, recreation facilities, city of Charleston, estimated cost $48,000".

Representative Rivers wired:

"It affords me great pleasure to advise you the president today approved the negro recreation center for Charleston in the amount of $48,000. I feel certain this will mean a great deal to the well-being of our community".

DAY ROOM FOR NEGROES

Quartermaster Battalion Has Recreation Place

Presentation of a completely furnished day room of the negro quartermaster battalion was made formally to the commanding officer of the battalion, Lieutenant Colonel C. Heartfield, Tuesday afternoon by representatives of the American Red Cross camp and hospital council and other contributing organizations, it was announced yesterday.

The council, under the direction of Charles E. Cozad, Red Cross field director, and his assistant, Ben Irwin, was able to secure the interest of the International Laborers union and its business agent, E. B. Radford, in addition to the Avery Institute in furnishing the room. Participating in the presentation Tuesday were William Blueford, representing the union; J. Howard Bennett, of Avery Institute and the Rev. Caesar S. Ledbetter, of the negro Plymouth Congregational church. Serving as liaison man in arranging the details of the project was Ray O. Burks, Red Cross assistant field director, covering the first staging area of the Port of Embarkation.

Mr. Cozad said that the drive for funds for the furnishing of the room was so successful that it will continue as long as there are demands made instead of expiring January 1, as originally planned.

Commended by officers as one of the best means possible of keeping the men's morale high, the day room offers recreational facilities of all types to negro soldiers. The officers said much was owed the Red Cross council and negro organizations that are helping them solve "what could become a tough problem".

SERVICE CENTER PROVIDED COLORED

Plans Under Way to Expand Facilities Greatly

There is a center for colored soldiers operated by and under the general supervision of the Savannah Social Service for Soldiers located on the corner of 37th street and Ogeechee Road.

The center is open seven days each week, from early in the morning until late at night.

Service men in the armed forces are welcome at all times. During one week in December the SSSS colored center entertained and served 1,552 soldiers. During the month of December 2,855 soldiers were served through the SSSS center, and 897 women of Savannah were at the center during the month to help make it pleasant for the soldiers.

Colored people in Chatham county have contributed a total of $650.00 as their share toward the entertainment of negro soldiers. Forty volunteer workers contributed their labor towards serving the soldiers.

There are accommodations for sleeping for only six men, but according to Fred A. Davis, general chairman of the SSSS for Savannah and Chatham county, adequate sleeping accommodations will be made for soldiers from Camp Stewart and the air base in the immediate future. Plans call for a large social union room that will accommodate several hundred soldiers at one time. Sleeping quarters for several hundred men are being planned. Arrangements are being made for games including basketball, volley ball, tennis, and many of the indoor games.

One colored soldier speaking recently of the service at the colored SSSS center stated, "We are proud of the SSSS center." It is always clean, the people on the staff are courteous and anxious to serve.

Every effort is being made by the general committee of the SSSS to serve colored soldiers in the same way that other soldiers are being served in this and in other areas.

Negro Service Club Formed At Aiken

AIKEN, Jan. 29.—A community service club for the Negro members of the armed services has been formed in Aiken and already the success of the club appears assured.

The club is a project of the Negro citizens organized and operated by them with technical advice and assistance from the OCD.

The club is located in a two-story stucco building on York street, which through the cooperation of Edward Hill and the Ball family was furnished, rent free, for a month. Now that its success is evident, the community committee has leased the building. Plans are underway to paint the interior, plant shrubbery in the yard and add to the furnishings. Already paint has been donated for the kitchen and three painters gave an evening's time to do the work.

Curtains have been made, some china bought and the kitchen has been made very attractive. It is planned to do each room as there is opportunity.

The advisory committee is headed by A. D. Smith as chairman and the Rev. Cleveland as secretary. R. A. Brooks is chairman of the executive committee with C. C. Johnson as secretary and M. Drass treasurer. C. Treadwell, A. B. Kessels, F. McPhearson and W. Cummings form the housekeeping committee with W. Cummings as chairman. G. Eubanks is chairman of the canteen committee.

Recreation Need for Negro Soldiers Here Held Urgent

Action on behalf of Mayor Henry W. Lockwood to relieve a critical lack of recreational facilities for negro service men in this area is being taken, it was reported yesterday by Frederick H. McDonald, chairman of the new comprehensive Community Development council.

Mr. McDonald said council authorities were visited yesterday by a delegation of six negro leaders headed by L. H. Bennett, director of the Avery institute, asking that efforts be made to carry out plans begun last summer for a negro U. S. O. unit on Frazier field, near the Gadsden Green housing project.

Investigation brought out that there is almost a total absence of recreational facilities for negro troops, who are pouring into the Port of Embarkation here in increasing numbers, Mr. McDonald said.

The critical need, he declared, is pointedly illustrated by the fact that the only organization providing entertainment for negro service men is the colored Y. W. C. A. at 106 Coming street, and this unit, which consists of only two rooms, is visited each month by 14,000 to 15,000 negro service men.

This average of of around 500 a day necessarily means that no adequate program can be provided, and also means that the original barly-needed work of the Y. W. C. A. unit, with negro women, has been completely wrecked, Mr. McDonald said.

At the instigation of Mayor Lockwood, an appropriation for a negro U. S. O. at Frazier field was made last summer by the city council, and Frazier field made ready for the donation of building space, Mr. McDonald stated. Plans and specifications for a development to

Bystander

MAR 12 1943

Des Moines, Iowa

St John's auditorium at Harding Road and University was a gay festival hall on Tuesday evening, when 2,000 of colored and white members of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, and service men donned colorful carnival caps, threw paper streamers, danced, ate refreshments and made much merriment at the Mardi Gras which was sponsored by the Locust Street and Keo-Way USO and the Catholic Action girls.

For the first time many of the women and soldiers from southern parts of the country had opportunities to meet their colored WAAC sisters in a social way, exchange friendly greetings, and intermingle. Some danced. Some held heckled dancing couples. Some got in groups on the sidelines and gave cheers, sang state and army songs.

Slim Davis and his orchestra kept the rhythym of the evening at a moving pace as jitterbugs vied for applause. As master of ceremonies, the band leader, started the program as planned by the USO committees.

Parade of Soloists

Miss Blanch Manuel of the USO Junior Service group, started the parade of songsters which was soon taken over by WAAC soloists. Following Miss Manuel as programmed was Mr. Everett Mays, baritone. Then the WAACs took over, volunteering to do impromptu numbers. In the group were favorites of various white companies, Auxiliary Florence Mone, Auxiliary Reatha Moore and Auxiliary Reta Roebuck. They got a big hand from the entire group

Long lines of women and men waiting to gain admittance to the fortune-telling booth which was kept busy all evening. Other lines of WAACs and soldiers waited for the refreshments—the sandwiches, doughnuts, coffee. Peanuts were plentiful.

Committees of the USOs, the Junior Service Groups, the Catholic Action Groups were kept busy all evening seeing that the women and men and guests of the Mardi Gras were entertained in proper style.

Heading the committee as chairman was Miss Alma M. Priesley, originally from New Orleans, where Mardi Gras, is a favorite celebration. She is USO director at the Keo-Way USO for the National Catholic Community Service.

MAR 12 1943

Committee chairmen were: Mesdames Mattie Scott and Josn Sullivan, refreshments; Mrs. Helena Elliston, decorations; Mrs J. B. Morris, costumes, assisted by members of the Junior Service group; Mrs. I. Cushingberry, in charge of check stand.

Servicemen "Welcome For Free" at Canteen

JUN 26 1943

In case there are any men in uniform who are stationed in or around New York City, or who will be passing through this section on furlough or leave, and have not been to or heard about the democratic hospitality being dished out at the Stage Door Canteen, should make it their business to visit this spot which is located on the south side of 44th st between 7th and 8th aves.

The Canteen is open to service men only, with nothing required of them but to show their identification. This is the one place where Negro boys need have no fear of feeling out of place or not wanted. The canteen is making a very special bid for the colored boys.

The American Theatre Wing, which is responsible for the founding of this and other canteens, is keenly aware of the discrimination which our boys face and for this reason wants it distainctly understood that at the Stage Door Canteen, all men in uniform, regardless of race or nationality, are welcome. It is their canteen.

At 5 every evening, the doors are opened and remain open until midnight. Dinner is served if wanted until 6 or 7. After that, milk, coffee, cake etc., are available. Hand-picked young ladies, both white and colored, act as hostesses. The finest entertainment of stage screen and radio is provided. All the big name bands swing in and out of the place to the delight of the boys. No less a person than Katherine Hepburn or some other big name may be the waitress.

There is a big birthday cake available each night for the man whose birthday it happens to be.

While at the canteen the other night, I talked to a young Chinese boy, Sgt. Victor C. Young who is attached to the Air Corp at Camp Kilmer. He turned out to be the youngster who played Charlie Chan's son in the series of movies, "Charlie Chan." He has been in the army for five months.

JUN 26 1943

When I remarked that he was about ready to see combat duty he enthusiastically answered "You bet, I am. I'm rarin' to go."

An English gunner says America is tops, 100%. He nexer knew anything existed like the canteen.

Three Mexican boys in the US Army were seeing the canteen for the first time as were many Negro boys in the Army and Navy. One, Pvt. Woodrow Bailey, (colored) had been a member of the army show, "This Is The Army," and is now stationed in Jersey.

This is the Stage Door Canteen, everything free to all service men.

Negro Recreation Center Now Open

Through the efforts of Mort Levin, when he was commander of Florence Post No. 11, American Legion, a recreation center was established for the negroes on the corner of Sweetwater and Seminary streets, that has been of great benefit and pleasure to service men and industrial workers.

The center was established on June 10th and opened with an entertainment and since that time two other social affairs have been staged, all of which were well attended by service.

Mr. Levin has plans to keep the center open as a drop-in center, and when it is more widely known that volunteer help is needed, it will be supplied, for in other war efforts the negroes have not only done their share, but been outstanding in their efforts. Mr. Levin is not asking for financial aid, but he does want cooperation and work to put over the project successfully.

Negro USO Center To Be Ready Soon

A new USO Center for negro soldiers and sailors will be opened in the old three-story S. C. Toof home at the northeast corner of South Lauderdale and Linden in about two weeks, C. R. Lawrence, executive secretary of the negro Y. M. C. A., said yesterday. Sept. 8, 43

Contractors have promised to have the first floor of the old Memphis landmark remodeled about Sept. 20. The first two floors of the old 22-room mansion will be used for recreational activities and the third floor will be used for sleeping quarters.

The building is being remodeled at a cost of about $10,000 and will be the home of the Y. M. C. A. after the war.

Mayor Hardy, Colonel Markey, Others Take Part

Blackstone, Va. Courier-Record

July 2, 1943

The dedication of the recently constructed Federal Recreation Building, a USO-YMCA operation for Negro soldiers of Camp Pickett, was held Sunday, June 27, at 3 p. m.

Dr. John M. Gandy, President Emeritus of Virginia State College delivered the principal address, while the M.R.T.C. Band No. 2 rendered music for the occasion.

The exercises began promptly at 3 o'clock with a 15-minute prelude by the band. This period marked the arrival of the many dignitaries of State and National prominence.

Dr. Gandy, who was presented by Club Director W. A. Brown, outlined the history of USO in Blackstone, and stressed the functions and importance of USO Clubs in general. "The USO provides good and wholesome recreation for soldiers", said Dr. Gandy. He further admonished the servicemen to take advantage of all opportunities being offered them by membership in the armed forces. High tribute was paid to FWA, FSA and USO for their joint efforts in providing this worthwhile club for servicemen.

Hon. Rieves Hardy, Mayor of the town of Blackstone welcomed the club to the town and spoke highly of director W. A. Brown whom he praised for cooperation with town officials. Mayor Hardy assured all that the two would continue in any way possible the noble effort of USO.

The very impressive key passing ceremony was begun by Mr. Henry Brooks of F.W.A. Mr. Brooks stated that six such buildings had been dedicated in the state for Negro Service men. He stated also that is was his belief that Federal Funds could be used for no better purpose than to construct buildings for entertainment of our soldiers. Mr. Brooks passed the key to Mr. John Neasmith of FSA who spoke on the role of the community in this project for soldiers. He expressed the fact that soldiers when they are free often come into town thus USO Clubs have excellent opportunity for providing them with entertainment. Mr. Robert Wilson of USO accepted the key from Mr. Neasmith and passed it to Mr. Kenneth Dale, regional supervisor Y.M.C.A. Mr. Dale passed it to Rev. W. H. Winston, Chairman of Management Committee of Dillard Street USO.

Miss Mary Hardy, chairman of the Blackstone Defense Recreation Committee brought greetings and congratulations from Governor Colgate Darden who expressed regrets that he was unable to attend.

Colonel D. John Markey, Post Commander at Camp Pickett, climaxed the program with an excellent speech expressing appreciation for the excellent work of USO Clubs in Blackstone. He expressed the desire that volunteers would assist in USO programs so that a greater number of people would feel a part of the great war effort. Colonel Markey paid tribute to Negro outfits, organizations and individuals of the Post; namely, MRTC Band No. 2, Firemen, MRTC divisions of 2nd Army, Chaplain McLaughlin and Lieutenant Oliver.

Other platform guests were the Rev. Mr. F. C. Hawkins and Dr. T. C. Bradshaw of Blackstone.

After the exercises the Danville Drum and Bugle Corps gave a demonstration of military drills on the lawn of the Club.

Volunteers serving as hostesses for the occasion were Mesdames Ethel Edmonds, Hazel Royal, Martha Austin, Belle Stokes, Margaret Collier, W. H. Winston, Sarah Fitzgerald, Martha Overby, Ethel Curl, and Florence Brown.

Some two dozen colored service men are now stationed in the Fort Pierce area. These young men need some sort of attention and the Rev. S. D. Thom, pastor of the Goodwill Presbyterian church, is now working out a plan for recreation for this group of service men. He has formulated a committee and this group has rented a room at 1208 Avenue D, cleaned and refinished it and now seek some furniture that this small club may be opened. Mrs. Clifton Davis, president of the American Legion Auxiliary, will present this need for furniture to the Legion and if that body will recognize this effort as proper and correct, Mrs. Davis will work with her group and other groups to secure such furniture as needed for the temporary effort for these colored service men.

Dick Campbell Is The Right Man

JUN 5 1943

Dick Campbell, actor, producer, playwright, director, concert manager and all points theatrical, has just been made Negro Production Manager of the USO Camp Shows, Inc. He will take up where Noble Sissle left off because the bandleader has had to relinquish his responsibilities because of an extended tour of his orchestra through the west.

Sissle himself and Judge Hubert T. Delany encouraged the appointment of Campbell and the entire Negro theatrical profession seconded it. Everyone who knows the man has respect for his fundamental honesty and fearlessness.

There are more than a few sore spots in the Camp Shows setup as it effects the Negro performer. Not much of it has been brought to the front and it has looked as if not much of it would ever be adjusted.

But what has been poking up like a scared rabbit's ear was the fact that too few, oh, too few, colored units had been called upon to tour the Army circuit. And another thing, there has been no colored unit to go overseas. As you have probably read, there are a batch of Negro soldiers out there. Those fellows are hungry for the kind of entertainment that a group of their own can give them. Not to mention what it would mean to them just to have some of the home folks around for a while.

Camp Show' Inc., has announced that they are planning to send out 12 new units for the summer and early fall season. At this time, they say, they don't have any idea what these units will be or who will comprise them. And we wonder: will there be any Negro outfits among the 12?

Dick Campbell is at the helm now and he, too, is wondering. But he is in a position to wonder loudly and strongly. They've got to hear us wonder, now. And Campbell isn't the man to be a figurehead with a great long title and a big wide smile for all comers. He's a tough man behind a cause. Besides a firm will, a genuine love for the theatre and a desire to see Negroes partake more fully of the fruits of the theatre, Campbell knows his business from the ground up.

Some years ago he organized the Rose McClendon Players. His objectives were many, but primarily he wanted an outlet for the hundreds of untried Negro actors, playwrights and stage mechanics. He did not ask that they be over-loaded with talent, but he insisted that the basic will and interest be there. The Rose McClendon Players thrived for many seasons, putting on at least a dozen highly credible productions. The Players are inactive at the present time but they are by no means a thing of the past.

About two months ago Campbell was appointed representative of Negro Theatres in the War Council Commission of Educational and Community Theatres. This program was initiated at the National Theatre Conference in March.

He Knows His Way Around

Since 1928 Campbell has been seen on Broadway in "Cabin in the Sky," "Mamba's Daughter," "Native Son" and other legitimate shows plus countless radio productions. You see, he knows what he's going to talk about.

As a concert manager, Campbell's most successful venture has been handling the career of his wife, Muriel Rahn, the sensational young dramatic soprano. She, incidentally, has just completed a cross country concert tour which followed her lengthy engagement with the Broadway hit, "The Pirate," starring those perennial favorites of the theatre, Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne.

The Negro theatre and the USO couldn't have a better man to champion a cause and to highlight the character of a people. Dick Campbell should clear up what has been threatening to be a messy situation. With any kind of cooperation from the Negro theatre and the USO, he can do it. The man doesn't compromise on principle and he seeks fairness and enlightenment with a fervor.

The best of luck, Dick Campbell.

Coach Adkins Accepts USO Post-Is Granted A Leave

Atlanta, Georgia Daily World

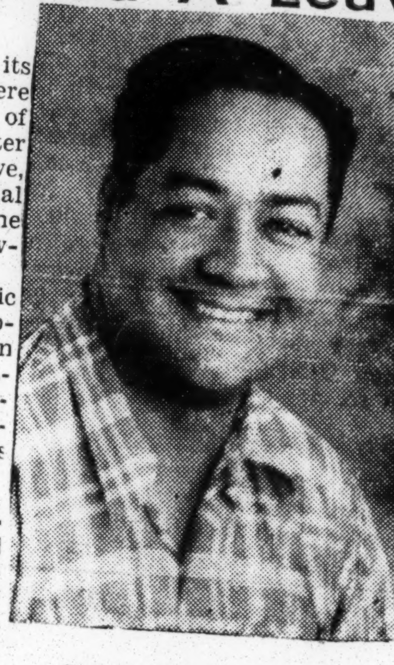
JUL 6 1943

The nationally known athletic director of LeMoyne last week, upon his request from the American Missionary Association, was granted a leave of absence for the duration to engage in physical educational work for the United States Service Organization.



Coach JACK ADKINS

Coach Adkins, in becoming identified with the USO, has joined company with many of his distinguished contemporaries in the coaching field, notably Coaches William (Big) Bell, of Florida A. and M; Forbes, of Morehouse; Kendall, of Talladega; Hawkins, of Knoxville; Nicks, of Morris Brown; and Ralph Metcalfe, of Xavier.

Selective Service began having telling effect upon enrollment of male students at these colleges two years ago, and in 1942 many colleges voted to suspend football. LeMoyne College suspended football during the spring of 1942, substituting in its place intra-mural activities.

Jack Adkins pioneered the Memphis field as a football coach.

With this victory and others as comparatively outstanding during the next two sessions, the LeMoyne Yellow Jackets were called the "Wonder Team." With the smashing defeat of Morehouse College in 1937, sports writers of the Scott Newspaper Syndicate gave LeMoyne football aggregation its present game. "The Mad Magicians."

"I saw Jack Adkins every day for ten years and never saw him or knew of him doing anything unworthy or irregular in words or deeds."

Recognized as a sports authority, Coach Adkins was called upon frequently to referee games, settle disputes, and in 1937 he was invited to serve as a sports radio commentator over the Blue networks via WMPS, a position he held for one year. He also served two terms as president of the Southern Coaches and Officials Association.

Coach Adkins, while establishing an enviable record for himself and college as athletic director, kept abreast with his academic work. He received his B. A. Degree at Fisk University and his Master's Degree from Ohio State.

A native of Tennille, Ga., "a town of about one thousand souls as Coach Adkins said in reflection, he came to Tennessee during his early manhood to start his college career, and remained in this state until accepting his present post. When asked to comment upon his leaving the institution where for seventeen years he had helped to shape the lives of scores of young men as he taught them team work, self-defense, and techniques of overcoming obstacles in the achievement of an objective, he said:—

"You know the story of 'Old Grover Alexander, of the St. Louis Cards. When he pitched his last major game, he looked at his watch, and told his teammates:—My time is up."

Coach Nicks Granted Leave For Position With Y.M.C.A. Uso

Daily World

JUL 5 Atlanta. Georgia

BY JOEL W. SMITH

William J. Nicks, head coach at Morris Brown College has been granted a leave of absence to take a position with the YMCA-USO, and left the Gate City this week for New York, where he will spend three weeks in the Training Institute.

JUL 5 1943

After this brief training period, Coach Nicks will be assigned regular duties in the southern area and at the termination of his work with the USO, he will resume his coaching duties at Morris Brown College.

Nicks took the coaching duties at Morris Brown in 1930, and since that time has not only become recognized as one of the leading mentors in SIAC circles but throughout the country as well. He was on "leave" in 1937 and 1940, doing advance work, during which time A. J. Lockhart, Director of Athletics, and Artis P. Graves, assistant cach in charge.

Nicks has been very successful as a coach, winning a total of 68 games (football); against 20 lost and 10 ti[illegible] W[illegible]nes won the city [illegible] championship in 1930 and 1931; the city basketball crown five straight years, 1931-35; and annexed the conference cage title in 1932.

The highlights of Nicks' coaching career came in 1933, when the Wolverines toppled the Wiley Wildcats to vie for the mythical national championships; and in the colorful victory over the powerful Virginia State Trojans in the Peach Bowl Clasic. In spite of this fact, there is no doubt in the writer's mind, that the happiest moment in his entire career was the stunning upset administered the Florida A and M Rattlers in 1941.

Nicks-coached teams have annexed two conference football titles, 1934 and 1941, and have allways made a fine showing in the SIAC basketball tournaments. The Wolverines have been consistent winners in intercollegiate golf and have also made a creditable showing in the SIAC Track and Field meets and Tuskegee Relay Carnivals. He developed a brilliant array of all-Aremican stars and is well-liked by both players and coaches, throughout the country.

Coach Nicks is a native of Griffin, Georgia, and graduated from Morris Brown College in 1928. Since that time he has done graduate work at Ohio State University, and Teachers' College, Columbia University, where he earned the degree of master of physical education in 1940.

According to A. J. Lockhart, Athletic Director, the future of football at the college for the 'duration' will depend on the manpower available.

JUL 24 1943

JUL 24 1943

The presentations were made by Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune, president of the National Council of Negro Women and director of Negro Affairs for the National Youth Administration. Dr. Bethune expressed pride in the fact that young women today are accepting their responsibilities to the war effort and urged the graduates to approach their duties in this manner.

The 152 graduates raised to more than 7,000 the number of white and Negro Junior Hostesses who have completed 10-hour training courses in the District of Columbia. Calling attention to this fact, Miss Mabel R. Cook, area representative of the National USO, reminded the graduates that their work afforded them one of the last opportunities to send the soldiers to war with memories which they could cherish throughout the grim task which faces them.

Mrs. Adelaide Smith, USO Committee chairman at the Phyllis Wheatley "Y", presided, and Mrs. Julia West Hamilton, president of the branch, presented corsages to Dr. Bethune and Miss Cook. The "Pledge of Youth" was recited by Miss Orpha Robinson.

The program included an invocation and benediction by the Rev. M. M. Jefferson, assistant pastor of the Asbury Methodist Church, and musical selections by Reginald Bailey, pianist, and Miss Louise Burge, contralto. Miss Burge was accompanied by Miss Virginia Williams.

108 USO Clubs Serving Race Soldiers In Nation

Chicago, Illinois Defender

MAY 1943

NEW YORK. — Negroes serving their country in the armed forces of the United States enjoy recreational opportunities at 108 special USO clubs throughout the country, Henry W. Pope, consultant for Negro Services at USO national headquarters here, announced this week.

"Negroes who have joined the ranks of those fighting to preserve democracy have received the attention of USO from the day of its formation more than two years ago," Pope said. "As camps for Negro soldiers have increased in size and number, USO has endeavored to meet the needs of the men for leisure-time recreation. To date, 14 per cent of total USO operations is engaged in serving Negroes, and Negroes constitute 12 per cent of USO volunteers.

"The latest report for which statistics are available discloses that the total attendance at 108 clubs for Negroes now exceeds 1,000,000 monthly or an average of about 10,000 per club. This figure includes volunteers and repeat visits of Negro soldiers. In addition, many Negroes make use of other clubs where no separate count is kept.

53,000 Volunteers

"Directed by a staff of 132 professionally trained workers, and assisted by a corps of 53,000 volunteers, the programs offer a wide range of activities. Dances and social gatherings of all kinds are held. Movies are popular. Religious programs are also well attended.

"USO clubs include comfortable lounges, writing rooms with free USO stationery, showers, game rooms, snack bars and social halls. Some clubs have a rent-a-bike service, a free camera loan service, free checking, irons and ironing boards, shoe shine stands and other welcome and handy conveniences.

"An important feature of all USO clubs is information service. More than 67,000 information services were given at 108 USO clubs for these soldiers in a recent month for which full data is at hand. This includes advice on rooms, transportation and 'where to go and how to get there' in the local town.

Personal Counsel

"Service men often have personal problems about which they wish to consult an older person. The door of the USO club director is always open for this purpose. More than 11,000 soldiers were given personal counsel in the 108 clubs, according to the latest monthly report.

"The report also showed that 24,285 persons were given religious material, 326,986 pieces of USO stationery were used in writing letters home, and that sleeping accommodations were used 5,594 times."

USO policies for service to Negroes are reviewed by an advisory committee including: Walter Hoving, chairman; Judge Hubert T. Delany, of the USO Board of Directors; Dr. Channing H. Tobias and Jay A. Urice, of the Y.M.C.A.; Louis Kraft of the Jewish Welfare Board; Frank E. Crane and Ralph Metcalfe, famous athlete, of the National Catholic Community Service; Brigadier William Parkins, of the Salvation Army; Mrs. Louise Cochran of the Y.W.C.A.; Miss Bertha McCall of the National Travelers Aid Association, and Henry W. Negro Service Center Opens At Henderson

Henderson, Sept. 4.—(Special)—A new servicemen's center for colored men in the armed forces was opened with ceremonies held at the new quarters on Horner Street Friday evening.

Mayor Henry T. Powell, who was introduced by the Rev. Dr. Gregg and Maj. O. R. Page, who was presented by Attorney C. H. Williamson, were the chief speakers. The Mayor gave a welcome, and Major Page said he accepted the hospitality of Henderson and of the center, and said, "I shall be glad to send troops under my command to Henderson, knowing that they shall have a clean, comfortable place to stop." He commended the effort highly.

The audience sang "America" and a solo was given by Virginia Adams. It was said that about 500 attended and expressed surprise and gratification at the progress made with such meagre financial help in so short a time, and many expressed willingness to assist in the work.

Negro Center To Cost $37,780

The recreational center for negro troops here, announced Thursday as approved by the War Production board, has now been approved by the Federal Works agency, and will be a one-story building with equipment, costing a total of $37,780, Senator Burnet R. Maybank reported yesterday in a telegram to Mayor Henry W. Lockwood.

Brigadier General James T. Duke, commanding officer of the port of embarkation, expressed gratification, saying that "The information from Senator Maybank to Mayor Lockwood that the recreational center for negro troops to be built at North Charleston has been approved was most gratifying to me.

"The officials of the port of embarkation have been working more than a year to obtain this greatly needed facility for negro troops, and to know that it is now to be constructed should do much to raise the morale of the negro soldiers in this area.

"The center is to be located in the Liberty Hill section of North Charleston, which is most convenient for use of all the negro troops stationed in the Charleston area.

"It is hoped now that the project is approved that no delays will be encountered in the prompt construction and putting into use of this badly needed recreational facility."

CENTER POSTPONED.

ALBANY, Ga., Oct. 16.—Construction of a recreation center for Negro soldiers has been postponed pending a conference with the Federal Works Agency and the Army, due to the fact that bids received for such a job exceeded the amount of money available for constructing and equiping the center.

the Reidsville Funeral Parlor for the purpose of consolidating and summarizing the plans of the various clubs.

Tonight, the soldiers will be entertained with a Juke box entertainment at the Elk Hall on Market street. The entertainment will be special for men in uniform, who have thus far, conducted themselves nicely since being in the city. On Saturday night the soldiers will be entertained at the Community Center.

Chaperons will be appointed in the meeting tonight to mobilize enough young ladies for entertaining the soldiers and to be present each night to assist with the same. Since most of the boys stationed here are picked soldiers with high school, college and post graduate training all the entertainments are expected to be conducted successfully.

Plans are underway for sponsoring a parade next Thursday if proper arrangements can be made. If the arrangements can be made all organizations will be expected to cooperate. The parade will be sponsored as a means of boosting the sale of war bonds and stamps.

Entertainment will be given Saturday night at the Community Center on Vance Street from 8:00 to 12:00 for the men in Service. Refreshments and music will be furnished.

All young women that are interested and would like to entertain the soldiers are asked to notify Ida Mae Reid, 'phone 649-J.

NEGRO SOLDIERS WILL HAVE DINNER WITH CITIZENS

Negro citizens are busy preparing or making preparations to invite soldiers to dinner with them on Sunday. All famlies are urged to invite at least one or two soldiers for the evening meals. Any family desiring to invite a soldier is requested to call Reidsville Funeral Parlor, 292, giving the number of soldiers desired. All calls should be in by 12 o'clock noon Saturday. USO Plans War Seminar

Post-War Problems That Confront Men, Women Subjects

Monroe Street

Plans have been completed by the National USO program committee, the Rev. J. A. Stringfield, chairman, for a seminar to be held Tuesday through Thurs[illegible] at the [illegible] Street USO C

Millions of men and many women have entered military service. Along with this group should also be added the millions of those left at home, who in one way or another have been called upon to give up their loved ones either for military service or for defense programs, which in many instances take them away from home. Suddenly the securities of civilian life are gone. Military training is hard and those who are called on to make adjustments in new communities find this true when engaged in some phase of defense work. The need for helping individuals has been recognized by military services themselves and machines put in operation to meet those needs.

Many of our local leaders are of the opinion that a large percentage of those who make up industrial defense work, who will have many needs, will be neglected. In each instance the program mentioned is set up to serve those in the camps, also to this should be added the need found in the community. The men come to town and they bring with them their problems. The people who are already in town have their problems and they are increasing daily.

Increasingly there is a great demand for the ministers, USO directors and lay leaders, who in one way or another have been called on to help people solve their problems. Thus members of the publicity committee for the seminar on Personal Counseling on Wartime Problems are extending a special invitation to local ministers, USO directors, staff members and volunteer leaders, equipped to make a contribution in the specialized field.

Dr. Russell L. Dicks, graduate minister of Highland Methodist Church, Dallas, Tex., assistant professor of pastoral theologies in the School of Theologic of Associate Ministers, and graduate of the University of Oklahoma and the Union Theological Seminary in New York, will be present to lead the seminar.

For eight years he was a medical doctor, he was hospital chaplain at Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston, and the Presbyterian Hospital, Chicago. He was one of the Pioneer Clinic Trainers of Ministry in the United States. He is author of several books, one, the volume written in collaboration with Richard C. Cabot, M. D., "The Art of Ministry to the Sick." He is probably the best known author and worker in the general field of ministry to the sick.

The session will be held eac. day from 2 p. m. until 1:30 p. m.

BY LEOLA GARETY

Where do they go—what do they do in their precious free hours—the thousands of Uncle Sam's boys in uniform already here and the hundreds more pouring in daily at the Columbia Army Air base, Fort Jackson, and the Congaree Air base? The City of Columbia has the answer to that popular question, and the answer is so good that South Carolina's capital city is attracting nationwide attention!

Under a city recreation program, 28,000 soldiers and civilians attended dances, block parties, bingo games, music hours, vespers, softball, and free movies, at the ten local centers during the past two weeks. Heading the planning committee are Fred D. Marshall, mayor, general chairman; W. H. Harth, director, and Miss Edna Gentry, program director.

This job of entertaining servicemen is a new one for city officials, who inherited the responsibility only a few weeks ago from the WPA. But there's nothing amateurish about the almost nightly programs of fun at Valley Park, Arsenal Hill, Earlwood park, Melrose park, Sims park, the First Presbyterian church, Shandon Presbyterian church, Washington Street Methodist church, Old Howard center, and the Elks Patio. Every party is a hit with those who attend, whether they're soldiers or civilians. They love 'em—they must, or they wouldn't keep crowding the halls.

Just one week of Columbia's program activities sounds like the schedule of entertainment for a year in most towns its size. With so much going on now that even mentioning it all is very nearly impossible, something new is constantly being added. Don't take our word for it; just listen to the weekly bulletin of recently added features:

"A group of Star Spangled Rythmettes, young girls who will remain on the Valley Park center dance list for call as hostesses, was organized and gave its first party Tuesday night.

"The canteen group at Washington Methodist church is establishing a lounge room for soldiers on the third floor. The Red Cross is going to furnish cots, sheets and blankets for use, and the church Boy Scout troop will serve as attendants in the lounge.

"The Armyettes, a girls' volunteer hostess group, has been organized at Arsenal Hill to sponsor parties. This group of attractive girls held its first meeting and elected officers last week.

"The Elks patio had an orchestra for two of its dances last week. This is to be a regular feature each Saturday night.

"Keep Fit classes for Columbia women and army wives are being formed in order to help women stay physically fit for their work and war tasks.

"Last week a group of the tenants at Allen-Benedict court organized a club to sponsor parties for service men. The club is now collecting funds to assist with refreshments for the parties.

"Tuesday night, following through a contact made by the supervisor of Negro activities and the officials at the Columbia Army Air base, 50 boys were sent along with the softball team to enjoy a dance at the Old Howard immediately after the close of the game.

"A counter installed at Old Howard for cold drinks is filling a need, as well as proving popular. Funds obtained will be spent on needs of the center."

The city's program is divided into three main parts: Home Hospitality, directed by Miss Minnie Eskrigge; Church Centers and Housing, Mrs. Charlotte Jones; Dance and Camp program, Mrs. Isabel Sloan.

Home hospitality is handled by a strong volunteer group, headed by Mrs. Tom Pearce, who keep up contact between local and camp officers and secure invitations to Sunday dinner for boys in the service. Assisting are Mrs. W. Bedford Moore, Jr., Mrs. James Turner, Mrs. J. M. Cohen, Mrs. John Chase, Mrs. William Elliott, Jr., Mrs. F. B. Fitch, Mrs. R. R. Hammond, Mrs. J. S. Heslep, Mrs. Alice Seibels, Mrs. William Shand, Mrs. Herbert Spiers, Mrs. William Weston, Mrs. Curran Jones, and Miss Carolina Guignard.

Church centers and housing are planned at the Washington Street Methodist and Shandon Presbyterian, churches, the Gonzales and Andrew Jackson housing projects. Five white and two Negro community houses and parks are managed by Mrs. Christine Roof, who organizes community songs, music hours, hymn sings, games, afternoon tea and coffee hours, vespers, soldier dancing, and parties for non-commissioned officers and their wives.

Carrying out the idea of service to civilian families, supervisors work with children at the six pre-school (kindergartens), held from 9 a. m. until 12 noon. The kindergartens are located at Earlwood, Heathwood, Shandon, Melrose and Sims parks. Playgrounds are at Valley park, A C. Moore school, Taylor school and Irwin park. In five of the parks, wading pools are operated.

Not just for white residents but for the Negro population, as well, is the city providing recreation and relaxation. Leader of the Negro program is T. J. Miles who has charge of two colored centers, at Allen-Benedict and Old Howard. Negro girls are carried to the fort to meet and dance with Negro soldiers there.

Mrs. Sloan, head of the dance and camp program, has a dance list of 1000 girls and hopes to steadily increase this number. All volunteers are carefully checked on before they are allowed to become hostesses.

Officers of the new Armyettes are Miss Jessie Rutherford, president; Miss Carrie Mae Ashmore, vice-president; Miss Margaret Weir, treasurer; and Miss Elizabeth Hill, secretary.

Outdoor sports enjoyed by soldiers and civilians, alike, are baseball, softball, horseshoe tournaments, ping pong, basketball, tennis, and camp cooking. Each of the parks is equipped with Dutch ovens for outdoor suppers and picnics.

Since 1935 a less extensive city recreation program was carried on here by the WPA, until a few weeks ago, when the city took over on March 22 of this year. The $78,000 program is operated from a fund made up of city council appropriations and a federal government grant. All workers with children are on the city payroll, while those whose efforts are entirely with soldier entertainment receive their salaries from the federal grant. A total of 52 employees spend their full time at this work.

Mr. Harth had been with the WPA recreation office for two years before moving his office to city hall. A native of Columbia he had been with the city electric department for 20 years, until he resigned to go to the University of South Carolina as athletic director.

Mrs. Sloan transferred from the WPA program to her present job. Mrs. Edna Gentry was former state superintendent of recreation.

Federal Security Agency representative L. G. Blackus spent Sunday afternoon in Clarksville visiting local USO clubs and inspecting the new club home on Ninth Street near College.

Regional directors B. Ralph Jones, Harry T. Baker, H. Cary and Ivan Rhodes spent several days last week inspecting local clubs and met with the local USO Council. It was their general impression that USO facilities in Clarksville are on the upgrade. They urged the enlistment of additional volunteers to effect a greater partnership of USO-community efforts to serve soldiers in their out-of-camp hours.

Win Fight For [illegible]e Dance Hostesses In Boston USO

Chicago Defender
Chicago, Illinois

MAY 22 1943

BOSTON, Mass. — The heated month-old controversy over whether Negro hostesses should be permitted to serve at the USO Soldiers' and Sailors' recreation center on Boston Common was settled in the affirmative Monday.

Responsible for the show-down was Atty. Ray W. Guild, president of the Coordinating Council of Colored Organizations for National Defense, member of the Coordinating Group of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Committee, and formerly three times president of the Boston NAACP.

Guild had carried on negotiations with the trustees of the Boston USO for over a month in regard to assigning Negro hostesses to the junior group service at the Buddies club on the Common without success. Att.y Guild and several committee members, Matthew W. Bullock, board of trustees; Mrs. Hattie Hall, Morris Taylor and the Rev. M. J. Minor, threatened to resign if the USO trustees ruled against the proposal. Guild said he did not believe "Boston wants to go backward from its traditions just because at present we have many coming from southern parts of our country, and who are not accustomed to see colored people in public places."

He notified W. Duncan Russell, executive secretary of the USO Greater Boston Soldiers and Sailors committee, that the Stage Door canteen at New York, "having less floor space but greatly more attendance, has colored junior hostesses on duty regularly."

Russell said that thus far it had been felt that not enough colored service men used the Common quarters to justify having a hostess, and that there was a shortage of space. "Most of them go to the Ruggles Street USO center," Russell said, "where there are colored hostesses." He added that a survey had been made over a test period in which it was found only 80 colored men out of 99,764 had appeared on the Common.

Having a son in the army, Pvt. Ray W. Guild Jr., 366th Infantry, Fort Devens, Mass., Harvard varsity football player, and having been active in raising a large sum for the supporting fund, Guild let it be known that he "would not be a party to such bigotry in Massachusetts."

As a result of such pressure, at the annual meeting on Monday, May 10, trustees of the USO-Greater Boston Soldiers and Sailors committee authorized the colored hostesses.

Tuscaloosa Avenue USO Dedication Set For July 11

Formal dedication of the Tuscaloosa Avenue USO, recently opened for Negro service men in the Gadsden area, will be held on July 11 from 4:30 to 6:30 o'clock when Commission Chairman J. Herbert Meighan, on behalf of the city, will accept the building from the USO.

Others appearing on the dedication program will be Harry T. Baker, regional USO supervisor, of Atlanta, and E. L. Lipscomb, director of the center.

Pipscomb also announced that beginning Wednesday no civilians will be admitted to the center without admittance cards.

He explained that the canteen service at the USO center is provided only for service men, their wives and guests, and said that beginning Wednesday civilians without regular admittance cards could not be accepted.

On The HOME FRONT

The Colored Recreation Center has become so popular over the week-ends that it has secured a nearby former dance pavilion as a games room and for the two parties it plans to give monthly, one informal and one dance.

The first dance took place Saturday and was a great success although decidedly impromptu.

Shortly before noon an Officer called from Camp Gordon. Might he bring over 50 men? He might!

There ensued a period of great activity. The Canteen Aides went into action, food was donated, telephones buzzed as the junior hostesses were called.

As three trucks full of soldiers drove up, the hosts and hostesses exchanged happy glances— all was well—some girls were on hand, more were coming; the supper was all ready and ample; both buildings looked cheerful in the bright lights. The men climbed gayly out and considerable time was spent in getting acquainted, then the radio phonograph in the ball room was turned on—Disaster! Off went the radio and, inexplicably, the lights in the club house two doors away. The buildings and street seemed full of soldiers. They were good natured and as the lights were on in the ball room, many were soon playing cards or other games.

However, it couldn't be called a dance until suddenly the radio went on, a pianist appeared and more girls arrived. From then on there was no question of a good time being had by all, despite the shortage of girls due to the fact that soldiers seemed to spring from everywhere. Seventy registered in the guest book, but no one knows how many others came. Once two cars drew up and bystanders surged hopefully forward only to have 13 more men join the party.

However, the men all insisted they would be back as soon as possible and the sergeant's whistle shrilled several times before the guests reluctantly left. It was another good party!

APR 1 4 1943

SPOKANE, Wash. — Directors of the George Washington Carver U. S. O. center, the new project launched to care for the recreational needs of Negro troops in Spokane, last night offered the post of director to Mrs. Rosa D. Malone, now secretary of the Boker T. aWshington center. It is believed Mrs. Malone will be granted a leave of absence from her present position to undertake the U. S. O. task.

Speaking for the board of directors, Jack Abrams said that Mrs. Malone was the unanimous choice by reason of her experience in community service. She will be asked to direct the activities of the new center, bids for which will be submitted to contractors for remodeling and furnishing the center, the estimated cost of which is $7000.

Mrs. Malone, who came to Spokane from Birmingham, Ala., has been active in Negro community affairs. With the number of troops constantly increasing in Spokane, she has taken the lead in devising plans for providing recreation and housing for them.

The new U. S. O. center, named in honor of the famous Negro scientist, will be located at the corner of First and Division. A dance floor, clubrooms and library facilities will be provided by the center, which it is hoped to have able by uJne 1.

FORT HUACHUCA GETS RECREATION CENTER

MAR 28 1943

FORT HUACHUCA, Ariz., Mar. 25—Like a beautiful oasis saucered by majestic mountain ranges, stands the new Recreation Center for enlisted personnel of Fort Huachuca. Located in Fry, Ariz., just beyond the Fry gate entrance to the Fort, the center looms as a definite asset to the community along with the drug store, theatre, USO and sandwich shops already there.

Constructed at a cost of approximately $80,000 by a group of exceedingly liberal minded Negro business men who are doing their utmost so that enlisted men of Fort Huachuca may have an abundance of good, clean, and wholesome recreational relaxation after a rigid day's training.

When the present Post commander, Colonel Edwin M. Hardy, assumed command of Fort Huachuca, on April 17, 1942, he realized immediately the necessity for the establishment of some form of genteel amusement in the Settlement of Fry, immediately adjacent to Fort Huachuca, which would accommodate large numbers of soldiers. He saw that this was necessary as a means of providing reasonable recreation outside the Reservation and as a means of protecting soldiers against unsanitary and unsuitable forms of recreation within the Fry settlement.

He also appreciated the fact that there was no real amusement to be had in this community without soldiers traveling long distances to the closest towns—Tuscon, Nogales, Naco, Douglas, Bisbee, Tombstone, and border towns in Mexico. He immediately tried to interest substantial colored people in establishing an Amusement Center, and although professional amusement groups stood ready to expedite the project, Col. Hardy persisted with the original colored groups until they were finally sold on the idea.

Since that time the cooperation between Col. Hardy and this group has been very close in surmounting the many obstacles which presented themselves daily.

This structure was designed by Paul Williams, Negro architect of Los Angeles, Calif., who is outstanding and second to none in his field. Mr. Williams directs from his offices located in Hollywood, Calif., a staff that is by no means small in size nor short in efficiency. He is responsible for more than a few of the homes of prominent movie stars and notables in the exclusive districts of California.

There are also numerous executive buildings of Los Angeles and other large cities in the United States that have dripped from his architectural pen. He and his staff have put forth an all-out effort to make this the finest Army Recreational Center (barring none) in the United States.

One's first impression upon entering this huge dome-shaped edifice, is that of a well-appointed "pleasure palace." The first eye-striking feature is the 6400 square feet of dance floor, surrounded by tables and chairs. To the right is a sizeable stage that will play host to some of the nation's most prominent scholars, artists and name bands. To the left is a 100 foot bar where soft drinks and 3.2 beer will be sold exclusively, no hard liquors permitted.

A basement pre-cooler" of 1000 square feet, capable of holding two freight carloads of leading brand beer, has been installed. This cooler maintains a temperature of 40 degrees at all times. The beer will be drawn directly from the kegs through plastic tubes. No metal coils are used, thereby keeping the draught in original condition from brewer to consumer.

The back bar is made up of seven eye-arresting murals, bearing the theme of "New Peace with Victory." Encased in frames of bamboo and with indirect lighting, bringing out every minute detail, the efficaciousness of the artist, William E. Scott of Chicago, Ill, is indisputable.

To the rear of the building is a beautiful lawn covered patio studded with comfortable garden furniture, where one may relax and enjoy a sandwich from the "Snack Bar". Equally beautiful are the living quarters provided for the employees of the Center. A lawn-fronted, shrub dotted building with an ample number of spacious rooms; each room on the outside, offers comfort to those who reside there when off duty.

Despite the many criticisms and rumors by the inadequately informed, there is no doubt that this Recreation Center will prove a great disappointment to those "gossip mongers" who say so much and do nothing for the race or for the country.

Col. E. N. Hardy, Post commander, whose official capacity makes him host of all Army units training in this area, has been untiring in his efforts to expedite the completion of this great enterprise. A man of less intestinal fortitude would have wilted under the unjust criticisms of the alleged "lookers out for soldiers welfare", but who in reality, know nothing about a soldier or his tastes in the first instance.

The soldiers of Huachuca are grateful to these men, both civilian and military, who had the foresight, courage and interest to make this center possible.

Reveals How USO Aids Servicemen

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga

NEW YORK CITY—(S N S)—Vastly important spade work in community operations, welfare work and education is being done for the Negro service man, war workers and other civilians at USO Centers.

This is the conclusion drawn by J. Saunders Redding, Negro author of the best seller, "No Day of Triumph,' who recently returned from a three weeks' tour of USO clubhouse which he took to gather material for a comprehensive article for a leading magazine on the care of this organization is providing the Negro.

NOTES IMPROVEMENT

"There is a strong tendency on the part of the Negro to be clanish in community operations, but I noticed a signal improvement in this respect in those communities where a USO clubhouse was located. Because club directors must call upon all reputable local organizations to fill the large order of providing entertainment and care for service men and their families, these organizations, if they wish to share in the war effort, are compelled to give up this greedy preservation of their own individuality and work cooperatively for a common good.

'Home hospitality, such an important feature of USO program is provided largely through the churches, which are in contact with resident families, so that religious groups too must work in unity. No one faith or denomination can possibly supply all the needs to all the men, just as the resources of no one civic or fraternal organization can suffice. This inter-organizational and inter-church cooperation is a very important innovation in Negro life

WORK NECESSARY

"The welfare work by the directors is equally necessary. This type of work applies more to the centers for war workers than for service men. To these come thousands of young girls and young men who are thrown into a new community and a new life. USO not only provides healthful recreation for them but sees to it that they are respectably housed and hygienically safeguarded. Negro social agencies are not yet organized thoroughly enough to do this work alone."

Mr. Redding believes that the benefits provided by USO in the cultural and educational field are perhaps the most vital contribution of all. He declared himself particularly impressed by the courses in music appreciation and was amazed to see the eagerness with which the men listened to long symphonic recordingns and those of operas and concert recitals.

HOSTESS TAUGHT

"There was still another phase of the educational work which impressed me," stated the author, "and that was the courses given the young hostesses who volunteer to dance with and entertain the men. Because there is a comparatively small leisure class among Negroes, many of these hostesses conme from homes which have no cultural background. The club directors make a point of teaching these girls practical lessons in social behaviour—how to approach the men in an easy, friendly but not forward manner, how to conduct themselves in a courteous and gracious way, how to dance and dress in a becoming fashion. These girls are truly receiving instruction and experience which stand them in good stead all their lives"

Mr. Redding also writes for such magazines as Harper's, the Atlantic Monthly and Mercury. He received his Phi Beta Kappa key at Brown University, Providence, R. I., and is a member of the English faculty at Hampton, Institute, Hampton, Va.

City Gets New Club For Negro Servicemen

Charlotte, N. C. News
November 17, 1943

Acquisition of the educational building of St. Michael's Episcopal Church at Mint and Hill Sts. as a Negro Servicemen's Club was announced today by officials of the Park and Recreation Commission.

Contract for renovation of the interior has been let to R. C. Hicks, Charlotte contractor, at $900; and work will begin next Monday. The building is expected to be ready for use around Dec. 1.

The new location, which was sought after it became necessary to close the service club at Second Ward Negro High School, is regarded as ideal because of its accessibility and facilities that include a large assembly room for dances and smaller rooms to be used for games, library, and writing. Furnishings used in the school location will be removed to the new location, and when this center is completed, it is expected to be more nearly comparable with the facilities provided for the white troops.

TRAINED STAFF

Supervision will be provided by a staff of professional recreation leaders who will work under the general direction of Mrs. Merle S. Ramsey, in charge of the soldier recreation program.

This center is part of the soldier recreation program, conducted locally with a grant from the Lanham Fund. The cost of the improvements will be borne by the Fund, and by agreement the building will be used for a period rent-free.

Negotiations for the use of the building have extended over several months and were conducted by Charles H. Stone, chairman, Park and Recreation Commission, Harry N. Sutton, recreation superintendent, the defense recreation committee, o which H. H. Everett is chairman, and the Negro recreation committee headed by A. E. Spears, chairman. The agreement on behalf of the church was executed by Bishop Edwin A. Penick, the Rev. John W. Heritage, rector of the church, and Prof S. H. Adams, registrar of Johnson C. Smith University and reasurer of the church.

Stage Door Canteen Runs On "Equal Rights" Policy

By Wittie Ann Biggins

NEW YORK—The Stage Door Canteen of this city offers to service men of all nations the finest there is in recreation and entertainment the hospitality of junior hostesses is so equally shared with Negro serviiemen that many sorialites of this Methopolitan area have been questioning the right of the Negro to enjoy these opprtonities. Margaret Halsey, naptain of jonior hostesses, has just made the startling revelation that the Canteen's polily about Negroes is based upon the quotation, "We hold these truths to be self-evident: That all men are created equal.' So startling was the statement of policy that PM, the New York daily that continuously fights for equal rights of all men, printed the full text of the "Memo to Junior Hostesses" issued by the youthful hostess.

Captain Halsey further stated that "The Canteen's policy about Negroes is also based on the 14th and 15th Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, which it specifiially stated that nobody is to be denied the rights, privileges, and immunities of Ameriian citizenship on account of race, creed of color."

Contending that people who deny Negroes democratic equality actually are tearing down the constitution, the hostess explains that people cannot be blamed for being taught prejudice while they are young and helpless. "But you certainly can be blamed for hanging on to the prejudices when (a) you are old enough to know better, (b) you are being given, in the canteen, a golden opportunity to come into contact with Negroes under the best possible circumstances and find out what they are really like".

The memo points out that the real basis of the prejudice against Negroes is economic and historical, and not sexual or psychological. As long as Negroes are treated as sub-humans, you don't have to pay them so much, and you are moking it possible for employers all over the country to get Negroes to work for less money than they pay whites.

Equality—real, genuine, three-ply cooper-bottom equality—is the only possible basis for getting along with other sorts of peoples, said Miss Halsey. If we have any secret yearning to think of ourselves as a Master Race, we have only to pick up a newspaper to see that nobody is giving odds on Master Races these days.

A bit of history cited by the Junior Miss vlosed a full tabloid page "Memo" that will serve as a reminder to those who have forgotten.

"The Negroes aren't under any obligation to be better than we do. They didn't come to this country because they wanted to. We brought them here in chains. They didn't write the Declaration of Independence or the Constitution. We wrote those documents, and if we now wave them in the Negroes' face and say Ha ha Practical joke!, we must expect to meet the customery fate of practical jockers.

"We kept the Negroes in official slavery until 1864, and we've kept them in unofficial slavery ever since. If you meet a Negro serviceman at the Canteen whose conduct doesn't come up to your delicate and exacting standards of behavior, just don't forget this one thing—whatever he is, you made him that way"

Terminal Redressed In New Clothes

Birmingham, Ala., News
November 28, 1943

Once Grimy, Unkempt, She's Fresh As Daisy After Transformation

BY ROBERT W. KINCEY

"IN THE SWIM" AGAIN—Birmingham's Terminal Station, recognized as one of the finest architectural structures in the South, is all prettied up at a cost of more than $500,000.

Fresh as a daisy, immaculately clean, painted and dolled up and shining like the proverbial new dollar, Birmingham's Terminal Station has emerged from near obscurity to become a focal point in this district's war program—host today and every day to more strangers within its gates and more homefolks, too, than it ever saw before even in its heyday.

Time was, and not long ago, when the "Terminal," was just a smutty, neglected, unkempt railroad station where people went because they had to, and arrived for the same reason.

But not so today.

It took more than $500,000 and the work of a great many men, to say nothing of the growing pride the railroads have in Birmingham, to bring about a transformation that is the talk of everybody who's had occasion to go there lately.

There was something majestic about the Terminal even when it was down and out, so to speak. Its twin spires and its point of vantage at the foot of Fifth Avenue gave it a certain mark of distinction.

* * *

NEGLECTED, NOT THROUGH choice but of necessity, the Terminal accumulated, throughout the years, a coat of smoke and grime inside and out.

Its passenger subway was damp and uninviting; the subway over which it stands, an extension of Fifth Avenue, East, considered a place to be avoided and was, except by those whose business made that route imperative.

But the work of many men and the expenditure of $500,000 has written an amazing chapter into the life of the station which has been so much a part and parcel of Birmingham since the first train pulled into it from Selma on Sunday night, June 20, 1907.

The station has been sandblasted to bring out the color and texture of the bricks of which it was constructed. That little item alone cost the railroads $41,000.

* * *

YOU, AS A TRAVELER, may never notice it, but to handle trains with greater safety and dispatch, the Birmingham Terminal Company has just completed installation of a new interlocking plant and train control system, and a new central control tower, all automatic. And for that the railroads paid $275,000.

The tracks entering the passenger station have been rearranged and made longer to accommodate wartime travel. That item called for $50,000.

Lengthening of the passenger platforms cost another $35,000 and $40,000 was expended on new steel and concrete mail facilities, so great has the burden of mail in and out of Birmingham become.

Add to these items renovation of the power house at $25,000, rebuilding and waterproofing of the Fifth Avenue subway to make it bright and cheerful at a cost of $75,000 and a miscellaneous interior and exterior modernization program involving $25,000 and you have the highlights of the story of the virtual rebirth of "the Terminal," scene today of many sad farewells—scene as certain as tomorrow an the peace to come, of just as man happy reunions.

* * *

THE TERMINAL'S EXITS fro the train platforms to the statio are freshly painted and marke There is a new and improved trai bulletin board, new facilities fo handling baggage and USO center for white and Negro soldiers.

The premises have been cleane up from one end to the other anc as far as an acute manpowe shortage will permit, will be kep that way. The atmosphere generally is different—and better, a though employes are sharing th public pride generally in what ha happened to "the Terminal."

You may not know it, but th Birmingham Terminal Company i owned and operated by the Alabama Great Southern Railroad, the Central of Georgia Railroad, the Illinois Central Railroad Company, the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway, the Seaboard Railway and the Southern Railway Company.

* * *

IT HAS MANY MORE TRAINS and double the number of cars operting into and out of it daily. It has many, many times the number of passengers.

The board of control of the Terminal meets monthly. W. W. Simpson is chairman of the board of control and John B. Hyde is president of the Birmingham Terminal Company. H. E. Johnson is superintendent assisted by a stationmaster and two terminal trainmasters.

Birmingham's Terminal was considered, when it was built, the largest in the South and one of the finest in the world from an architectural standpoint. It covers slightly more than five acres.

It's light dimmed for years through no fault of its own, the shifting sands of time have again brought it into prominence and the ability of the railroads to pay for the job, has restored a great deal of beauty of its fundamentally architecture.

His wife is the former Miss Willard Phillips of Oxford, N.C., and their two children are Jack, 5, and Jill, 4.

In his club, Bond has introduced many traditions of the stage—principal among which is the delegation of parts. There is no overlapping. Each member of the staff has specific functions to perform and is charged with the necessity of performing them without hitches, lest the entire drama of operation be despoiled.

Co-operating marvelously with the Bond ideas of the dramatic are Mrs. Grace Outlaw of Chicago and Washington, and Leroy Easterley, former coach at Alabama State Teachers' College. Miss Clara Wells, who was at one time Bond's personal service director, has recently been shipped to New Guinea.

The tendency toward the punchy, semi-sensational, advantageously dramatic can be traced to Jack Bond's father, who, as a Raleigh, N.C., haberdasher, advertised:

"Bond sells hats, Bond sells shirts; Bond sells everything for men—no skirts."

Jewish Group Furnishes 13 Centers For Race Soldiers

NOV 6 - 1943

NEW YORK — (ANP) — B'nai B'rith has furnished 13 recreation rooms for Negro military personnel throughout the country, including eight in the New York area, Arthur S. Glixson, chairman of the Metropolitan New York B'nai B'rith War Service council, told a distinguished gathering of 3,000 Negroes this week.

NOV 6 - 1943

Glixson accepted on behalf of B'nai B'rith a special certificate for meritorious service in connection with the center's recreational program for Negro servicemen.

The furnishing of these facilities for Negro personnel is part of the nationwide war service program of B'nai B'rith, the country's oldest and largest national Jewish service organization, which has equipped 552 day rooms, squadron rooms, game, card and reading rooms, recreation centers, libraries and canteens at military and naval installations in 36 states.

For Negro personnel B'nai B'rith has furnished the following facilities in the New York City area through the Metropolitan B'nai War Service council, Mr. Glixson said:

Two day rooms for the 372nd Infantry encampment in Brooklyn; a room in the colored officers club in the Hotel Theresa in Harlem; a recreation center in the 23rd Street armory; the first day room for Negro troops at the Staten Island port of embarkation; a day room at Fort Wadsworth in the Bronx; a room in the Negro War Service center in Harlem and a room in the Brooklyn Service club for Negro personnel. In addition a juke box was furnished for the Harlem center.

Outside of New York City, Mr. Glixson said, the following recreation facilities have been provided by B'nai B'rith for Negro troops:

500 CIVILIANS, CIVIC, MILITARY LEADERS OPEN NEW USO CLUB PRAISE WORK OF MRS. MALONE

The Northwest
Enterprise
Seattle, Washington

SPOKANE, Wash. — "This Sunday is a red letter day in the history of the Negro people of Spokane," Mayor Frank P. Sutherlin declared at the formal opening of [illegible] George Washington Carver U. S. O. [illegible] First and Division yesterday afternoon. Before a crowd of more than 500 persons the ceremonies dedicating the establishment of the Carver U. S. O. were conducted by Jack Abrams as master of ceremonies.

"The roots of this project go much deeper than Pearl Harbor," Mayor Sutherlin continued. "Through the efforts many years ago of those who had faith and hope in the upbringing of the Negro people was started the Booker T. Washington center here. Mrs. Rosa D. Malone, who has worked tirelessly at that center, is the woman who deserves the full credit for the final opening of this fine Carver U. S. O."

Civil and military leaders in this area were unanimous in their praise of Mrs. Malone's work with Negro troops from Gieger field and the Spokane army airfield and Colonel George Bienfang commander of troops at Galena said [illegible], Negro troops here have far exceeded the number of civiilans, but the need has been met in this organization. As far as my troops are concerned, they apperciate this Carver U. S. O., and I certainly do."

Spirituals Sang

Invocation was given by the Rev. S. J. Holly followed by the audience singing one verse of the national anther. Three spirituals were sung, a cappella, by the Galena men's chorus and introduction of distinguished guests occupied the majority of the afternoon's program that started at 4 o'clock.

Congratulatory telegrams, addressed to the Carver U. S. O., were read by Mr. Abrams. F. D. Patterson, president of the Tuskegee Institute, congratulated the Spokane people, and a message from Wiley Winsor, associate regional U. S. O. director, was read.

Charles Hebberd, chairman of the war appeals board, presented the club officially to Daniel Francis Connell, director of the U. S. O., who in turn, presented the Carver U. S. O., to Mrs. Malone with "God help you" his closing message.

Promises Help

Mrs. Malone, in accepting the club, thanked members of the audience, the military and civic leaders and declared: "We shall do everything in our power to uphold and continue the fine standards of the U. S. O."

A brief talk by the Rev. E. B. Reed, pastor of the Cavalry Baptist Church, promised continued cooperation with Mrs. Malone and workers at the Carver center.

Singing of the Negro anthem, "Lift Every Voice and Sing," and the benediction given by Rabbi Adolph Fink, closed the program. An inspection tour, conducted by hostesses followed.

Distinguished guests, in addition to Colonel Schauffler, Colonel Bienfang and Mayor Sutherlin included: Dr. Charles Mowery, Miss Gladys Jacobsen and Mrs. August Paulsen, all of Spokane's Red Cross chapter; W. M. Clist, J. E. McWilliams, the Rev. Mr. Reed, Mrs. Mamie Lee, Mrs. Charles Barrow, Mrs. E. I. Dundee, Mr. Connell, Mrs. Malone and H. C. G. Fry of the U. S. O. board of management.

Many Flowers

Lieutenant Commander Perrino of Farragut and Lieutenant Campbell, aide of Commander J. S. Fitzgerald; Lieutenant Charles Adams and Captain Ford K. Sayer of Ga[illegible] D. A. Bolger, Lieutenant L. G. Mason of Geiger field, also attended.

Vocal selections were sung by Mrs. James Chase, accompanied by Mrs. C. V. Evans. Her songs were "Deep River" and "The "Hills of Home."

Completed after 11 months of anticipation, the Carver U. S. O. has been tastefully decorated with cool green walls, inlaid linoleum on the floors and modern furniture. The building is completed with recreation and reading rooms, [illegible] and a spacious garden equipper with picnic facilities and a huge outdoor fireplace.

USO

A Second Look

By J. Saunders Redding

AUG 14 1943

Journal and Guide
Norfolk, Virginia

IN NEW YORK STATE and Pennsylvania, in New Jersey and Virginia and Georgia it is the same: exerywhere Negro USO directors have had to do the pioneer social work that, because it had already been done among the whites, was largely assumed to have been done among the Negroes as well.

It is no feather from the cap of white USO directors to say that for the success of their programs in general they have had only to organize and in some cases reactivate forces already in existence. City governments put recreational facilities at their disposal. Men and women of local authority and sufficient leisure were happy to become members of boards of management. In many instances private agencies and groups like Army and Navy clubs, political clubs, YMCA's, Junior League chapters, and odd organizations of local men and women had already established facilities with a view toward the recreational and spiritual needs of special white groups.

MR. REDDING

The cooperation of these circles was free to the directors for the asking. In New Brunswick, N. J., the Elks turned over their imposing quarters to USO. In Fort Worth, Texas, and Philadelphia, in Baltimore and San Francisco patriotic citizens had organized young women into escort parties for the recreation of service men before USO was out of swaddling clothes.

COMMUNITY SOCIAL FORCES

The social training necessary to make these young women congenial and wholesome company had been given them as part of their heritage in home and club, school and church. The rendering of volunteer services in Red Cross and Community Chest drives and in political rallies and civic campaigns was no new thing for the whites. All the social forces of the community were at the command of the white USO directors.

But not so the Negro. Instead of having buildings turned over to him, he has frequently had to fight greed and prejudice to rent even a third-class building. In one northern town an organization of white realtors (at least one of whom was on the board of management of the white USO) fought the Negro director's rental of a building so bitterly that for several months his office was literally in his hat and at the nearest telephone. When he did get the building, the rent was exorbitant and he had to spend nearly a thousand dollars for renovations.

In southern towns city officials seem to have a propensity for designating the slummiest slums as sites for Negro USO centers. In Norfolk, for example, the USO location is so bad that for a long time respectable Negro families would not permit their daughters to attend USO functions there. Some still do not.

COMPLAIN OF MUGGING

Service men have complained of being mugged in the neighborhood. Houses of prostitution are within stepping distance and set up terrific competition for wholesome recreation. Women of joy parade up and down the squalid, unpaved street and openly solicit men in the dim light that fans through the doors of the USO.

In another town the underprivileged, rachitic children of the crowded slums objected to the location of the USO club on their playground, a swampy vacant lot. For the first few days they tore out screens, broke windows, and defiled the building with chalk markings. But the director was a resourceful man. He started a program of social work such as is generally spared white directors. He organized a Kiddy Club.

He showed the kids movies one day a week; a second day he gave them a party, all free. He got a zealous Negro volunteer to solicit books from the Victory Book Drive (and from the back doors of likely white homes) and began the first circulating library available to Negroes in the town. He called the mothers from the slums in and organized them into a Mother's Club. A trained nurse consented to come in and teach simple home nursing. A teacher from the high school teaches reading and writing once a week. hTe director . . . .

MUST BE A GOOD MAN

But the point is this: it took him six months to get things going smoothly, to get his immediate community trained so that he could go on with the job he was supposed to do.

And the point is also this: a Negro USO director has got to be a good man. If he is not a good and intelligent man he will not understand the nature of his problem. But also, if those who can help him fail to do so, he cannot do his job. The imbalance is terrific. So much is demanded of him and so little is demanded of the people.

Nation's First USO Club Is Renovated

Bee (Magazine Section)

FAYETTEVILLE, N. C., Sept. 2. (ANP)—America's first Negro USO club, the Person Street USO club, re-opened its doors last Thursday evening after having been closed for renovations. The popular fun spot frequently by soldiers of Fort Bragg and surrounding army camps, has been closed for about three months. Approximately $6,000 was spent in making the center one of the finest. The rendezvous was given super streamlined touches with all new furniture, new paint, cozy snack bar, check room, kitchenette, game rooms, showers and numerous other features.

Located in downtown Fayetteville in the heart of the business district, this club has been the soldier's choice since September 4, 1941, at which time the club was established with the efforts and co-operation of Legion Commander B. F. Ferguson, Father William P. Ryan and other civic minded citizens. Joe Scott, Harlem welfare worker, was its first director, with Miss Beatrice Cox as hostess. Miss Cox now directs the activities of the center and holds the coveted distinction of being the only woman director of such a club. She is ably assisted by Miss Dorothea Taylor who is club hostess and Miss Allegra Westbrook as secretary. Volunteer hostesses are on hand during many affairs.

W. Y. Bell Studies Soldier Needs In This Area for National USO

Kansas City Call

Kansas City, Mo.

SEP 3 1943

W. Y. Bell of Atlanta, USO associate regional executive, region 7, is in the Kansas City area for a three-week period to study the needs for Negro soldiers in this vicinity.

Kansas City is the regional headquarters for USO activities in Missouri, Kansas and surrounding states. Bell is visiting most of the camps and forts in this section and will make recommendations to the national USO in New York.

Last week-end he was in Lincoln, Omaha, Grand Island and Fairmount, Neb., the cities where soldiers at Ft. Crook, Ft. Omaha, the Harvard Air base, Bruning air base, Grand Island air base, Hastings air base, Kearney air base, and Lincoln air base spend leaves and furloughs.

This week and next, he is visiting towns in Kansas including Coffeyville, Independence, Hutchinson, Topeka, Winfield, Arkansas City, Wichita, Leavenworth and Olathe.

Bell is one of the two Negro staff persons employed by the national USO office. The other, Henry W. Pope, works out of the New York office while Bell is attached to the Atlanta regional office.

The USO (United Service Organization) was set up to meet the recreational and religious needs of men and women in the armed forces off the posts. The USO is interested in the welfare of Negro as well as white soldiers. Wherever a facility is set up for white soldiers money is available for a facility for Negro soldiers in that area.

Bell said that there are about 40 USO facilities and centers in this region. It is his aim to determine whether they meet the needs of the thousands of men stationed in this area.

Negro communities near army camps may apply for USO aid through their local USO councils. If there is no local council and Negro persons see the need of a USO center, they may apply for assistance to USD regional office at 912 Baltimore in Kansas City.

Before joining the USO staff, Bell was executive secretary of the Atlanta Urban League for 2 years. Bell is the son of Bishop W. Y. Bell of the C.M.E. church. He is a graduate of Northwestern university, holds the M. A. degree from the University of Pittsburgh and has had two years of religious training at Howard university.

Bell will be in this area until Sept. 3 or 4 and will go from here to a national USO conference in New York. He is stopping at the home of Mrs. Vallie Lamb.

Mrs. Dean Named To High USO Post

Daily World, Atlanta, Ga.

Mrs. Mary Tobias Dean, a member of the faculty of the Atlanta University Laboratory School, has been appointed Program Specialist of the USO Headquarters Staff in Arts and Crafts. The position was recently created.

Mrs. Dean's headquarters are located in the Empire State Building, New York City. Her duties include the organizing and directing of arts and crafts programs for USO Clubs, and occasional lecturing at the USO Training Institute. The appointment is considered significant inasmuch as it is the first made irrespective of duties connected solely with Negroes.

Mrs. Dean's training and experience provide an excellent background for her new position. She engaged in the study of art at New York University, earning the bachelor's degree in fine arts. Subsequent graduate study, resulting in the master's degree in fine arts was obtained at Columbia University; and further study in this field was secured in European art centers.

Paintings by Mrs. Dean have exhibited in galleries in New York City; Atlanta, Georgia; New Orleans, Louisiana; and Nashville, Tennessee. For the past three years she was on the faculty of the Atlanta University Summer School serving as director of crafts in the arts and crafts workshop; and during the past two years she was on the staff of the Atlanta University Laboratory School. Prior to coming to Atlanta, Mrs. Dean taught art at Paine College in Augusta, and also at Bennett College, Greensboro, North Carolina.

The mother of two children, Mrs. Dean is the wife of Dr. William H. Dean of the Atlanta University economics department, who is now on leave serving as price executive and economic administrator for the Virgin Islands. She is the daughter of Dr. Channing H. Tobias, senior secretary for colored work of the National Council of the YMCA.

USO Volunteer Committee Meets

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

Invitations went out this week for a general meeting of the USO Volunteer Committee for the Soldiers' Lounge at the Terminal Station to be held at the Recreation Room in University Homes at 668 Fair St., SW Tuesday night, December 14, at 8:00 p. m.

It may come as a surprise to many people to know that there are still over two hundred Atlantans who give some of their time each month to keep this facility open for our boys who are passing through Atlanta. However, practically all these volunteers are women. More men are needed to volunteer for this service and especially to take care of a problem that is causing the Committee much embarrassment right now. Due to the lack of men on the Committee, the Negro lounge closes at eleven o'clock while the white lounge remains open until twelve. If more men would volunteer, it would be possible to keep the colored lounge open that extra hour and give service to the soldiers who come in to Atlanta or leave on the late trains.

Here is a challenge to Atlanta's men who are out of uniform to do something for the men in uniform. Come out to the meeting Tuesday night and sign up for service at the Lounge, it is urged.

SEP 25 1943

BY VIC[illegible]A S[illegible]

SHE'S neither a WAC nor a WAVE and she doesn't work in war plant, but Marva Louis is a champion in her own right like her husband, Joe Louis, the heavyweight boxing champion title holder. Birmingham, Ala.

Mrs. Louis doesn't follow Joe from camp to camp; in fact, she advises against that. She doesn't sit at home and pine while Joe's away; she's against that too.

But Mrs. Louis is one of the busiest woman in Chicago and wins the nomination for the "win-the-war" wife.

Besides caring for her young daughter, Jacqueline, Mrs. Louis finds time for many activities connected with winning the war on the home front while her husband takes his place on the fighting front. She is president of the Joe Louis Service Guild which has in its membership a varied group of women, including war workers, factory girls, school teachers, social workers, wives of professional men and just plain people.

SEP 25 1943

THE GUILD'S ACTIVITIES

SEP 25 1943

Guild members formerly made up a unit of the Women's Defense Corps of America that became independent when that organization refused to place a Negro woman on its executive board. But this severance of connections has not curtailed the activities of the guild at all.

Here are just a few of the things the Guild does to boost the morale of the men in service which, is a blueprint for a program of other women's groups that are seeking for a win-the-war program.

Each week the Guild sends an average of 150 Negro newspapers to the boys in service. Twice a month co[illegible] are sent to the armed forces. Regular contributions are made to servicemen's centers.

SEP 25 1943

Besides these contributions the Guild sponsors a number of entertainments for service men and sells war stamps and bonds in neighborhood theatres.

The guiding spirit of this group is Mrs. Louis who declares none of the Guild's success would have been posible if it had not been for the hard work of the girls who in almost every case are the wives, sweethearts, mothers or friends of men in the armed forces.

SEP 25 1943

Mrs. Louis's personal activities include visiting nearby U.S.O. Centers to address women hostesses, sponsoring dances at near by camps and demonstrating how a simple old black dress can be made attractive. (Marva loves beautiful clothes and wears them extremely well, but she realizes there is a war to be won and that the machines must not be deterred from turning out bombs, bullets which are much more important than new outfits).

Asked what she thought about women who follow their husbands to camp, Mrs. Louis declared:

"Occasional visits are all right but following your husband to camp just doesn't help to make him a good soldier. Service wives should find some work to do to help bring their men home sooner.

MOST IMPORTANT

SEP 25 1943

"Service wives should join a service organization or take a job in a war plant. They shouldn't just give up and wait until the war is over. They should help to win it."

"One way they can help is by buying bonds," she said.

SEP 25 1943

Regretfully, Mrs. Louis admitted she was saving the gloves for her grandchildren, but then the war came along and she parted with one of them to help raise money for the servicemen. She said somewhat ruefully:

"That's what happened to most of our relics. Joe says that some day he will come home to find that I have given away the house for bonds.

Another project which the Guild is planning is the opening of a nursery schol for children of mothers working in war industries in the South Side area.

"It is up to the women, all the women, to pitch right in and help win the war," Mrs. Louis declared.

NOV 27 1943

BOSTON—If the USO management of the Buddies Club insists on its rule that colored hostesses must refuse to dance with white service men when the latter request a dance, this town needs an international USO where all races will be free to mingle.

This was the proposal of Julian Steele, director of the Armstrong-Hemingway Foundation and president of the NAACP branch here, before USO directors Thursday.

At fi[illegible]his Buddies USO Club which [illegible] Boston [illegible]mon less than 50 feet from the spot where Crispus Attucks fell, barred colored hostesses, because 49 white hostesses would resign.

The Halsey Article

Dear Editor:

While sitting here in camp reading PM [illegible] very warm sensation of gratitude from the article written by Margaret Halsey concerning colored men at the Stage Door Canteen. I salute her for myself and the human race. Many are the articles and books I have read concerning the everlasting Negro problem, yet none that was so to the point.

I've had the article posted on the bulletin board for all to peruse and expect to have mimeographed copies sent to all the companies in my outfit.

I have just read a shocking and revolting article in the form of a memo to Junior Hostesses by a Margaret Halsey [illegible] consummation of [illegible] degraded thought that is contaminating our country.

Redding Sees USO A Basis For Building Youth Culture

Journal and Guide Norfolk, Virginia

(See "A Second Look"—Page 8)

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Vastly important spade work in community operations, welfare work and education is being done for the Negro servicemen, war workers, and other civilians at USO Centers. This is the conclusion drawn by J. Saunders Redding, Journal and Guide columnist and author of the best seller, "No Day of Triumph," who recently returned from a three weeks' tour of USO clubhouses which he took to gather material for a comprehensive article for a leading magazine on the care this organization is providing the Negro.

CLAN TENDENCY

"There is a strong tendency on the part of the Negro to be clannish in community operations, but I noticed a signal improvement in this respect in those communities where a USO clubhouse was located.

"Because club directors must call upon all reputable local organizations to fill the large order of providing entertainment and care for servicemen and their families, these organizations, if they wish to share in the war effort, are compelled to give up this greedy preservation of their own individuality and work cooperatively for a common good.

WELFARE WORK

"Home hospitality, such an important feature of USO programs, is provided largely through the churches, which are in contact with resident families, so that religious groups too must work in unity.

"No one faith or denomination can possibly supply all the needs to all the men, just as the resources of no one civic or fraternal organization can suffice. This inter-organizational and inter-church cooperation is a very important innovation in Negro life.

"The welfare work done by the directors is equally necessary. This type of work applies more to the centers for war workers than for service men. To these come thousands of young girls and young men who are thrown into a new community and a new life. USO not only provides healthful recreation for them but sees to it that they are respectably housed and hygienically guarded. Negro social agencies are not yet organized thoroughly enough to do this work alone."

Mr. Redding believes that the benefits provided by USO in the cultural and educational field are perhaps the most vital contribution of all.

He declared himself particularly impressed by the courses in music appreciation and was amazed to see the eagerness with which the men listened to long symphonic recordings and those of operas and concert recitals.

DEVELOPS CULTURE

"There was still another phase of the educational work which impressed me," stated the author, "and that was the courses given the young hostesses who volunteer to dance with and entertain the men. Because there is a comparatively small leisure class among Negroes, many of these hostesses come from homes which have no cultural background.

"The club directors make a point of teaching these girls practical lessons in social behavior—how to approach the men in an easy, friendly, but not forward manner, how to conduct themselves in a courteous and gracious way, how to dance and dress in a becoming fashion. These girls are truly receiving instruction and experience which will stand them in good stead all their lives."

Mr. Redding also writes for such magazines as Harper's, the Atlantic Monthly and Mercury. He received his Phi Beta Kappa key at Brown University, Providence, R. I., and is a member of the English faculty at Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va.

Camp Blanding Musical Revue Makes A Big Hit

AUG 7 1943

CAMP BLANDING, Fla.—'Till Taps," the surprise musical revue with an all-Negro cast of stellar performers from the enlisted ranks at Camp Blanding, scored its second triumph Wednesday, July 28, before a capacity audience at the USO-NCCS club, Third and Mt Herman streets, Jacksonville.

Outstanding features of the show was the singing of Corporal Frederic Thomas, talented baritone who, before entering the service had appeared in recital in New York's Carnegie Chamber Music Hall. No less popular with the audience is the singing of Pct. Rudolph High, of New York, Cpl. Eddite Johnson, of New York, and Cpl. Charles Waterford of Chicago.

The all-soldier orchestra, made up of many former stars of name bands during their civilian life, also came in for wide acclaim with a modern arrangement of "Swampfire" and other numbers that brought rounds of applause.

Cpl. Thomas' big number was 'Stouthearted Men" with a choral background. Cpl. High was well received with "Round the World" songs on the guitar, with his feature number, "Hot Dogs, They are Very Fine." Cpl. Clarence Clayton, of Richmond, Va., demonstrated modern rhythm with a specialty tap dance. Cpl. Eddie Johnson gave a new interpretation to the well known Gershwin favorites, "Summertime." Cpl. Charles Waterford sang "Rose Ann of Charing Cr and "Charmaine." Cpl. Waterford was formerly with Andy Kirk's orchestra.

Pfc. Walter Pinkston was prominent throughout the show with piano offerings of quality. The orchestra under the direction of Sgt. Woodrow Williams of Orange, New Jersey, gave many impersonations of nationally known name bands and received an ovation from the audience. Sgt. Christopher Kemp, New York City, was featured in "One O'Clock Jump." Pvts. Allen Leggett and Sidney Williams, both of Starke, Fla., were presented in a red hot jam session.

Others who contributed largely to the success of "Till Taps" included Cpl. Millard Watkins, Richmond, Va.; Pvt. Joseph N. Blunt, Newark, N. J.; Pvt. Benjamin Maxwell, Savannah, Ga.; Pvt. John D. Speight, Johnstown, Pa.; Pvt. Franklin C. Brown, Philadelphia, Pa.; Pvt. Sidney B. Little, San Diego, Calif.; Pvt. James T. McBride, East St. Louis, Ill.; Cpl. Cedric R. Ryson, Baltimore, Md.; Pvt. War Bonds and Stamps

ONLY FOUR DAYS REMAI TO SPEED UP BOND SALES

Birmingham, Ala., Age-Herald
September 22, 1943

BY INEZ STEWART TUGGLE

Only four days remain for Jefferson County to subscribe $3,918,000 to reach its quota of $31,918,000 in the Third War Loan drive.

Alabama has between now and midnight Saturday to raise $22,680,000 if it is to maintain its heretofore enviable record and rank with other states in the sale of War Bonds. The state Tuesday night ranked 26 in the nation's poll of states, with $85,320,000, or 79 per cent, of its $108,000,000 quota raised, according to a report from the U. S. Treasury Department, an Associated Press dispatch said.

Jefferson County's War Bond purchases continued to mount Tuesday, with $2,000,000 added to the county's total during the day, bringing to $28,000,000 the amount of bonds purchased since the drive opened Sept. 9.

In announcing Tuesday's total, Judge Clarence W. Allgood, Thomas Bowron and J. B. Haslam, Jefferson County drive leaders, issued a renewed appeal for more E. Bond purchases, pointing out that thousands of the county's residents have yet to buy an extra bond during the campaign.

Ed Leigh McMillan, Alabama's War Bond chairman, Tuesday continued to emphasize the necessity of individual participation in the "back-the-attack" Third War Loan program.

Asserting that the sacrifice for victory must be narrowed down to the individual Alabamian, Mr. McMillan said statistics indicated that a great number of the state's residents are not doing their own personal share in the drive.

"The records show," he said, "that many an Alabamian is letting others do his War Bond buying just as he is letting others do his fighting for him."

Gratified, however, by the response of many Jefferson County citizens and corporations, Jefferson County's drive leaders also stressed the need for additional purchases by the small investor.

"Every $100, $50, and $25 bond purchaser is important. It signifies his willingness to invest in the future security of the county and state," state and county leaders asserted.

Negroes Pass Quota

Having passed the $300,000 mark Sunday, Negro War Bond workers of Jefferson County Tuesday reported sales in their division had reached the sum of $331,500, adding that many groups were busy in special activities in connection with the Third War Loan drive.

Negro Red Cross Nurses Aids are selling War Stamps in theater lobbies and making house-to-house appeals, and an Avondale Negro School reported sale of $40.90 worth of stamps Monday, the largest sales for a single day in their records.

Heading the drive among Negro workers are S. J. Bennett, chairman, and C. W. Askew and W. H. Hollins, co-chairmen.

Part of the nationwide appeal for $15,000,000,000, the drive in Jefferson County and Alabama will be brought to a close at midnight Saturday.

ALL URGED TO INVEST

Asserting that the Treasury Department is concerned by the lag in individual purchases in the Third War Loan drive, Frank E. Tripp, chairman of the Allied Newspaper Council, asserted in an Associated Press dispatch from Washington Tuesday night that "the Third War Loan is as personal to us as a Nazi or Japanese bullet is to our son and neighbors' sons."

"Although the figures on the drive are good," Mr. Tripp's message continued, "the Third War Loan drive is an absolute failure for one who has not bought extra War Bonds. If we are thinking up excuses for not buying extra bonds, we don't deserve the sacrifices being made for us on the bloody beaches of Europe and the Pacific."

Colored People Aided War Bond Drive In City

The Colored people in this community were very active in the War Bond Drive during September, Mrs. Hugh T. Birchett, chairman of the Woman's Division of the War Finance Committee, said today.

Hopewell's colored population was responsible for a total of $387.10, representing the sale of bonds, stamps and corsages.

Mrs. Ethel Cunningham acted as general chairman of the committee in charge of the Bond Rally and the sale of War Stamps, while corsages were under the chairmanship of Mrs. Annie McCoy, Mrs. Birchett said.

A report of the Bond Rally showed $272 in War Bonds, $66.75 in War Stamps and $48.35 in Corsages.

YES, THAT'S WHAT HE SAID" . . . $100,000 WAR BOND

SEP 24 1943

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — (SNS) — "My, my!" exclaimed Eddie "Rochester" Anderson, of Jack Benny radio fame as he congratulated Lt. George W. Lee, general chairman of the Negro Division of the War Bond Sales Committee and E. L. Simon, of Atlanta, Ga., on purchases of $100,000 worth of war bonds for the Atlanta Life Insurance Co., during the big war bond rally at Ellis Auditorium Monday night of this week. Rochester is seen giving a victory hand shake to Mr. Simon, Assistant Agency Director of the Atlanta Life shortly after he received an eloquent introduction to a near capacity crowd of three thousand spectators in South Hall by Lt. Lee, (Facing camera), manager of the Memphis office of the Atlanta Life. Sam W. Qualls, Jr., left end, served as master of ceremonies. He autographed the Atlanta Life bonds and thousands of dollars worth of bonds for other admirers.

The noted comedian made a flying trip from Hollywood to be present for the rally. His arrival vie one of the flagships of the American Air Line was greeted by upward of fifty prominent citizens, including the Booker T. Washington high school band which swung out on the "Memphis Blues" as Rochester stepped from his plane.

Accelerated by the presence of Rochester, Monday was a "red letter day" in war bond sales with schools, business houses, and individuals bringing the aggregate since the beginning of the Third War Loan Drive up to over $800,000.00 among colored people of Memphis. Goal for Negro Memphis in this Drive is Two Million Dollars which the War Bond Sales Committee expects to reach by Monday of next week when William C. Handy, daddy of the blues, takes over as master of ceremonies at the greatest second of the two war bond sales rally at Ellis Auditorium, North Hall.

But Monday was "Rochester Day" in Memphis. The beloved comedian stayed in character as he greeted admirers up and down Beale Street, service men at Kennedy [illegible], the Variety Club, operated by theatre owners, and other show personalities; and at WREC raido station where he gave a brief radio program in the late afternoon.

Warning Amid Celebration

Celebration is widespread and justified over the magnificent triumph of Allied arms which has resulted in the capitulation of Italy.

Colored people, remembering Italy's unprovoked aggression against Ethiopia and [illegible] senseless slaughter of black patriots by Fascism in that unhappy land, are overjoyed at the swift turn of events.

Coupled with the good news from the Russian and Pacific fronts, these reports of military victory in the Mediterranean and devastating bombing of German industrial centers cannot help but arouse optimism concerning the ultimate outcome of the global struggle.

But it would be a mistake, of course, to think that the war is won.

We have done no more than take a few Japanese outposts in the Pacific.

Nevertheless, the war is closer to successful conclusion than it was a year or even six months ago, and we should begin to think more seriously about the tremendous problems that will come with the peace.

Almost every American able to work is now working and making more money than at any time since World War I.

With the coming of the peace, there cannot possibly be as many jobs available as there are today, and unless America undergoes a profound change in viewpoint, Negro workers will be among the first to feel the pinch of unemployment.

Under the circumstances, Negro workers will be wise to invest as much money in war bonds as they possibly can—and put the bonds a[illegible] in safe deposit boxes.

The current practice of cashing these war bonds as soon as the sixty days have elapsed after purchase is foolish and shortsighted, and those who have succumbed to the temptation to do so will come to regret their action, and perhaps sooner than they think.

Vast sums of money are being spent needlessly by war workers for inflation-priced goods and services with which they could do without.

The question which presents itself to every worker is whether to do without some of these exorbitantly priced goods and services now or to do without food, clothing, rent and education after the war is over.

The worker with a batch of war bonds at the end of the conflict will be able to stand unemployment for a long time without suffering.

The worker who has no war bonds will find himself or herself back on relief.

Negroes' Rally To Push Bonds

Columbus Ga [illegible]

November 15, 1943

The Negro Insurance Managers Council is sponsoring its second War Bond rally in front of the colored USO Army and Navy Y next Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 17, "to keep alive the fact that Americans at home must stand behind the man behind the gun," officials announced.

This second War Bond rally is under the direction of the Muscogee County Negro War Bond committee and is being held through the cooperation of the Regional Negro Defense Savings staff which is located at Tuskegee Institute and which works directly under the treasury department. The first rally, which was held in March of this year, netted well over $15,000 in war bonds and stamps.

The big parade of school children and Negro citizens of this community, will be led by the Tuskegee Army Air Force band which will end the program by giving a public band concert. It is possible that the Reception Center band as well as Spencer High school band will also participate in the entertainment and another big afternoon is promised to all who attend, the committee said.

This rally will be another of the civic programs fostered recently by the Negro Insurance Managers Council and a record crowd is expected to attend. A statement issued by the council Sunday urged "every citizen—whether white or colored—who believes in this war effort and who is willing to lend his money for this cause, be present at this rally along with his check book or his stamp book."

War Bond Show Opens Campaign

Courier

Pittsburgh, Pa.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 16—The United States Treasury's 15-billion dollar Third War Loan drive got off to a [illegible] start last week with an exposition on the Washington Monument grounds here in which Negroes, in both the military and civilian aspects of the war effort, played an important part.

In a 16-acre tract, the Treasury has assembled an exhibition of every conceivable type of war weapon, and is running twice daily a performance of soldiers and war machines in action.

PITTSBURGH GIRL GIVES DEMONSTRATION

In both the exhibitions and the performances Negroes participate.

A Pittsburgh girl, Mrs. Ruth Austin Corbin, now working at the Army Air Depot at Middletown, Pa., is in the aeronautics show demonstrating delicate altimeter instruments. From the Anti-Aircraft school at Camp Tyson, Paris, Tennessee, four Negro [illegible]ers have been sent to demonstrate the use of army barrage balloons. They are Sgts. Lloyd D[illegible] of Ennis, Texas; Frank Patterson of Marianna, Ark.; Joseph Dorsey of New Orleans, and Pvt. George Heywood of Dallas, Texas.

In the army chapel, built as a replica of army chapels in thousands of army camps and posts, Major John DeVeaux, who accompanied Bishop Gregg on his South Pacific mission, has been assigned to conduct daily religious services together with white chaplains representing the Jewish and Catholic faiths.

"The Back The Attack" show, given twice daily, and seen already by more than 200,000 persons, gives a prominent part to a Negro quartermaster truck company and to a Negro cavalry squadron from Fort Myers, Va., under the command of [illegible] Sherman Sullivan. On smartly groomed cavalry mounts, the squadron stops the show as it goes through maneuvers ending in a swift cavalry charge.

Recommends Thrift Clubs For Bond Buying

By Wm. Pickens (For ANP)

You know P. L. Prattis, of the Pittsburgh Courier. As he told me about [illegible] years ago, his initials can be remembered by thinking of "Poor Little" Prattis. Claude A. Barnett, of the Associated Negro Press, with which Prattis worked for many years, esteemed Prattis as "one of the best newspaper craftsmen in the country."

Well, Prattis has an idea which he is putting into operation in his city, and which we hand on here because it is workable in any city, town, hamlet or rural place, it is an idea of how to prepare for the difficult economic mal-adjustments (not to say "depression") which is sure to follow in the wake of this great war. It has to do with the purchase and holding of War Bonds. [illegible] so very simple: Let any respected and trusted leader of the community organize a thrift club, let us say (for example) of 100 members, each member pledging to buy for himself one $25 E-series Bond each month. In one year that $18.75 per month will have for each member a maturity value of $300, or for the 100 members $30,000. If they be so fortunate as to be able to buy these government Bonds for five years there will be for these 100 people a total [illegible] maturity value of $150,000. That will [illegible] great sum in the safest bank in the world—the treasury of the United States.

How to do it? Let us see how Prattis is conducting his club: each member buys his own Bond during the month, copies down its serial number in his own records, and to remove the temptation of cashing the Bonds for any temporary convenience, turns the Bond over to Mr. Prattis who deposits all of them in some safe government depository—like the federal reserve bank. But, mark you, it makes no difference in the end if a Bond be lost or burned or stolen: for each Bond is recorded at the treasury in the name of the one who purchased it, and only that one can cash it. And all he will have to do if it be lost is to properly identify himself. And we are asking each such leader to send us the serial numbers of the Bonds bought by his club members and deposited with him, each month, so that we can keep a file of them in the inter-racial section.

If these 100 members stand by for 10 years, they will own together the sum of $150,000 on purchases for the first five years of that time, and proportionately more if they have purchased Bonds in the 6th, 7th, and succeeding years.

That is a tidy sum for 100 people of any race to hold in their possession; but it will be very handy for a Negro group to tide itself over the period when 10 million of the "boys" will be returning from the front, and more than 20 million others will be let out of the war plants until private industry can re-absorb them. With a backing like that, those colored people will be able to negotiate that "first fired—last hired" hurdle. They may [illegible] organize a little business of their own,—for the club.

MRS. NELL HUNTER

On a cross-country tour to set up machinery for war saving programs, Mrs. Nell Hunter, one of the four Negro promotion specialists in the war finance division of the treasury department, spent several days in Des Moines this week.

Mrs. Hunter visited the WAC training center at Ft. Des Moines Sunday and on Monday met a group of bond and stamp selling workers in an effort to expand her program to reach every women's organization before the third war bond drive is launched in September.

She explained her committee as a "clearing house of all the Negro is doing in the war savings extra curricula buying."

Mrs. Hunter who was remembered by Des Moines citizens from her appearance as a soloist in the "Green Pastures" is holding her first non-musical job. A mezzo soprano she has not appeared on the concert stage since 1935, but sings whenever invited. She was soloist Sunday morning at the St. Paul A.M.E. church.

In an interview Monday Mrs. Hunter stressed the importance of mothers and housewives urging their husbands, fathers and brothers to "take a lead in building up a savings in the safest banking institution in the country, the United States government."

The other Negro specialists of this finance division are: William Pickens, Willard Allen and John Whitten.

COLORED CHILDREN BUYING WAR STAMPS

A plan was initiated by the supervisor of the first teachers' meeting whereby all school children, P. T. A. members, and patrons in all school commuuities might do their part by purchasing War Savings Stamps at the school on Tuesday morning of each week.

Ten cent stamp books have been placed in the hands of most of the children and a few twenty-five cent books were given to the teachers for the parents. On Tuesday morning of each week the mail carriers on the rural routes have been carrying stamps with them and the banker for the week in each school has been meeting the mail carrier at the box nearest the school in order to purchase stamps for the entire group.

The children have a great deal of fun watching their stamp book grow. The total amount purchased and reported since Oct. 1, was $12.40. Jerusalem led this month with a total of $4.80, Each month a total amount for the month will be published.

Children Take Bonds of $263,146

CHICAGO, Ill. — Negro public school children of the South-Central District of Chicago set another record when they purchased $263,148.83 in War Bonds and Stamps in a special campaign which ended last month. Twenty-four schools participated.

The campaign was climaxed by a huge rally in Washington Park on June 4, which included a parade of 6,000 school children starting at 35th street and South Parkway.

Led by members of the ROTC, they marched to Washington Park where a joint check was presented to representatives of the Treasury and War Departments, with a request it be used to purchase 125 jeeps, two pursuit planes and a motorcycle for the fighting forces.

A feature of the exercises was the christening of several jeeps by school girls representing the bond purchasers.

Treasury awards, including the Minute Man Flag and merit certificates for each school, were presented by Major C. Udell Turpin, senior deputy of the Illinois War Bond sales staff, representing the Treasury Department.

Negroes Urged To Buy Bonds

The Negro Citizens committee of South Carolina is urging every Negro to enter whole-heartedly in the Third War Loan drive, and to purchase bonds to the fullest extent of his economic ability, E. A. Adams, chairman, said yesterday.

"It is the patriotic duty of all American citizens to support the war effort with each dollar that can be spared," Chairman Adams declared. "It should never be said that Negroes are not loyal and patriotic, for this is our country and we know no other, nor are we in sympathy with any other country. Our money should and must aid in helping to pay for the war effort."

"Negroes have a stake in this war," he continued, "for nearly every home has been touched in some manner by those inducted into the armed services of the country, and our money must send to them the things that are vitally necessary for winning the war. Negroes must not only realize they have a stake in the war, but must be willing to fight for that stake."

Negro Goal In War Fund Set At $2,500

Negr es Urged To Buy Bonds

The Negro Citizens committee of South Carolina is urging every Negro to enter whole-heartedly in the Third War Loan drive, and to purchase bonds to the fullest extent of his economic ability, E. A. Adams, chairman, said yesterday.

"It is the patriotic duty of all American citizens to support the war effort with each dollar that can be spared," Chairman Adams declared. "It should never be said that Negroes are not loyal and patriotic, for this is our country and we know no other, nor are we in sympathy with any other country. Our money should and must aid in helping to pay for the war effort."

"Negroes have a stake in this war," he continued, "for nearly every home has been touched in some manner by those inducted into the armed services of the country, and our money must send to them the things that are vitally necessary for winning the war. Negroes must not only realize they have a stake in the war, but must be willing to fight for that stake.

Tuskegee Band Helps Raise Million In Bonds

Defender Chicago, Ill

TUSKEGEE ARMY AIR FIELD, Ala.—Making over 52 personal appearances in the last 30 days, the military band of the Tuskegee army Air Field is probably the busiest band in the army.

Aside from local obligations on this field, First Lieutenant Frank L. Drye, of Tuskegee, director of the band, and his sixty-five musicians, have aided in raising more tha na million dollars in the state bond rally through civic organizations, schools, colleges and various institutions.

This bond rally began last October, when the stirring music of the TAAF band swelled out and down the streets of Luverne, Ala., and stimulated the purchase of $10,000 worth of bonds. This was merely the beginning. At Selma, the bond purchase soared to $25,000, and in Montgomery it went to $50,000.

Having traveled more than 3,000 miles throughout the state, there is hardly any city or town that the band has not visited on the "bond selling campaign." From this aggregation, the Post Orchestra, known as the Imperial Wings of Rhythm, under the direction of Sgt. Claude Garvey was organized; carrying the bond rally into schools, social organizations, clubs and numerous municipal institutions.

Working in connection with, and under the auspices of the National Division, War Saving Staff for Alabama, of which Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, is chairman, the TAAF band has enjoyed state-wide popularity.

T. M. Campbell, consultant; and Jesse O. Thomas, national organizations division director, both on the War Savings Staff for the State of Alabama, have aided in the success of this state-wide campaign.

The Tuskegee Army Air Forces Band, known officially as the 313th Army Air Forces Band, has the distinction of being the first Negro Air Forces band; having been activated April 21, 1942, by Captain Clyde H. Bynum, post adjutant. It already has established a reputation of having one of the best set of musicians in the armed forces. The TAAF military band's personnel is made up entirely of enlisted men.

Tennessee School Children Invest $1,365 In War Effort

JOHNSON CITY, Tenn.—(SNS)—AND A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM. The ninety-five boys and girls enrolled at Douglass Elemetary School in Johnson City, Tennessee have made a magnificent start on seeing that this well known phrase holds true for their immediate community.

With the aid of their teachers, $1,365.75 has been invested in war bonds and stamps during the past school year. The school has also been 100 percent active in the city-wide school savings bank system.

During the last days of school the fifth graders honored the sixth grade pupils with a formal banquet on the occasion of their being promoted to Junior High School. With the aid of the mothers, a wonderful affair resulted. Booklets contained the class colors, flower, motto, roll, faculty roster, program and menu. The banquet was carried out in real "grown up" style with after dinner talks being made by parents and students alike.

A splendid tribute to Mother was found in the annual Mother's day celebration of the school. Mrs. E. E. Ewing delivered the address on this occasion. All others numbers on the program were rendered by the pupils themselves.

An outstanding accomplishment of the year was the Douglass Chronicle, a publication of the school. Doris Earnest as Editor in Chief with a promising younf staff, included news, jokes, a crossword puzzle, honor rolls for the classes and recipes using food from the "Victory Gardens."

The project for the school PTA this summer will be the encouragement of parents and adult friends in the purchasing of stamps and bonds, and a Girl Scout Training Class which is to meet twice weekly.

The teachers of this school are Miss O. M. Claiborne, Mrs. E. S. Witten and Miss B. B. Ellis, principal.

Colored School Teachers Sign Up For War Bonds

Every teacher in the colored schools of Jackson is now investing ten per cent or more of salary in War Bonds, according to a report made to the Hinds County War Savings Staff by E. W. Banks, chairman of the negro board.

Banks also reported that more than seventy per cent of college faculties were buying War Bonds and that ninety per cent of the professional men were making ten per cent investments.

During December the negro board sponsored programs in the P. T. A. organizations of the schools to explain the war savings work to the parents of students.

There has been a marked increase in war savings interest in the colored schools, according to Banks, and to date the 452 students have bought $1,159.40 in War Stamps and Bonds.

Regular booths are kept in operation by women's division of the Negro War Savings Board, and outstanding work has been done by these groups.

The excellent work of the negro board was complimented at the Hinds County War Savings Staff meeting on Monday, and a vote of appreciation given for the report made by Banks.

Leaders Attend Negro Bond Rally

An OPA order removing all retrictions on having tires recapped or retreaded with camelback, effective about March 1, was expected this week.

The OPA was ordered to take the action by Rubber Director William Jeffers who said that there would be enough reclaimed rubber to carry out the program.

The order will not end the present rigid control over purchase of renovated tires but will permit car owners to have their own tires recapped without government authorization.

Jeffers asked that the order be issued as a rubber conservation measure. OPA sources explained that it would result in a saving of rubber since it is designed to encourage movement. There's no limit to the number of salaries the government could pay

Negro Part in War Spotlighted as Houston Gives $85,749,884.24 for New Cruiser Houston and Carrier

John W. Rice On Platform As Notables From Washington Praise City for Effort In Raising Money In Bond Buying Campaign

Praise of notables from Washington, including Jesse Jones and Secretary Frank Knox of the navy, was given all races and creeds for the part the city played in raising, through bond sales, $85,749,884.24 with which to pay for a crusier Houston. The certificate for this huge amount was presented to Secretary Knox at ceremonies at the Coliseum Monday night before a crowd estimated at 6,000 enthusiastic and patriotic persons.

Seated on the platform with high naval, army and marine officers, senators, congressmen and city officials, was John W. Rice, Negro educator and state NYA Negro director.

Chosen to speak on unity, his speech evoked loud and prolonged applause. This is believed to be the first time in history of the South that a Negro has been chos speak to a patriotic meeting composed of 99 per cent white people.

Rice was the only Houstonian to speak on the program with the possible exception of Attorney Charles I. Francis, who served as master of ceremonies.

Negroes were proud of Rice because they felt that he had been selected to represent the city of Houston, whether of not this was the cause.

His address which will be found elsewhere in this issue was earily the keynote address.

"BOND SALES AMONG NEGROES

Montgomery's Negro citizens are authority for the statement that their recent successful war bond selling rally proved a wonderful morale-builder. The war was brought home to them as never before and they were made to feel that they were part of it in a very impressive way.

The bond-selling campaign among colored citizens was sponsored by the Negro Civic and Improvement League, J. E. Pierce, chairman, and R. L. Battle secretary. It continued for one week and closed with a big parade, headed by the Tuskegee airport band, and a rally at the city auditorium, where Gov. Sparks made an inspirational address. At the end of the week it was announced that $47,850 worth of bonds and stamps had been sold, and this represented many hundreds of purchases by hundreds of people many of whom were making real and genuine sacrifice to do their part.

Attention is called to this campaign at this time to encourage the hope of the Negro leaders that the good work will be continued and that subscriptions and purchases will continue to be made because of the continuing need.

MAR 7 - 1943

It would be gratifying to every citizen of Montgomery to know that the members of the Negro race in the community are showing such interest in this patriotic cause and are participating so heartily in the sacrifices that must be made by all to insure the great victory that is ahead.

Negroes Here Parade Monday Afternoon for War Stamp Purchases

Cairo's 500 Negro students of Washington High School, their teachers and other leaders in the Negro organization supporting the War Bond and Stamp campaign formed an impressive parade last Monday afternoon and bought War Stamps from the Cairo post office. The parade, which was promoted by Green Johnson and other leaders, attracted much interest as it proceeded through the city.

The long column of students was replete with color-bearers and numerous student-made posters containing timely war slogans and splendid cartoons of Hitler, Tojo and other Axis leaders. "A War Stamp a Day Will Keep the Japs Away" was a popular slogan.

A special booth was arranged in front of the post office where Clerk Frank Lane sold the stamps. The teachers made the purchases for the students in each grade so as to expedite the sales. Every student purchased at least one stamp and a considerable total was realized.

Green Johnson, one of the leaders, swelled the purchases by buying a bond to give his wife for a birthday anniversary present and she then bought a bond, also.

He said steady purchases by local Negroes will be maintained and stimulated by means of a contest, plans for which are now being completed.

BRICKLAYERS BUY BONDS. AID TEACHERS' PAY FIGHT

MAR 4 - 1943

Atlanta labor unions are taking the lead in civic activities if the record of the Bricklayers and Masons Subordinate Union No. 9 is any example.

MAR 4 - 1943

This group of Negro craftsmen has just contributed $25 to the Citizens Committee to be used in the teachers fight for equalization of salaries, an action which shows the interest of Negro craftsmen in the struggles of other Negro organizations to secure decent wages.

The action was interpreted by many as a distinct challenge to those teachers who have so far given nothing to their own fight since the bricklayers have nothing to gain themselves.

Showing that the organization is interested also in general affairs. President W. E. Newman has also announced the purchase of $1,000 in bonds for the new U. S. Steamship Atlanta.

MAR 4 - 1943

In commenting on the action of his local, A. V. Jett, financial secretary, said that "If what we have done will serve in any way to create more interest and enthusiasm in the furtherance of the teachers fight for equalization of salaries, we feel honored and proud that we are able to help."

Officers of the union which has set this pace in civic activities are, in addition to President Newman, the Rev. L. C. Clack, vice-presiden; the Rev. J. Allen James, recording secretary; A. V. Jett, financial and recording secretary and Robert Norwood, treasurer.

TUSKEGEE, July 22.—Macon County has been given a bond and stamp quota of $76,500 for July, a figure approximately double its average monthly quota, and redoubled efforts by the public are needed if this total is to be reached.

This quota of $29,300 representing purchases of $1 per person in the county is added to the Series E Bond quota of $39,200 and the Series F and G quota of $8,000.

Negroes Invest Funds In Stamps

For the second time in recent weeks, a negro organization had weeks a negro organization in Barnwell County has purchased war savings stamps with monies in their treasury instead of buying bonds. The Sweetwater Baptist Church is the most recent group to make a purchase of this kind and they follow the lead of the Barnwell Negro Masonic Lodge, which purchased stamps several weeks ago.

In this most recent case, as was true in the first, the members making the purchase for the organization stated that they were doing it in order that Uncle Sam would have the use of their money in fighting the war without having to pay interest, as would be the case if was savings bonds were bought. The darkies are thus showing their patriotism by letting the government use their money and not obtaining the interest on it which is offered through the purchase of bonds.

LOCAL WAR LOAN CONTINUES TO LAG; NEGROES OVER TOP

Macon, Ga., News
September 25, 1943

As the Third War Loan drive rolls into its final week Monday, Georgia and Bibb county lag sadly behind their quota, according to a report issued in Atlanta this morning. Georgia as a whole ranked 39th in the nation while in Bibb county only $2,544,128 worth of bonds had been sold, a little more than half its quota of $5,628,000.

Meanwhile, however, the Negro War Bond committee has exceeded its goal by 25 per cent, Frank Hutchings, chairman, reported.

This group has sold $38,800 worth of War Bonds although its goal was only $30,000.

"We're shooting at $50,000 now and I believe we are going to make it," he said.

* * *

MAMIE REDDING CLEMONS, 107 Franklin street, gave the campaign a big boost when she purchased a $20,000 bond in honor of her former music students now in the armed forces.

Hutchings just about had his hands full Tuesday totin' the money for a $5,000 bond bought by another Negro.

"He keeps his money around the house and called me up and told me to come and get it," the chairman related. "He said to bring something along for the change so I just took two regular money bags.

"However, when I got there he was counting out $570 in nickles, dimes and pennies and I didn't have anywhere to put it all.

"So he loaned me a couple of flour sacks to fill with this change and small bills. I had quite a load when I left."

Airfield Boosts War Bond Sales

TUSKEGEE ARMY AIR FIELD, Ala.—Climaxing what has been the most successful War Bond drive in the history of the Tuskegee Army Air Field, it was announced at a mammoth mass meeting that sales had reached the unprecedented high of $91,000, far in advance of the quota of $75,000. It is expected that before the final tabulation is made, that sales will swell the amount of $100,000.

Most of the success for the Tuskegee showing in the War Bond Drive may be attributed to the salesmanship of First Lt. Alexander B. Rose, Post War Bond Officer, who would greet you most any time of the day with, "How about some 'Jack' to back the attack?"

The title, "The Organization Purchasing The Largest Number of War Bonds," befell the 309th Sub-Depot Supply.

Prior to the rally, the 313th AAF Band headed a parade of the entire personnel of the Sub-Depot Supply. n the van of this marching column rolled a 'jeep' gayly bedecked with colorful posters commemorating the Third War Loan Drive. Seated in the "jeep" were a trio of lovelies representing the feminine pulchritude on display at the Sub-Depot.

Among those lending impetus to the gathering was the Post Commander, Colonel Noel F Parrish, who tendered bonds in the $1,000 class, of which Finley P. Tester, general foreman of the Sub-Depot, was the leading purchaser with two to his credit. H. A. Vaughn, Macon County Bond chairman, expressed his thanks to the 309th Sub-Depot Supply and Tuskegee Army Air Field, as a whole for their splendid effort in helping surpass the Macon County War Bond quota by over $300,000.

Blind Negro Peanut Vendor Buys First Greenville Bond

The touching story of how an aged, blind and ragged, but war-conscious delta negro—a peanut vendor—at Greenville saved pennies, nickles and dimes in order to be the first to buy a bond in Washington county's Third War Loan drive reached state headquarters today.

The negro, John Henry Harriss, known to Greenville citizens as "Blind Johnny," has been a peanut peddler in town for years, having supported his wife and four children from the sale of five-cent sacks of peanuts alone. His family roasts and sacks the peanuts, while "Blind Johnny" stays on the streets pushing his business. Soldiers at the new Greenville air base boosted his income, and for the first time in his life, Blind Johnny's able to more than pay for "meat and bread for my wife and chillun."

In the fall of 1942, "Blind Johnny" went to bond headquarters and bought his first bond, which he still owns. When he heard about the Third War Loan he went to Alfred Mitchell, Washington war loan chairman, and told Mr. Mitchell he was saving money to buy the first bond in Washington county on September 9th.

Early on the 9th, Mr. Mitchell and Albert Cason, another war worker went to the negro's selling spot and told him the drive was on. "Blind Johnny" then took from an old sack, 995 pennies, and from a peanut sack he emptied out $8.75 in dimes and nickles. This left only a nickle necessary for a $25 bond. Walking over to a tree where his coat was hanging, the old negro scrapped up the extra nickle and purchased his bond.

"I'se still got that bond I bought last fall, and wants to buy this'n to help get the war over," the old negro grinned as he bought the bond. "I knows that money will come in powerfully handy when times ain't so good."

"If this blind negro can put every extra penny into bonds and still feel good about it, then there is no reason why the more fortunate can't buy," headquarters said. "The little he loaned isn't much in dollars and cents, but it represents a lot to him, and is a challenge to all of us to 'back the attack' to the best of our ability."

BUTLER GOES OVER TOP IN 3rd WAR LOAN DRIVE

County Quota Reached And Exceeded On Last Day Of September

47c

The 3rd War Loan drive in Butler county went over the top on the last day of the official campaign, September 30th, making the extra two days allowed unnecessary for this county to exceed the quota of $578,000. This quota was considered high for the county, in proportion to that assigned to others, but that fact never deterred the efforts of the War Savings Staff in going after the goal and in exceeding the amount assessed for Butler.

Col. Jeff P. Beeland, County Chairman, makes this statement regarding the successful campaign:

"The 3rd War Loan in Butler county was a success, due to the untiring efforts of the patriotic citizens. Every committee did its part, and as a result our men in the armed forces of the nation know that we do 'Back the Attack.'

"It will be several days before the final figures are released from the Treasury Department," Col. Beeland continues, "but a conservative figure is that we bought and sold more than $610,000 worth of bonds, exceeding our quota by more than $30,000.

"The beat committees did unusually fine work, as we realize that we have a very short cotton crop and no peanuts have been put on the market yet, which means that every farmer buying bonds truly made a sacrifice to buy.

"Those who work in the industrial plants doubled up to buy; especially so at the Merrimac, Alabama Mills and W. T. Smith Lumber Co. Many employees of these concerns bought more than twice their quota.

"The ladies' committee in Greenville sold more than $85,000, and the ladies' committees in every beat worked hard. The Negroes bought and sold more than $18,000 worth of Bonds and War Savings Stamps.

"Corporation buyers in large amounts in the county were the Alabama Power Co., Alabama Mills, Merrimac Hat Corp., and W. T. Smith Lumber Co.

"Individual purchases were actively reflected by the interest of the children who bought more than $300.00 worth one Thursday, and then more than $500.00 the following Tuesday."

Col. Beeland continues: "We put our shoulders to the wheel and together went over the top. With this fine spirit of cooperation and determination we can continue to win and be proud that we live in Butler county, where by joining hands success is won. Finally, by your work, and our work, all inclusive, we won!

"The figures for each beat are still incomplete, and as it is not fair to publish any until they are all in, it will be necessary to wait until the next issue of The Advocate to list them," he concludes.

Mrs. Calvin Poole, chairman of the ladies' division, thanks all who helped in the successful campaign. She states that she and her co-chairman, Mrs. Jo[illegible]d, are especially grateful [illegible] the women in Greenville who assisted in the "Door-Knocker" campaign here, when $85,000 worth of bonds were sold.

The members of the Fortnighters Club are directing this word of thanks and appreciation to the public for its interest and active part in the Third War Bond drive which closed recently. Committees composed of different representatives from various organizations, worked through a general steering committee and were thus able to reach and get response from individuals and business firms throughout the city.

It was through the efforts and full cooperation of these groups that the drive was successfully closed with a total of $56,750.00 in bond sales to the credit of the negro citizens of Athens, though the major portion of this amount was bought by local insurance firms.

The members of this Club, therefore, wish to express their gratitude and to highly commend all churches, schools, club groups, business organizations, and individuals for the genuine interest and true spirit of patriotism throughout the Third War Bond Drive.

Ga. Farmer Digs Up Old Dollar Bills To Buy Bonds

Defender
Chicago, Ill.
OCT 1943

WASHINGTON—Old style U. S. currency buried for years was dug up and used to purchase a $1,000 war bond by a Negro farmer residing just outside a small community in rural Georgia.

A spokesman for the Georgia State War Finance committee reported to the treasury this week that James A. Ragan, 54, a Negro veteran of the last war and a small farmer, walked into the war loan headquarters in Perry, Ga., carrying a dirt-caked flour sack in his hand.

He told the attendants he wanted to buy a War Bond. Assuming that he wanted one of the $25 bonds, the attendant offered him one and waited for the money. Rogan stated, however, that he wanted to buy a $1000 bond.

Then the amazed bond sellers watched the farmer open his soiled flour sack and pour out $750, all in old $5 bills (the bills were the larger sized one used prior to the current $5 bill). Ragan paid for his bond, explaining that he had been saving the money ever since he had first been mustered out of service after the first war. He had put it away bit by bit in a flour sack buried on the land he farms.

His story so impressed the Georgia war finance officials that it was broadcast over a national network.

C. C. Spaulding Volunteers Advice to Colored Editors

Washington.— Aug 12— (ANP) —Chatting with a group of young government executives representatives of the trained, keen young men who have been increasingly finding their way into government during this past decade, C. C. Spaulding. prominent insurance and business leader, made a number of observations last Monday as he paused for a few hours here.

"I should like to say to the Negro press which has done such an excellent job of keeping us informed during this period," said Mr. Spaulding, "that this is no time to rock the boat."

AUG 13 1943

"Our newspapers," he continued, "are not only our most efficient sources of information but they are our most effective moulders of opinion. They are doing a job of education.

"This means that great power rests in the hands of the editor and great responsibility is his also. As he directs our thinking, as he interprets happenings, so will the masses believe so that consciously or unconsciously the newspaper is responsible for many of the acts of the mass whose imagination and spirit it influences.

"I find that many white people who are really friends of the Negro and who are doing everything they can to improve conditions, are in some instances becoming disheartened. They are discouraged too by critics of their own race.

AUG 13 1943

"I maintain that there are three sides to this race question. These are: (1) the Negro's side: (2) the white man's side; (3) the right side, and I think we should be more interested in the right side at this particular time than any other."

A FINE PARADE.

Albany's Negro citizens staged a bond rally parade Friday afternoon that would have done credit to any community. Participated in by school units and other local organizations, it typified the patriotic spirit and civic consciousness of this community's Negro citizens and brought words of praise from all observers. Behind the parade itself were days of planning and hard work, and the pride of sponsors and marchers was fully justified.

It is no news to any Albanian that our Negro citizens have given loyal and effective support to the war program. Schools, churches, clubs and patriotic societies have responded to every call. Individuals have been steady buyers of War Bonds and Stamps. They have given of both time and money, and Friday's fine parade to the Municipal Auditorium, where the bond rally was held, was in line with repeated manifestations of patriotism and pride of citizenship.

Negro Board Selected To Increase War Bond Purchases In County

Benefits Of Holding Investments Until War Is Over To Be Stressed

Preparing for a further appeal for the purchase of War Bonds from Negro citizens, A. G. Gaston has been elected chairman of the Jefferson County Negro war finance advisory board, and the committee will meet Tuesday to select a chairman of the Negro division of the war savings staff and to name committees, assuring representation of every section and group in the county.

Gaston expressed confidence in the ability of citizens to buy more bonds and of the entire board to provide the leadership. He said that special stress will be laid on the purchase of War Savings Stamps with an education program designed to teach the many benefits of saving bonds after the war.

Harry Simms, of Tuskegee Institute, associate administrator of the war finance division for Alabama, announced at last week's meeting that a definite quota would be given all counties and monthly reports will be released to the public on their activities. Local citizens were congratulated by Simms on their successful work in the past drive.

E. J. Oliver, Fairfield principal, was elected vice chairman of the Negro war finance advisory board, L. W. Brown, photographer, secretary, and Father J. Clyde Perry, USO leader, treasurer. Board members are Oscar W. Adams, S. J. Bennett, A. D. Shores, C. J. Greene, the Rev. W. D. Hargrove, John Henry Smith, H. D. Coke, W. B. Johnson, L. L. Britt, Ebb Cox, Bishop D. Ward Nichols, E. FAMOUS NEGRO BAND IN CITY

Americus, Ga., Recorder
November 18, 1943

Bond Rally Attracts Large Crowd

Thousands of Sumter county and Americus Negro citizens were in town today to join in the bond parade behind the crack Tuskegee Army Air Force band.

Starting at two o'clock, at the Staley high school, on Lee street, the long parade moved through the crowd-lined business district to the Ball Park, where city, band, and American Legion officials together with local and state Negro leaders told of the urgent need for "backing the attack" with war bonds and stamp purchases.

The Tuskegee Army Band, one of the outstanding service bands in the country, thrilled the huge crowd gathered at the Ball Park, with a varied concert ranging from Sousie's choicest to "Pistol Packing Mamma".

Enthusiasm for war bond and stamp buying is high today among Americus and Sumter county colored people. Staley High and McKay Hill schools had exceeded expectations in stamp and bond purchases before the parade started.

Scores of farm families are expected to invest some of their cotton and peanut money in bonds before the day closes.

Indications are that many town people will transfer some of their savings to war bonds and stamps investments.

The Negro Central Planning committee, the Farmer's Advisory Council, and the Rural teachers organizations have done a fine job in organizing and arousing interest and activity in this whole phase of the war's prosecution.

Farley of the USO, Prof. Lampkin, principal of Spencer High school and Prof. Sims and Prof. Campbell of Tuskegee Institute, who head the regional War Savings staff for Negroes.

HOPES NEGROES CAN HONOR SERVICE MEN

Dr. L. C. Downing, Negro member of the Roanoke war finance committee, announced yesterday that plans are being considered by which it is hoped that Negro citizens of the city will have an opportunity to pay tribute to the memory of local service men who have been killed in this war.

The physician, who is chairman of the Negro citizens' war activities committee, said the committee will meet some time next week ot discuss plans for the fourth war loan drive, beginning January 18.

"It has been suggested," he said, "that $50,000 would be a suitable goal for Roanoke Negroes during the campaign. It has also been suggested that the money should be used to buy a bomber plane, which would be named in honor of Lt. LeRoi Williams, killed some time ago in a crash on an army flying field, and any other Roanoke Negroes who have given their lives. I understand that $50,000 would be only a fraction of the sum needed to pay for such a plane, but the committee hopes to find some appropriate, workable ways of aiding the drive by appealing to our Negro citizens' patriotic emotions."

The committee consists, besides Dr. Downing, of S. F. Scott, principal of Lucy Addison high school, vice chairman; Mrs. L. K. Fox, secretary; Mrs. Azalia Williams, assistant secretary, and the Rev. William Scott, the Rev. A. L. James, Mrs. L. C. Downing, L. A. Lee, the Rev. S. F. Alexander, William Jones, Miss Queen Williams and Miss Sadie Lawson.

NEGRO RALLY GREAT EVENT

$5,000 In War Bonds Purchased

Thousands of Sumter county negroes flocked to Americus Thursday afternoon for the Harvest War Bond and Stamp Rally. It was the greatest patriotic demonstration ever staged by the negroes of Sumter county. The municipal ball park was jammed for the concert by the Tuskegee Army Air Force band which preceeded the actual selling of the bonds. Incomplete reports Thursday night showed that more than $5,000 in bonds and stamps had been purchased.

The program for the day started with a chicken and barbecue dinner for the visiting band served by the entertainment committee headed by Mabel Barnum and Henry Harris. It was acclaimed by Lt. Frank Doyle as the best ever served his organization.

Under the direction of Charlie Brown, the parade was a great success. Horses, mules, jeeps, cars, trucks, citizens rolled slowly and majestically to the tempo of music of the famous band. The band received applause after applause as they marched through the streets of Americus in perfect cadence and precise piston-like motion.

The program started promptly at 3 o'clock, with "America", which was led by Frankie Harvey.

Scripture was read by Rev. G. A. Roberts, pastor of Campbell A.M.E. Church, which was followed by invocation offered by Rev. Mack Anthony, pastor of the First Methodist Church. With J. B. Dorsey, presiding, T. M. Campbell, field agent and consultant for war savings, in a manner exclusively his own, with feeling and expression led the huge audience in singing "Old Time Religion", one of the melodies that made the American negro famous. Short but impressive remarks were made by Honorable H. O. Jones, mayor of the city, H. W. Moon, vice-commander department of Georgia American Legion; J. T. Warren, chairman Sumter County War Savings committee and T. M. Campbell, Jury Clarke and Lieut. Frank Doyle, band master of the famous Tuskegee band; Nicholas Kollock, P. H. Stone, Alexander Huse and other visitors were introduced. During the program, the famous band furnished selections that kept the audience spellbound.

After the pronouncement of benediction by Rev. Tom Broner, stamps and bonds were sold under the direction of W. R. Burleigh, chairman of the finance committee, A. J. Bell of the post office. Burleigh announced that according to available and accessible records over $5,000 worth of stamps and bonds were sold yesterday and that many were sold for which records are not available.

The committees responsible for the program and rally wish to express their sincere appreciation to the local press, the officials of the city, the police force, the liberal white friends who made contributions, the post office officials and to every person, white and colored who so nobly supported the efforts which was climaxed with brilliant success.

The Hope Of The World

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. SEP 1 - 1943

We are the Hope of the World. Through our sweat and blood on the battle fields and at home, peace and freedom will some day belong to all races of men all over the world. To millions of fear-ridden peoples, the Stars and Stripes are symbol of the Four Freedoms. With our Allies, we have been given the privilege of upholding that symbol so that civilization may ever remember our generation and its place in history. But this task is far too great, to allow any of us time for the luxurious living most Americans enjoyed during pre-war days, nor can we afford the cost. This war is costing America many billions of dollars, and before victory is won, it is certain that it will cost many billions more. Our dollars are needed to buy essential weapons for the protection and defense of our honor and liberty. These have never been cheaply bought.

To share in the promise of the immortal Atlantic Charter, we must cheerfully give every bit of endurance and fortitude, and every extra dollar above actual living costs. Every American citizen, regardless of race or creed, must fight, work and give. Victory is high, but we can and will pay! Back the attack. Buy a share of victory in War Bonds and Stamps, regularly.—T. M. Fields.

Third War Loan Club Plans Set

SEP 11 1943

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

WASHINGTON—(S N S)—Enlistment of at least 5,000,000 Negroes in War Bond Savings Clubs is the goal toward which the Inter-Racial Unit of the Treasury's War Finance Division is aiming in the $15,000,000,000 Third War Loan, the Treasury Department said Friday.

The Inter-Racial Unit, with Willard W. Allen, Baltimore Business leader, handling this phase of activties, is at work on a program for the organization of the clubs, with 100 members each, in Negro communities throughout the country The plan is for each club to make reglar monthly purchases of at least one $25 War Bond.

WIDE INTEREST IN PLAN

Mr. Allen reported wide interest in the plan has already been revealed by letters of inquiry and comment coming to his office from all over the country. Several nationally-organized Negro groups have already gone on record in favor of the plan and have announced the adoption of it by their organizations. The National Negro Busienss Insurance Association are among the groups which have adopted the program.

Sixty-five Masonic lodges in Maryand, and about as many other organizations in the country have already adopted the movement; and it is growing fast, Mr. Allen said "Many Negro churches and the Baptist and Methodist councils have endorsed the idea," he added

The War Bond Saving Clubs program is known in many circles as the Prattis Plan, inasmuch as it was first outlined by P. L. Prattis, executive editor of the nationally circulated Pittsburgh Courier.

PRATTIS COLUMN REPORTED

In a column appearing in the Courier May 1, Mr. Prattis wrote:

"A bond-buying program would increase the Negro's wealth in this country. Suppose that 5,000,000 American Negroes could be persuaded to purchase an average of one $25 bond each month. That would mean the purchase of $125,000,000 cold cash each month. In eight months, these 5,000,000 Negroes would purchase $1,000,000,000 worth of cash. In 16 months, the amount would be $2,000,000,000. In two years, they would have had added $3,000,000,000 of wealth to the race total, or more than they did in 75 years after slavery."

Mr. Allen pointed out that the Prattis Plan is designed not only to integrate the Negro into this coutry's plans for financing the war, but also to provide the Negro with a nationally planned and directed program of thrift and group accumulatio of savings.

He said: "It is a post-war plan for the Negro race, who should plan for 200 years from today. The Negro needs to sit down and map out some concrete plans for the future. For with everything changing, due to science, he will be left outside if he doesn't plan. No one can do for the Negro what he can do for himself. His will and desire to do must come from within."

The Central Baptist church was packed to capacity Sunday morning as part of the expected 15,000 delegates of the much heralded 44th annual united convention of the I.B.P.E.O of W. met for their opening annual baccalaureate sermon.

Many distinguished city officials were present including County Commisisoners Kane, Rankin and Herron. The educational message was brought by the Rev. J. C. Austin of Chicago. The Rev. Mr. Austin also delivered the annual opening sermon of the order at the Ebenezer Baptist church at night.

Preceding the services the combined senior choir and gospel chorus of Central Baptist church furnished the music. One of the most impressive sights of the morning was the department of education marching down the aisles in its gray caps and gowns.

Judge W. C. Hueston, head of the department of education, was master of ceremonies. The Honorable J. Finley Wilson, grand exalted ruler, introduced the Rev. Mr. Austin.

GIVES BACKGROUND OF NEGROES

In picturing the Negro and his educational background, the Rev. Austin pointed out "Our background as Negroes has been overlooked by the educational system of America." He further said "The wheel of progress must turn and as surely as the black man gave to civilization the alphabet, just as surely will the black man again come to the forefront in the educational system.

"We as Negroes must get set right," the speaker pointed out, "and come to a decision as to who we are—what we are—why we are—and where we are going."

Moving on scheduled time, the Elks proceeded to Forbes field to witness one of the star attractions of the week, the baseball game featuring the famous Dizzy Dean.

A 15-minute dedication program preceded the ball game with the Honorable J. Finley Wilson, grand exalted ruler; Judge W. C. Hueston, commissioner of education; Chester L. Washington, assistant business manager of The Pittsburgh Courier; "Diz" Dean, formerly of the Saint Louis Cardinals and star attraction for the Honus Wagner All Stars, and other promiment citizens taking part on the program.

Attractive women in pinafores and men in purple ties and arm bands circulated through the large crowd and sold war bonds and corsages made of war savings stamps to the tune of $30,000.

BEGAN ARRIVING AHEAD OF SCHEDULE

Crowds of the antlered herd began arriving as early as Thursday. Although some delegates had a hard time reaching the headquarters at 2207 Wylie avenue, because of the taxicab situation in Pittsburgh, they were quickly placed by the housing committee in some of the more than 1,000 homes prepared to house the large crowd.

Our Dutv As Citizens

During the month of September our government is conducting the Third War Loan campaign with a goal of 15 billion dollars. The money thusly secured will be expended to equip, ship and maintain our fighting forces, wherever they might be and the figure, when added to previously conducted loans give one something of the idea what it costs to wage war.

We colored citizens often say we are not permitted the chance to perform our duties as citizens. But here is one grand and glorious thing all Americans can share in alike, The government is not asking for "donations". It asks, and mark the word "asks", only to borrow your money under a guarantee to repay at reasonable interest that it might defend your home and your way of life at its expense.

It is our unquestionable duty to rally to our government FIRST. There are many of us who because of financial circumstances who may not be able to buy one or more War Bonds each pay day or each month. But there is none of us who can not make purchases in War Stamps and save these towards investing in a Bond. It is our duty to do this as religiously as those boys of ours are performing their duties on the battlefront. Buy that Bond today and keep on buying them.

SIX REASONS WHY NEGROES SHOULD SUPPORT WAR LOAN

From time to time we have urged Negroes to invest their money in government bonds. We have unashamedly placed more emphasis upon the selfish motive of personal retrenchment than upon the more unselfish motive of patriotism. Now that the Third War Loan drive has been launched, we cite six definite reasons why Negroes should support it.

1. America is the Negro's home. Despite sundry grievances, this is our native land.

2. All citizens must share the cost of war both physically and financially in proportion to their group number and several other abilities. Physically we are supplying man and woman power. We must protect those who are protecting us by providing necessary equipment.

3. Negroes need financial stability. The best way to lay away a good nest egg is to put all one can spare into saving bonds. As a group we are great borrowers, and interest payers. The more one saves the less he has to borrow, the fewer foreclosures he has to suffer, and the more independent is he.

4. Government bonds are safe, and are interest bearing. In case of necessity they can be turned into cash.

5. Post war adjustment usually means occupational shifting. Negroes are not always the first to be chosen, nor retained on jobs. The possession of cash during the trying period of post war adjustment will be a source of great comfort.

6. Prices are high, goods are scarce, jobs are plentiful, and salaries are good. Money will buy more values after the war.

Atlanta Life Earns Distinction Of Largest Single Negro Purchaser

By NAT WILLIAMS
(Working-Press Reporter, Third War Loan)

WASHINGTON — (SNS) — In what is probably the largest single investment in War Bonds to be reported in one purchase by an individual Negro business, the Atlanta Life Insurance Company of Atlanta announced last Monday to the U. S. Treasury Department the purchase of almost a million dollars in the Third War Loan Bonds.

Through one of its vice presidents, Lt. G. W. Lee, of the Memphis, Tennessee District, the company's Home Office disclosed that it has made available $600,000 to be divided among various key districts for the purpose of "purchasing War Bonds and at the same time stimulating others to do likewise."

The concern, one of the largest Negro-owned businesses in the world, also announced another unprecedented move among Negro businesses relative to helping to finance the war. E. L. Simon, assistant agency director for the company, has been released from all duties for the company, and directed to devote all of his time for the duration of the war to the promotion of sales of War Bonds.

TO VISIT DISTRICTS

Mr. Simon will visit districts in each of the nine states in which the company operates. He had already started on his tour to help in the closing stages of the Third War Loan drive. He wfll go to Kansas, Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, Texas, Georgia, Alabama, Florida and Ohio.

In explaining the allocation of the company's $600,000 for Third War Loan Bonds among its districts, Mr. Lee said that $100,000 has been sent to the "all-out" drive he is heading among Negro citizens there. The sum of $300,000 will be spent for Third War Laon Bonds in the Atlanta, Georgia District, $100,000 will go to help in the Kansas City, Mo., "Brown Bomber" Third War Loan Drive. Another $100,000 will be used to buy bonds in the state of Texas.

HERNDON VIEW GIVEN

Mr. Lee said that Norris B. Herndon, president of the Atlanta Life Insurance Company, in authorizing the expenditure of the $600,000 for the bond purchase, based his action on a desire not to only encourage thrift among Negroes but also to stimulate and implement the Negro's natural patriotism and desire to aid in the war effort.

One thousand of the company's agents in eighty-two districts of the nine states named have been organized and instructed to carry the message of the Third War Loan to the thousands of the company's policyholders they contact daily. The agents have been welded into a permanent organization prepared to do a similar job in all subsequent campaigns to help finance the war.

Mr. Lee reported that the Memphis Negro division's Third War Loan goal of $3,000,000 has been nearly two-thirds reached.

Princess Anne School Has Fine War Bond Record

NORFOLK—The Princess Anne County Training School at Euclid, Va., closed its 1942-43 session with one of the most outstanding records for the sales of War Savings Stamps and Bonds of any school organization of it's size in this area.

JUN 12 1943

H. H. Harrison, director of Stamp and Bonds Sales for the Lichtman agency in Norfolk, announced this week that the school's record indicates total stamp sales in excess of $3,500 and bond sales of nearly $2,000 for the school year just past.

EXPRESSED GRATITUDE

Thaddeus Clay Smith, who heads the school expressed great satisfaction in the results obtained by Miss Frederica E. Rogers, who served as the school's agent throughout the year.

Dovetailing this activity beautifully along with the school's regular program and with the cooperation of the faculty and community organizations, Miss Rogers amassed bond sales that figure an average of a bond for every two students enrolled.

Working entirely outside of school hours in procuring the stamps and bonds, she has been entirely unselfish in giving her time to this patriotic cause. All the stamps and bonds were purchased through the Lichtman stamp and bond agency at the Booker-T Theatre.

Negroes Urged

Buy WarBonds

The Negro Citizens' committee has gone on record as urging the Negroes of South Carolina to "enter wholeheartedly into the Third War Bond sale" and to "purchase bonds to the fullest extent of their economic ability."

The following letter has been received by The State from E. A. Adams, president, and James M. Hinton, secretary, with the request that it be published:

"The Negro Citizens' committee is urging Negroes to enter wholeheartedly into the Third War Bond sale, and to purchase bonds to the fullest extent of their economic ability. It is the patriotic duty of all American citizens to support the war effort with each dollar that can be spared for such a worthy cause. It should never be said 'that Negroes are not loyal and patriotic,' for this is 'our country,' and we know no other, nor are we in sympathy with any other country. Our money should and must aid in helping to pay for the war effort.

"Negroes have a stake in this war, for nearly every home has been touched in some manner by those inducted into the armed services of the country, and our money must send to them the things that are vitally necessary for winning the war. Negroes must not only realize they have a stake in the war, but must be willing to fight for that stake, pay for that stake, and if necessary die for that stake. The untarnished record for loyalty and patriotism to the United States must remain unchanged. May we again urge every Negro to purchase one or more bonds in this Third War Bond drive, since these bonds are the safest investment one can make."

Cruiser Bond Sale Set From 11:30 To 2 P. M.

Many Plan To Invest In New Atlanta Cruiser

Thousands of Atlantans, colored and white, will turn aside from their routine duties this morning to witness and participate in the Big Bond Rally, which will swing into action promptly at 11:30 on "sweet Auburn Avenue," in front of historic Bethel AME Church.

This patriotic Rallyy, being a part of the general City-wide drive to rebuild the Atlanta Cruiser, will last only from 11:30 in the morning until 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The famous Washington High Band will furnish patriotic music for the enjoyment of the many thousands of spectators.

Business and professional groups, civic and social clubs, individuals and, in two known instances churches have signified their intentions of sending the Bonds and Stamps total to a new and higher heights. One business organization alone will purchase outright, a flat $100,000 worth of Bonds. Other firms, though not stating how much they plan to invest, are familiarly associated with the biggest and most forward looking business in Atlanta.

T. M. Alexander, President of Alexander and Co. and popular civic and social leader, is general chairman of the insurance groups and will have charge of the program and direct the sales activities this morning. He has announced that each buyer this morning will be permitted to autograph the huge Bombshell, which will be on display.

Negroes Setting Bond Buying Mark

TCHULA—(Special)—Negro employees of a hardwood lumber mill here believe they are setting some kind of a record for others of their race to top during the Third War Loan drive.

Fifty of them have already voluntarily signed up to have their employer buy one $50 bond apiece for them during September, deducting from their salaries during the month additional amounts needed for the bond, over and above the regular payroll allotment amounts.

The payroll savings plan for the firm as a whole averages better than 11 per cent and purchases normally run $1,000 per month. This month bond purchases will run better than $3,000—all the prospects have not yet been contacted by the employees committee.

Since the amount to the credit of each employee varies at various times, the additional amount needed for the extra Third War Loan bond will run from the regular deduction to as high as 40 per cent of the salary due, company officials advised State Chairman Rex Brown of Jackson.

J. C. Allen of the company advised Mr. Brown that a checkup taken to refute rumors that a lot of bonds bought by negroes are cashed in soon after purchase, shows that 70 per cent of the bonds bought by negro employees, are still held by them. All white employees still hold all bonds bought by them.

Every letter sent out by the company carries this line, "Our Employees 100 per cent Invest 10 per cent or More for Freedom."

NEGRO BOND BUYERS

To the Editor The News:

We Americans, white and black, face a serious situation today. The aggressor nations across the seas are dedicated to the proposition of enslaving and destroying us, as well as all of those who fight for freedom under the banner of the United Nations. Negro soldiers are at this moment standing ready to pour their blood on the altar of freedom in 32 countries, to defeat those who would enslave all of us as our Negro ancestors were never enslaved prior to 1865.

We may not enjoy the freedom we deserve, but it is better than that which my grandfather and grandmother experienced. We enjoy liberties and opportunities for development unknown to nobles in the not too far distant past. I know we would rather render whatever service we are called upon to render in the defense of our homeland than to have the yoke of totalitarian slavery riveted around our neck.

The country calls upon us to "Back the Attack" our soldiers are making today—all over the world—for freedom. This is not a day when victory may be had by way of oratory or protest. The Negro citizens of Jefferson County have dedicated themselves to the task of buying $300,000 worth of War Bonds this week. When the count is taken at the big Bond Rally at the City Auditorium this Sunday afternoon, the success of the effort will depend upon the contribution each individual will have made in the purchase of War Bonds this week.

Let us face the need of this hour and the future, ready to spend and be spent, to defend our households, trusting in God. Let us manifest our love for liberty, justice and tolerance, so much so that when called upon to make the greatest sacrifice for the highest ideals, we will join with Emile Zola who, when reminded that he might lose his life in his fight for the very thing for which America is fighting, cried out, "I am not important, it is the ideal of liberty for which I fight!" Men may come and men may go, good or bad, but we must never forget we belong to a destiny that has a right to demand of us a manifestation of the greatest love for liberty and justice as we can express by the War Bonds we buy now.

Our boys out there in the bloody theaters of war are crying out to us, "Give us the tools, and we will do the job." In this way Negroes share the grandeur of those Negro captives who, when they faced the slave auction block at Ebos Landing and contemplated the horrors of just such slavery as Hitler and his henchmen would shackle the world with, turned about and marched out into the sea and to death with a song upon their lips.

Negro men and women, this is your country, too! Wherever you are, on the farm, in the factory, in the mine or in the mill, remember that the first blood spilled for this country was that of Chrispus Attucks, a Negro; remember that Lincoln, the emancipator, died because of the spirit he expressed in his Gettysburg address. Do not do anything to reflect upon the sacrifices these and others made in order that we might enjoy freedom of speech, the freedom to go as high in life as our ability permits, and the right to worship God under our own vine and fig tree.

Your liberty was purchased with the blood of those who believed as we must believe—in you and in America—in God. For these things, buy bonds. Others are dying for these same things. Do not submit by default to the yoke of slavery which is the lot of those who have fallen prey to Hitler and his mad men—a slavery 77 times more hideous than our grandparents ever knew.

BACK TO MEMPHIS HANDY WENT, TO RAISE MONEY FOR BONDS, HE WAS SENT, AND THERE HE PLAYED THE MEMPHIS BLUES, 'TILL THE FOLKS GOT SO ENTHUSED, THEY PAWNED THEIR SHOES.

Memphis, Tenn.—Aging W. C. Handy, "daddy of the blues" has been summoned back to Memphis Beale Street, "where the blues began", to help in the drive to raise the more than $2,000,000 the Negro volunteer bond workers have set for themselves.

"Memphis folk," Chairman Lee pointed out, "have a penchant for getting bombing planes dedicated with the bonds they buy. At the close of the Second War Loan Negro citizens bought over $303,000 in War Bonds.

"We heard that 'Memphis Blues' had been shot down on one of the fighting fronts and the Negro division for the Third War Loan has determined to raise enough money through War Bonds to replace it with another Fortress bearing the same name."

In support of this objective a series of events, city-wide in scope, has been planned to cover the duration of the Third War Loan campaign. Among them will be the War Bond Out-Door Barn Show, the Clyde Beatty Circus in Handy's Square, located in the heart of Beale Street, Mrs. Tom Mix will make regular rides and elephants, clowns and other circus features will deploy for the first time in the center of the Negro business district.

Mr. Handy began September 18 to climax the drive with a mammoth parade, the Naval Training School band, school drum and bugle corps and bands, civic groups, marching units, and church organizations.

Low Income Farmers Receive Federal Aid

SEP 18 1943

Courier Pittsburgh Pa.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16 — A novel plan to enable low income Negro farmers in the South to Purchase War Bonds is receiving renewed interest in rural areas under the impetus of the Third War Loan drive, the Treasury department said last week.

The plan was formulated and presented by Harry Simms, associate administor for the War Finance Division for the State of Alabama.

FARM-AID PLAN

The Simms plan suggests ways of securing extra money on the low-income farm for War Savings, which should enable every man, woman and child of school age, on the farm, to buy at least one $25 War Bond in the course of a year.

SEP 18 1943

This is how the plan will work out:

.40 earned each week or $1.60 per month will buy one $25 Bond a year.

.80 earned each week or $3.20 per month will buy two $25 Bonds a year.

1.20 earned each week or $4.80 per month will buy three $25 Bonds a year.

1.60 earned each week or $6.40 per month will buy four $25 Bonds a year.

WHAT IT WILL MEAN

SEP 18 1943

There are 62 counties in the State of Alabama with a population of 78,188 Negro farm families. If each of these families earn and save only 40 cents per week, it will amount to $31,275.20 per week; $125,100 per month; and $1,501,209.60 per year.

SEP 18 1943

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16—Enlistment of at least 5,000,000 Negroes in War Bond Savings Clubs is the goal toward which the Inter-Racial Unit of the Treasury's War Finance Division is aiming in the $15,000,000,000 Third War Loan, the Treasury Department said last week end. The Inter-Racial Unit, with Willard W. Allen, Baltimore business leader, as chairman, is at work on a program for the organization of the clubs, with 100 members each, in Negro communities throughout the country.

INTEREST INTENSE

Mr. Allen reported wide interest in the plan has already been revealed in letters of inquiry and comment coming to his office from all over the country. Several nationally-organized groups have already gone on record in favor of the plan and have announced the adoption of it by their organizations.

The National Negro Business league, the Bishops' Council of the AME church, and the National Negro Insurance association are among the groups which have adopted the program.

Sixty-five Masonic lodges in Maryland, and about as many other organizations in the country have already adopted the movement; and it is growing fast, Mr. Allen said. "Many Negro churches and the Baptist and Methodist councils have endorsed the idea," he added.

Kansas City, Mo.—"A Brown Bomber for Our Brown Flyers" is the goal which Negro volunteer Third War Loan workers set for themselves as they launched their $250,000 "Brown Bomber War Bond Drive" in Kansas City this week.

Behind the leadership of C, A. Franklin, publisher and editor whose newspaper, the Kansas City Call, is spearheading the drive, Negro Kansas Citians plan to buy enough bonds during the current campaign to defray the cost of one of the Flying Fortresses, now so busily flaying the Axis on scattered war fronts.

Admission to the rally was $1 in war stamps. Nearly 2,500 crowded into the park swimming pool pavilion for a two-hour floor show. NEGRO SERVANTS ACT TO SELL WAR STAMPS

Group Holds Rallies Among the Colored of Atlanta

JUL 4 1943

ATLANTA, July 3 (AP)—W. Allen Murphy is a 45-year-old Negro waiter at the Piedmont Driving Club. He's tall, spectacled, quietly dignified, earnest in thought and action.

You won't find his name on the list of people who have set records in sales of war bonds. Most of the purchases he wins are in stamps—25 cents, 50 cents each. Amounts like that don't add up very fast. But Murphy works with people to whom a quarter or a half-dollar is a sizeable slice of their income.

Murphy thinks and works constantly for the improvement of his race. His theory is that if, "just plain folks" want to get ahead, they must do their own planning and acting.

He took his ideas to others of his profession, to members of other service occupations, and so has emerged the Atlanta Service Group, an organization of 100 waiters, chauffeurs, cooks, Pullman porters, and other public and private workers who make their living by service.

The first aim of the service group is to get each of the 21,000 families of Negroes in Atlanta to put at least $1 a week into war savings stamps.

Back in March, the service group held a stamp-selling rally, with entertainment by Negro musicians and singers from near by Army posts. The sales were $2,000, all in stamps, and 500 families signed the $1-a-week pledge.

On Monday a much larger rally will be held. It, too, will center around the Negro housing projects in which live 2,200 families. It will be a progressive rally, starting at one of the projects, and moving parade fashion from there to the other five, with a half-hour stop at each.

For the first time, there will be an effort to sell bonds. There will be a "bond wagon" from which the bonds can be delivered immediately by authorized sellers. The Army is considering lending two bands and has been asked, also, to let bond buyers ride in jeeps during the parade.

Capital Buys $250,000 More Bonds

Still $8,625,856 Short Of Its Final Objective; Everybody Gets Busy

Army Of Quarter Million Hurled Into Drive By Civilian Defense Groups

The sale of $250,000 worth of additional war bonds yesterday brought Montgomery's total last night to $1,344,144 in the third war loan drive which began Thursday at noon.

The figures were released yesterday afternoon by Judge Eugene W. Carter, Montgomery County war finance chairman.

Meanwhile, reports began to come in from all over the State indicating full speed ahead in the war bond campaign.

Haygood Paterson, executive director of the Alabama Defense Council, said yesterday that his agency had been receiving reports from the various counties which indicate the full force of more than 250,000 members of civilian defense groups in Alabama have volunteered for work in the war bond sale.

Air Raid Wardens Busy

A report from Cullman County to Mr. Paterson was to the effect that every air raid warden in the county had volunteered to assist in the sale of war bonds. Other counties have made similarly gratifying reports. Mr. Paterson himself has enlisted in the work and opened the Dale County drive with a speech at Ozark Thursday night.

"There is no more important work the civilian defense groups could do at this time," Mr. Paterson said, "than aiding whenever and wherever possible in the sale of war bonds. And they are enlisting."

Judge Carter addressed two rural groups from Montgomery County yesterday at the courthouse. The white community chairmen and co-chairmen taking the lead in all war work in this county for the duration heard from Judge Carter the importance of buying war bonds and had additional encouragement from Lem A. Edmonson, county farm agent, and Mrs. Mamie C. Thorington, county home agent, in mapping plans for systematic purchase of bonds and a house-to-house canvass. Following his talk in the east courtroom to the white farm group, Judge Carter moved to the west courtroom and addressed a group of negro farm leaders, assembled by Annie Mae Boynton, negro home agent, and Farm Agent Alexander.

Leading Negroes Help

Judge Carter addressed a group of 40 leading negro citizens at Atlanta Life Insurance Hall Friday night preliminary to their setting up a sale group to promote the third war loan campaign among their own race.

Lions Club members, in their regular weekly meeting Friday at the Whitley Hotel, pledged an "all out" effort to the third war loan. They adopted a plan to organize a drive in each office and firm represented by their membership. Employes of each establishment will be called together, a campaign manager selected, and committees for each department appointed. Their goal is to sell to each employe an extra $25, $50 or $100 bond in addition to regular payroll purchases. The establishment, firm members, and family will be asked to buy bonds through the Lions Club.

Meanwhile, the Exchange Club has set up its war bond show in the Hudson Building at Lawrence and Dexter and invites everyone to visit it and see the exhibit consisting of a B-24 (Liberator) motor and propeller; top gun turret with 50-caliber machine guns, 30-caliber machine guns, carbine rifle, Thompson sub-machine gun, Garand rifle, 45 automatic pistol, bazooka rocket gun (tank destroyer), Winter or high-flying clothes, parachutes and a 250-pound bomb. Also shown is a Jap flag, a canteen taken by the U. S. Marines at Guadalcanal, pictures of planes and an amphibious jeep.

The public is said to be showing much interest in this exhibit and through Saturday afternoon visitors were said to have bought $105 worth of war stamps and $121,725 in war bonds.

Admission is a 25-cent war stamp for children and a $1 war stamp for adults. The public is invited to buy war bonds and stamps while at the exhibit.

"Buy," Urges Grant

Representative Grant, who completed a round of all the counties in his district during the Summer recess, opening offices in county seats of each for several days, said that he was looking for a very busy session for the nation's lawmakers.

He said that his constituents didn't have any particular bones to pick, but that all were interested in the U. S. war effort, many citing the home front activities in their communities.

In speaking of the purchase of war bonds, Mr. Grant said, "We must look after the home front as well as the battlefront. The purchase of war bonds kills both birds in one shot."

War Bond Sales Are Moving Along Satisfactorily

Chairman Pearson Is Urging Redoubling Of Effort

Sales big and small, bonds bought with dimes and pennies and big checks, all continued to swell the total raised to date in the effort here to push to a successful conclusion the raising of $2,572,700 in the Third War Loan Campaign.

Herron Pearson, regional chairman, Tuesday called on each of the divisions in the campaign to double all efforts, and also as far as possible to make regular reports of sales. The Women's Division, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Walter Baker Harris, was one of the first divisions to make an initial report, their total secured to date being $15,000.

Wednesday at 7:30 P. M., the big "Extra War Bond Premiere," sponsored by the Lions Club, will be held at the Paramount theatre. Milt Slosser, the most outstanding theatre organist in America will be on the stage in person, and the movie attraction will be "Holy Matrimony" starring Monty Wooley and Gracie Fields. No admission will be charged, but persons attending must pledge themselves to buy an extra war bond this month. Pledge forms are available at uptown drug stores and The Little White House.

Monday, the Victory Committeemen, under the direction of Tom Hillsman and Miss Mildred Pierce, commenced the farm-to-farm canvass that will reach every rural home in Madison County. The quota set for this division is $500,000, of which $100,000 has been allotted to the colored farm division.

W. C. Hanafee, chairman of the manufacturing division, said that each manufacturer in Jackson was being contacted, and that emphasis was being placed on the sale of Series C Treasury Savings Notes, which mature in three years, but are usable in paying Federal income taxes. He said also that indications are that the seven-eights per cent Treasury Certificates are proving popular.

Saturday night, a War Bond Auction Sale will be held at the Bemis Theatre, as a part of the Bemis all out effort. Horace Coyne, Bemis chairman, said that all arrangements have been completed. The sale is under the sponsorship of th Pilot Club. A big auction sale for Jackson will be held at the Armory September 24th, sponsored by the B'nai Brith Brotherhood.

Louis Englert, chairman of the General Features Division, said Tuesday that arrangements are being made for special entertainment features for the big auction sale here, that a parade is being planned, and also various stage events.

ANOTHE RSTATEMENT

Prayer and the purchase of war bonds were urged by Cartmell Thomas, Circuit Court Clerk, in a statement issued in support of the Third War Loan Campaign.

"As more of our boys pay the supreme sacrifice and others actively engaged in this global conflict are disabled, the war comes closer home to us day by day," Mr. Townes said.

"Unfortunately there are still some of our people that have done little or nothing in aiding the war effort. Of necessity some can do much less than others; we often hear the question: What can I do"

"May I suggest that we can all pray and we can all help pay for the War. As our church bells ring to call us to prayer for our boys. I urge you to pray more earnestly and as the present War Bond Sale progresses to buy Bonds and Stamps. We must buy in proportion to our ability."

By WALTER WHITE

I Try to Sell Bonds

THE WAYS of white folks, as Langston Hughes once said, are often beyond understanding. And when one understands their fears and doubts, the riddle is all the more incomprehensible since they so often duck and dodge in fear of a straw man. Such were my somewhat depressed feelings as I left the radio studio recently after doing a coast-to-coast broadcast urging the purchase of War Bonds.

Walter White

"You can say anything you choose," they had assured me on extending the invitation, and the words and tone were full of sincerity. Taking them at their word I had done what seemed to me a relatively inocuous statement which I believed would not only induce some Negroes to buy bonds but which also might encourage white people to do so.

I pointed out that though Negroes were still lynched in the United States, though they still were barred from some jobs even in defense plants because some employers and some labor unions were prejudiced, though Negroes were still segregated in the Army and Navy and their blood by the Red Cross, and though in Southern states most of them were still denied the right to vote, nevertheless the Negro was still loyal to America.

I pointed out that nearly a million of them were fighting on battlefronts all over the world or were being trained to fight and that in proportion to his means the Negro at home was buying bonds at about the same rate as his white fellow-Americans.

Thumbs Down At Studio

WHEN I REACHED the studio and turned over my script it was received with cordiality — until they read it. I felt sorry for the official who was charged in a huddle to break the news to me that they could not let me say what I had written because, he assured me, "there has been no controversy in any of the speeches to sell bonds."

He thought me flippant or not quite bright, apparently, when I suggested that they might sell more bonds if they dealt with the truth, even though controversial, instead of pouring out gutless treacle which would bore their listeners.

I pointed out that my presence in the series of speakers was obviously to try to sell bonds particularly to members of my own race and that, not being immodest, I knew them a bit better than he did. With this, of course, he agreed but he countered with the statement that we were on a nation-wide circuit and many white people were listening too.

"What of it?" I asked. "There are lots of decent white people who might, on hearing that Negroes were buying bonds and dying for a democracy they were often denied, might buy bonds or increase the amount of their purchases."

"That may be true," he answered doubtfully. "But we've got a lot of Southern stations tuned in and these programs will go on to midnight. The Southern stations would cut us off."

"Let them do so," I urged, somewhat mercilessly, "and thus let the rest of the country see that the South places its race prejudices above its patriotism. Lots of Americans — white and colored — would be so shocked they would make up for the loss of sales in the South."

Dixie Dominates Nation

I MIGHT as well have been talking to the Sphinx so far as my argument had any effect. I suggested that I not go on the air at all but it was then perilously close to the minute I was to speak. So I hastily pounded out on a type writer a more inocuous version in which I said that "although the Negro is still barred from jobs . . . and although. etc., etc." But the words "lynching," "employers and labor unions," "Red Cross" had to come out.

I wonder how many bonds, if any, the bowdlerized version sold. And how many would have been sold or kept from being sold by the original text. But even more I wondered at the way in which the the rest of the country and the world when it comes to this problem of race.

Benefits Of Holding Investments Until War Is Over To Be Stressed

Preparing for a further appeal for the purchase of War Bonds from Negro citizens, A. G. Gaston has been elected chairman of the Jefferson County Negro war finance advisory board, and the committee will meet Tuesday to select a chairman of the Negro division of the war [illegible] staff, and to name committees, assuring representation of every section and group in the county.

Gaston expressed confidence in the ability of citizens to buy more bonds and of the entire board to provide the leadership. He said that special stress will be laid on the purchase of War Savings Stamps with an education program designed to teach the many benefits of saving bonds after the war.

Harry Simms, of Tuskegee Institute, associate administrator of the war finance division for Alabama, announced at last week's meeting that a definite quota would be given all counties and monthly reports will be released to the public on their activities. Local citizens were congratulated by Simms on their successful work in the past drive.

Memphians To Buy Another Big Bomber

"Memphis Blues" Shot Down On Fighting Front

By NAT WILLIAMS
(Memphis WORLD Reporter)

WASHINGTON—(S N S)—War Bonds have replaced the "blues" in interest on Beale Street.

A determination to keep high the prestige of one of their best known "blues" songs is one of the moving forces behind intense Third War Loan activities of the Negro Division of the Memphis War finance committee, according to George W. Lee, chairman of the organization.

Aging W. C. Handy, "Daddy of the Blues" has been summoned back to Memphis, Beale Street, "where the Blues began," to help in the drive to raise the more than $2,000,000 the Negro volunteer Bond workers have set for themselves.

47c

LIKE TO BUY BOMBERS

"Memphis folk," chairman Lee pointed out, "have a penchant for getting bombing planes dedicated with the Bonds they buy. At the close of the Second War Loan, Negro, citizens bought over $303,000 in War Bonds and had them dedicated to a consolidated liberator bomber known as the "Spirit of Beale Street." Prior to that another group of Memphians had a flying fortress dedicated and named the "Memphis Blues."

"We heard that 'Memphis Blues' had been shot down on one of the fighting fronts, and the Negro division for the Third War Loan has determined to raise enough money through war bonds to replace it with another fortress bearing the same name, and thus keep those deathless tunes that came straight from the unhappy heart of the Black man."

In support of this objective a series of events, city-wide in scope, has been planned to cover the duration of the Third War Loan campaign. In addition to a variety of daily activities, such as door-to-door canvassing, Bond booths in theatres and other key centers, and special Bond days for different organizations and institutions, several major events have been scheduled.

Among them will be the War Bond out-door barn show, in which the features will be the appearance of the Clyde Beatty Curcus in Handy's Square, located in the heart of Beale Street. Mrs. Tom Mix, widow of the movie idol, will spearhead the Bond sales with regular rides through the crowded thoroughfare. Elephants, clowns, and other Circus features will deploy for the first time in the center of the Negro business district.

HANDY GOES TO MEMPHIS

Mr. Handy is scheduled to remain in the city an entire week, starting September 18, to climax the drive. He will lead a mammoth parade consisting of the Millington, Tenn., Naval Training School band, school drum and bugle corps and bands, civic groups, marching units, and church organizations. Mr. Handy will also visit various industrial plants in Memphis to make an appeal for Bond purchases by Negro workers.

Plans are also under way to have Eddie Anderson, Rochester to millions of radio fans, present at a mammoth dance and Bond auction which will climax the drive.

The work of the Women's Unit of the Negro division of volunteer Bond workers is under the direction of Mrs. Addie Dandridge Jones, public school teacher.

Chairman Lee reported that already more than a third of his division's $2,000,000 goal has been reached.

Bond Drive Enters Final Week; Negroes Surpass Bomber Total

News
Birmingham, Ala.

While the Fighting Fifth thrust ahead in Italy, the men and women at home, the working people who face no threat of shell or bomb, moved into the final week of the Third War Loan drive.

In Jefferson County, in every county in Alabama, there are those who have not yet bought an extra War Bond during this three-week drive. Each citizen who lets Oct. 1 arrive without buying an extra bond has failed in the war effort just as surely as though he had removed the bullets from a soldier's machine gun, as though he had taken the gasoline from a Flying Fortress fighting for the chance to bomb Berlin.

Negro Americans—some 4,000 strong—rolled their special bomber total well above the $312,000 mark in a rally Sunday at the Municipal Auditorium to launch their climactic efforts in the Third War Loan.

AMONG THOS[illegible]ING PART were the bands of Parker High School, the Fourth Provisional Regiment of Camp Sibert and Fairfield Industrial High School, Knights of Pythias and the Court of Calamite, the Beauticians Volunteer Corps, Jones Valley Lodge No. 14 of the Independent Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the World and its auxiliary, Red Cross nurses.

This assures th christening of a Liberator bombe in honor of Julius Ellsberry, Birmingham Negro, who was Jefferson County's first casualty at Pear Harbor Dec. 7, 1941.

The crack Tuskegee Army Ai Base Band led the parade from it origin at 16th Street and Sixth Avenue, North, in a winding course through the city to the Municipa Auditorium.

Uniform civilian defense officials, volunteer groups, civic organizations and Boy and Girl Scouts marched in the parade.

Lean Years Will Come Again

Of the 27,375,000 families in the United States in 1929, 5,750,000 had no savings whatever. The early part of 1935, the sixth year of the financial collapse, more than 20,000,000 persons, almost one in five of the total population, were on relief rolls. Of these, 8,000,000 were children, and something less than 1,000,000 were persons of sixty-five years of age or over. During the last quarter of 1934 the number of unemployed in the United States ranged close to 11,000,000, according to estimates by the American Federation of Labor.

Those facts in themselves offer some indications why Negroes, perhaps more than any other group of citizens, should consider now the insecurity which is certain to come in the wake of another depression. Even in ordinary times the vast majority of Negroes are oppressed by the dread of the grim spectre of unemployment, loss of savings, illness, and old age. Always and everywhere life presents the possibility of illness, accident and sudden death. That is why, in these fat years and times, we urge upon Negro workers everywhere to lay by some of the money they are making.

More is involved in the breakdown of man's earning capacity than his personal inconvenience and suffering. The collapse carries with it the tragic consequences of neglected children, underfed families, together with other human sufferings which may stand as an indictment to any man who is privileged to work and prosper in these halcyon years of war and plenty.

Moreover, we cannot remind Negro People too often of the importance, not only of saving now for the future, but likewise in holding on to and buying even more war bonds, against the day when these learn years will again deal paralyzing blows to all of us without material means by which to live. It is said that Negroes can do more with less and less with more than any group of citizens. But here again is the [illegible]like attitude of Negroes burying their heads in the sands assuming that good times will last forever.

Look Ahead

AUG 19 1943

Atlanta, Georgia

Daily World

Let's dream a little, look ahead to the future and plan for the day our boys will return home from the war. A very pleasant day that should be, and it is within our power to make it a very happy one. If we who are left here at home, will willingly serve our country, working a hard for victory as our soldiers are every day, we may reasonably expect to share in the glory of that victory.

When the day comes, we will be very proud of the brave American soldiers for their part in winning the toughest war in history's annals. Will they be proud of us? That question can be answered by our doing our best in hastening the day of victory. We must supply the arms and munitions, the ships the planes, the tanks so vital to the winning of the war and provide a backlog of savings for the peace to follow, by regular and large purchases of War Bonds and Stamps. Then we must keep these investments in our country's future. Purchasing securities in August, and cashing them in several months later, will definitely not be a contribution to the war effort. For the sa[illegible]asons that our soldiers cannot afford to rest [illegible] suffering the horrors and privations of war, so we ca[illegible]t afford to refuse to lend our government the money it needs to keep the armies equipped for the duration.

The voluntary savings plan was not inaugurated just for the purpose of giving every citizen a part in the war effort. It is an urgent need to prevent rising prices, black markets and inflation during the post-war period. There are 45 billion extra dollars in the pockets of American wage earners. These extra dollars if saved, will make our dream of victory come true. Look ahead and invest them regularly in United States War Bonds.

A Roosevelt Idea For Bond-Buying Drives

Daily World

Atlanta, Georgia

By WILLIAM PICKENS

ELLIOTT ROOSEVELT, son of the President, was introduced to the assembly of workers in the war finance staff, in the Washington Building on the morning of July 28. Col. Roosevelt has made a great name for himself photographing objectives for the united nations' forces in North Africa, and over Pantelleria, and Sicily.

His work has described the targets weeks and months before the attacks, and long before invasion attempts. Having seen so much of the war in the Mediterranean (photographing air fighting, invasion forces, precision bombing), he had some good ideas to add to our bond-selling campaign plans. We have had campaigns for jeeps, bombers, destroyers, cruisers, battleships, and for a Shangri-La. These concrete objectives stimulate bond buying.

BOMBS FOR P[illegible]ES

Mr. Roosevelt gave some suggestions about using the air forces as objectives in bond campaigns: bombs for planes, bombs for a certain squadron. Then the government could be asked to send to the group (city, organization, or district) a photograph of the bombs bought by that district, as those bombs hurled down toward the enemy target—as we see it done every day in our moving picture houses.

Suppose, for example the colored people of New York City should raise sufficient funds in war finance to buy the necessary bombs for a raid by the Negro squadron operatingin the Mediterranean, then when pictures were made showing Col. Davis and his men letting those bombs fly toward objectives in Messina or Naples, a set of those pictures could be sent to the New York committee.

Such a moving picture film ("Our Bombs Strike Naples") would be thrilling and of great historic value to the colored people of New York for generations to come.

OPPORTUNITY IS GREAT

Negro groups are looking for definite objectives for their campaigns: The American Association of Negro College students wants a good objective; New York City, St. Louis, Chicago, Los Angeles, Atlanta, New Orleans, and many other communities would welcome objectives for their bond-investments. The Odd Fellows, the Elks, and other organizations might want to buy machine gun ammunition for the 99th pursuit squadron, depth charges for the Booker T. Washington, cannon for the George Washington Carver, demolition bombs for a Negro-American aviation unit.

And there are not only bomber and fighter squadrons, but coastal patrol aircraft. And not only may lodges and business leagues inaugurate such campaigns, but there may be some militant religious organization or church group which wants to pass the ammunition and praise the Lord.

We Americans are a great democracy and a free people. That means not uniforminty but great variety. Some will want to work in one way, others in other ways. The third war loan which aims at 15 billions of dollars should be oversubscribed. Elliott Roosevelt says that the failure of a war loan drive would lower the morale of our boys in Sicily. We do our part here. They will not fail us. We must not fail them.

Amsterdam News

New York, N. Y.

Sept. 18, 1943

WASHINGTON — Enlistment of at least 5,000,000 Negroes in War Bond Savings Clubs is the goal toward which the Inter-Racial Unit of the Treasury's War Finance Division is aiming in the $15,000,000,000 Third War Loan, the Treasury Department said this week.

The Inter-Racial Unit, with Willard W. Allen, Baltimore Business leader, handling this phase of activities, is at work on a program for the organization of the clubs with 100 members each, in Negro communities throughout the country. The plan is for each club to make regular monthly purchases of at least one $25 War Bond.

Widespread Interest

Mr. Allen reported wide interest in the plan has already been revealed by letters of inquiry and comment coming to his office from all over the country. Several nationally-organized Negro groups have already gone on record in favor of the plan and have announced the adoption of it by their organizations. The National Negro Business League, the Bishops' Council of the AME Church, and the National Negro Insurance Association are among the groups which have adopted the program.

Sixty-five Masonic lodges in Maryland, and about as many other organizations in the country have already adopted the movement; and it is growing fast, Mr. Allen said. "Many Negro churches and the Baptist and Methodist councils have endorsed the idea," he added.

The War Bond Savings Clubs program is known in many circles as the Prattis Plan, inasmuch as it was first outlined by P. L. Prattis, executive editor of the nationally circulated Pittsburgh Courier.

In a column appearing in the Courier last May 1, Mr. Prattis wrote:

Purpose of Plan

"A bond-buying program would increase the Negro's wealth in this country. Suppose that 5,000,000 American Negroes could be persuaded to purchase an average of one $25 bond each month. That would mean the purchase of $125,000,000 cold cash each month. In eight months, the amount would be $2,000,000,000. In two years, they would have had added $3,000,000,000 of wealth to the race total, or more than they did in 75 years after slavery."

Mr. Allen pointed out that the Prattis Plan is designed not only to integrate the Negro into this country's plans for financing the war, but also to provide the Negro with a nationally planned and directed program of thrift and group accumulation of savings.

Post-War Plans

He said: "It is a post-war plan for the Negro race, who should plan for 200 years from today. The Negro needs to sit down and map out some concrete plans for the future. For with everything changing, due to science, he will be left outside if he doesn't plan. No one can do for the Negro what he can do for himself. His will and desire to do must come from within."

PICKENS LAUDS PRATTIS' PLAN

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Courier

Warm and enthusiastic praise has come from Dean William Pickens, for a novel plan suggested by P. L. Prattis, executive editor of The Pittsburgh Courier, in a recent editorial column. The plan was later submitted to, approved and accepted by the U. S. Treasury Department.

When Mr. Prattis' plan for national war bonds savings clubs among Negroes on a nation-wide basis was outlined to the Treasury Department, he pointed out that the 13,000,000 Negroes of America owned only $2,000,000,000 worth of property in this country, but that, if 5,000,000 of them could be persuaded to buy a $25 war bond every month, they would, within just two years, save $3,000,000,000 —more than they did in the 75 years following slavery.

Watermelon Farmer Buys Many War Bonds

Daily World

SEP 17 1943

WASHINGTON—(S N S)—G. L. Archie, Negro farmer of Hempstead, Texas, had bought $1,600 worth of War Bonds up until last month, out of his profits from raising watermelons.

As for his Third War Loan activities, Archie likes farming "on halyes" with Uncle Sam and plans to keep it up for the duration.

According to the Department of Agriculture, Archie "may not be the watermelon king, but he certainly is a runner-up for the title, because last year three-fourths of his $5[illegible] income came from melon[illegible] year, with prices up a bit, he stands [illegible]crease his watermelon earnings.

SEP 17 1943

A few years ago, Farmer Archie got the idea that, "Well, what's the use of planting cotton all the time; why not try my hand at a new kind of crop?"

Like the rest of his neighbors he had grown a few melons each year. "So, why not put in a whole crop of 'em?" Archie asked himself.

By last year he was planting more than half of his worty-acre farm in watermelons. To be exact, he put in twenty-three acres from which he sold $3,300 worth of melons. He used the rest of his land, that is, all but a few acres, to grow feed for his livestock, mostly cattle. From this he grossed $1,027.

Although Farmer Archie isn't farming on shares, he believes in sharing equally with the Government. The year before he had built himself a comfortable home at a cost [illegible]1,600; so now it was Uncle Sam[illegible]rn. Whenever he sold his melons he would [illegible]ays stop by the bank on the [illegible] home; deposit some and use some to buy a share in America—War Bonds. He has planned to buy an extra 'share' during the Third War Loan.

Negro Workers Set Bond Buying Record

Atlanta, Ga.

SEP 17 1943

Daily World

TCHULA, Miss—Negro workers, employed of a hardwood mill here feel that they are.. setting some kind of a recrod for others to top during the Third War Loan Drive. Fifty of them have already voluntarily signed up to have their employer buy a $50 Bond apiece for them during the month of September, deducting from their salary during the month additional amounts over and above the regular payroll allotments.

J. C. Allen, of the company has advised Mr. Rex I. Brown, State Chairman of the Third War Loan Drive, that [illegible]eck-up taken to refute rumors that a l[illegible] bonds bought by Negroes are ca[illegible]ed soon after purchase shows that 70 per cent of the bonds bought by Negro employees are still held by them.

The payroll allotment plan for the firm as a whole, which also employs a large number of white workers, averages better than 11 per cent, and purchases normally run to about $10[illegible] per month.

Every letter sent out by the company carries this line. "Our Employees 100 [illegible]ent invest 10 per cent or more [illegible]r Freedom."

Colored Citizens Launch Drive To Meet Quota

Colored County Agent Elliot Robbins, serving as director for the Third War Loan Drive for the colored population of Butler county, announces the program now under way: Thirty-one community chairmen have been appointed to make a house-to-house canvass in every beat of the county. These chairmen have been supplied with receipt books and pay envelopes, and co-chairmen have also been appointed to assist in this effort. The names of all chairmen are given in a circular letter recently mailed to all colored citizens.

The procedure follows: the First National Bank of Greenville, the Citizens Bank of Georgiana, along with Postmasters of Forest Home, Bolling, Chapman, Garland, McKenzie and Pigeon Creek, have consented to assist in this effort by receiving all funds collected by chairmen or anyone making the canvass. These officials will issue bonds and stamps in accordance with the money turned in. For example: if W. J. Lawson, chairman for McKenzie, should receive from Rev. E. P. Pugh, $2.00 for stamps, then Chairman Lawson puts the $2.00 in his pay envelope with Rev. Pugh's name on back of same, after which he files same with the postmaster at McKenzie, Mr. B. F. Beesley, and too, a receipt is given Rev. Pugh, which will be submitted to the postmaster there for his stamps. The original receipt is kept by Chairman Lawson for his report. The same procedure will be used by all chairmen.

Through the courtesy of Col. Jeff P. Beeland, County Chairman, War Savings Staff, three prizes will be given to any solicitor reporting the highest amount of bonds and stamps sold during this drive: 1st prize, a $25.00 War Bond; 2nd prize, $3.00 worth of stamps, and 3rd prize, $2.00 worth of stamps. Clay County Negroes Take Active Part In Recent Bond Drive

"Backing the Attack" was the slogan demonstrated by the Negroes and white friends of Clay county as they bought bonds in the Third War Loan Drive. Every necessary sacrifice to support our forces everywhere was happily made by the humblest individual.

The county was organized into three sections. The colored schools were the headquarters and each principal was local chairman. At the Bunker Hill Junior High School $675 worth of bonds were sold, actual cash $506.25. At the Ashland Junior High School $750 worth of Bonds were sold, actual cash $562.50. At the Clay County Training School $1125 worth of Bonds were sold, actual cash $843.75. Total amount of Bonds sold $2550.75, actual cash $1912.50.

Supt. George D. Martin was the main speaker at the Bunker Hill Bond Rally. Bonds were sold by Messrs. H. W. Sims and E. F. Ingram.

Mr. C. M. Pruet was the main speaker at the Ashland rally. Prof. Menrie Smith and Mrs. Ruby G. King made applications for War Bonds.

Mr. Geo. D. Martin and Mr. W. E. Carpenter were the principal speakers at the Lineville Rally. Mr. J. B. Hull and Mr. C. T. Stewart sold the Bonds.

We are grateful to our white friends for the fine manner in which they explained the purpose and importance of all people buying bonds. The explanations were plainly made. As a result the colored people of Clay county made a better showing as a whole, than at any other time during this present war crisis.

Much credit is due the following persons for the fine spirit of cooperation shown in this Third War Loan Drive: Prof. W. E. Nall, Principal of Bunker Hill Junior High; Prof. Menrie Smith, Principal Ashland Junior High; Miss Geraldine Hastings, Home Ec Teacher, Clay County Training

Many thanks to all for the work you have done. Let's keep it up until Victory is won.

NEGRO BOND BUYERS

To the Editor The News:

We Americans, white and black, face a serious situation today. [illegible] aggressor nations across the seas are dedicated to the proposition of enslaving and destroying us, as well as all of those who fight for freedom under the banner of the United Nations. Negro soldiers are at this moment standing ready to pour their blood on the altar of freedom in 32 countries, to defeat those who would enslave all of us as our Negro ancestors were never enslaved prior to 1865.

We may not enjoy the freedom we deserve, but it is better than that which my grandfather and grandmother experienced. We enjoy liberties and opportunities for development unknown to nobles in the not too far distant past. I know we would rather render whatever service we are called upon to render in the defense of our homeland than to have the yoke of totalitarian slavery riveted around our neck.

The country calls upon us to "Back the Attack" our soldiers are making today—all over the world—for freedom. This is not a day when victory may be had by way of oratory or protest. The Negro citizens of Jefferson County have dedicated themselves to the task of buying $300,000 worth of War Bonds this week. When the count is taken at the big Bond Rally at the City Auditorium this Sunday afternoon, the success of the effort will depend upon the contribution each individual will have made in the purchase of War Bonds this week.

Let us face the need of this hour and the future, ready to spend and be spent, to defend our households, trusting in God. Let us manifest our love for liberty, justice and tolerance, so much so that when called upon to make the greatest sacrifice for the highest ideals, we will join with Emile Zola who, when reminded that he might lose his life in his fight for the very thing for which America is fighting, cried out, "I am not important, it is the ideal of liberty for which I fight!" Men may come and men may go, good or bad, but we must never forget we belong to a destiny that has a right to demand of us a manifestation of the greatest love for liberty and justice as we can express by the War Bonds we buy now.

Our boys out there in the bloody theaters of war are crying out to us, "Give us the tools, and we will do the job." In this way Negroes share the grandeur of those Negro captives who, when they faced the slave auction block at Ebos Landing and contemplated the horrors of just such slavery as Hitler and his henchmen would shackle the world with, turned about and marched out into the sea and to death with a song upon their lips.

Negro men and women, this is your country, too! Wherever you are, on the farm, in the factory, in the mine or in the mill, remember that the first blood spilled for this country was that of Chrispus Attucks, a Negro; remember that Lincoln, the emancipator, died because of the spirit he expressed in his Gettysburg address. Do not do anything to reflect upon the sacrifices these and others made in order that we might enjoy freedom of speech, the freedom to go as high in life as our ability permits, and the right to worship God under our own vine and fig tree.

Your liberty was purchased with the blood of those who believed as we must believe—in you and in America—in God. For these things, buy bonds. Others are dying for these same things. Do not submit by default to the yoke of slavery which is the lot of those who have fallen prey to Hitler and his mad men—a slavery [illegible] times more hideous than our grandparents ever knew.

Negro War Fund Is Near $1,000 Mark; Drive To Continue

T Negro Red Cross War Fund drive in Sumter county has reached a total of $911.69. The campaign will be continued till the end of the week in an effort to reach the $1,000 goal according to Oscar Maxwell, drive chairman.

Appreciation for the co-operation of the public is expressed in a letter today by Maxwell. It follows:

We wish to express our sincere thanks to the people of Americus and Sumter county for their loyalty and hearty co-operation given in making our War Fund Campaign a success.

The daily and weekly press have been very courteous to us in publicity. The City officials were very kind and co-operated on the day of the parade. The Red Cross general chairman, Mrs.. J. T. Warren did everything possible to keep us supplied in material and was always ready to check in the cash whether she was at home or at the Red Cross room. She furnished us with flags and posters for our parade and assisted us in every way possible to make the parade a success.

Chairman, Rev. Mack Anthony was always at our service. He started the ball rolling for us when he got Mr. Haggard to stop his men at the basket factory a few minutes to hear a talk from Rev. Boliva Davis, . pastor of Bethesda Baptist church and also Rev. Anthony, himself. When they finished every man and woman agreed to $1.00 taken from their pay check for the Red Cross. The total amount was $160. for the negroes.

There are other businesses that Chairman Anthony contacted and they also gave. Workers among the white gave us credit for all that they collected from our group.

As for the negro workers in the city as well as in the county, they did a good job of it and some are still working.

The young girls from Staley Hill who had booths on the streets did an excellent job by collecting $44.89, after the parade.

We wish to thank everyone who did even the least thing in help- [illegible] on to success with the parade as well as the drive.

Since we lack only $89.00 having $1,000, the workers have agreed to work on until Saturday when we hope to complete the $1,000. It can be done, and we are going to do it.

The Staley High school girls will be back on the streets again with booths selling Red Cross tags. Please help these girls as they are anxious to raise $50 on that day.

The total amount collected, to date is $911.69. Of this amount the county teachers raised $252.86, two white ladies $2, Dayton Veneer Mill and other sources $210.85 and Staley High booth workers $44.89, city teachers with civilian workers $401.09.

Again I wish to say thanks to one and all.

Sincerely,
Oscar Maxwell.

Colored Citizens Buy Bond Quota

Patterson Addresses Rally When Local Colored People "Go Over The Top"

An estimated crowd of 3,000 colored citizens and farmers of Butler county attended the climaxing program of the War Bond and Stamp Rally which was held in the Greenville stadium on Wednesday of the past week. Featuring the day's activities was a street parade, led by the Tuskegee Army Air Corps band, an all-Negro unit, under the direction of Lt. Frank L. Drye, commanding.

During the band concert at the stadium, colored citizens purchased $2,063.95 worth of War Bonds and Stamps at the gate. This, with $9,240.45 worth of bonds and stamps sold prior to the program, gives a total of $11,304.40 worth sold up-to-date.

Dr. Frederick D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, and state chairman for the War Savings Staff for Negroes made the principal address. Dr. Patterson emphasized the importance of buying War Bonds as the surest and safest investment a person can make while the country is at war. He also pointed out how an investor can be protected from breadlines in the event another depression should follow after the war.

Brief addresses and remarks were also made by T. M. Campbell, Field Agent with the U. S. Department of Agriculture; Nicholas Kollock, State Extension Agent with headquarters at Tuskegee, and Lieut. Drye, bandmaster. Harry Sims, Field Agent for Tuskegee Institute, gave an interesting demonstration on how a farmer can take native materials and products grown on the farm, such as corncobs and broom sage, and convert them into useful articles as a means of earning money with which to buy bonds and stamps.

S. J. Phillips, business expert of Tuskegee, and president of the Booker T. Washington Sales Agency, came to Greenville and decorated the large number of cars taking part in the parade, with war posters, which were symbols of the occasion.

Wiley Crenshaw, prosperous colored farmer of the Bragg Hill community, officially opened the campaign by buying the first $1,000 War Bond, which was the highest denomination for the rural population. Prof. Javoil Dent, principal of the City Colored School, led the City of Greenville, in purchasing the second $1,000 bond. Lizzie Bedgood, Route 2, Greenville, $600; Mattie Bedgood, also of Route 2, $500; Joe Crittenden and wife, Mary Bell, $475. Any number of other persons purchased $100 bonds.

The largest amount reported for the communities was made by W. T. Smith Lumber Company colored employees, in the amount of $3,756.07.

Col. Jeff P. Beeland, county chairman, and Calvin Poole conveyed their best wishes for a successful rally through a telegram from St. Louis, Mo., where they were attending the Rotary convention.

James Herbert, chairman, Greenville Citizens' Committee, and Rev. J. H. Browder participated in the program, which was in charge of Rev. D. B. Bennett, county chairman. Elliot Robbins, colored Farm Agent, and W. C. Patton, president, Greenville Civic Club, served as co-chairmen. Robbins, a graduate of Tuskegee Institute, also served as master of ceremonies. The colored committee members state that they wish to express appreciation for the assistance given by our white citizens and to all who helped to make the rally a success.

Schools Way Over In March Bond Drive

Mrs. L. W. Price, secretary for the Conecuh County War Bond and Stamp Committee, announced this week that the March campaign to sell War Bonds and Stamps which has been sponsored by the school children was a great success. Up to March the 23, sales for the month were reported at $27,993.75 and it is known that many more were sold during the latter part of the week. For instance in the sale conducted at the Pix Theatre Tuesday night of this week, a total of $5,437.50 of bonds were sold. This amount added to the above figure would raise the grand total to $33,431.25. However, there were many other purchases which it was impossible to get information on besides the ones mentioned. It is safe to predict that the total for the month will probably be well over $35,000.00. The quota assigned the county for March was $24,300.

The Negroes of Conecuh County are sponsoring the drive for the month of April and they have already done quite a lot of work. They plan to bring their part in the drive to a brilliant close on April 17 with a county wide rally. At this rally they have secured the services of a number of outstanding speakers including Dr. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute. Elsewhere in this issue is a statement from J. B. Jordan, who is serving as chairman of the drive for the Negroes. Readers will be interested in reading what he says regarding the campaign.

News Among Negroes

The Negro Bond and Stamp Rally

The Negro Bond and Stamp Committee met Monday at 4:30 p.m. April 5, 1943 in the office of the Negro farm and home agents. Reports were made on just how the bond and stamp drive was progressing, and it was learned that the drive is getting close to a $5,000.00 mark. It is hoped that on the 17th, which is the day of the big rally, that we will not fall short of the $5,000.00.

We are asking everybody, both White and Negroes; those that are planning to buy bonds in the month of April, please wait and buy on our big rally day. We don't want our guest, Dr. F. D. Patterson, and the rest of the party to come all the way down here, and see us fall short. We must prove it by actions that we are real loyal Americans, and that we Will stand by our country.

The committee want it to be understood that we are expecting our white friends to be on hand to hear our program. There will be seating space for them.

We are asking every Negro teacher to bring his or her students, or see to it that they will be on hand for the big parade, that will start at noon, not one minute later. The fact is we want everybody to get in this big parade and let the world know what side you are on.

My friends how must we do the Right, by putting our hearts and mind right. Without Victory in this cause everything else is vain. Every beautiful American dream will mock us as a ghost. Every grand American Achievement will taunt us a cathedral turned into a slave market. What are our schools? Our homes, what are our courts, our town meetings? Our law-makers? What our radios, our papers and our movies—if slave drivers rule the world? Every river in our land would be as the bitter waters of Babylon. Our every homes would be places of exile. We would be as spiritual chain gangs manacled by a power we woud not muster will to resist, moving in a darkness created by our own desire not to see. To prevent that, Will be our first step. Whatever it may cost, we shall take it. And buying bonds will be our next step. Won't you take it? I am,

John B. Jordan,
Chairman Conecuh's War Savings
Staff For Negroes.

Persons were admitted to the auditorium upon presenting their stamps and bonds for inspection. The sponsor organization is the Negro Farmer chapter.

The entertainment was a quiz program. Four students who have excelled in High school work were allowed to compete. They finished in this order: Molene Hill, first; Clara Evans, second; Dimple Tyson, third; and Isaiah Springs, fourth. The Unity High school boys' quartet and the Catawba High school glee club appeared on the program, also.

Negro Bond Drive Starts in County

47c

The second bond drive got off to a good start among Negroes in this community when the local Negro committee along with 41 other leaders met in the Allen University auditorium.

The meeting was opened with short talks by W. H. Harvey, chairman of the committee and Mrs. M. M. Simkins. Both speakers spoke of the necessity of purchasing bonds and stamps to the limit of the individual's funds and gave some points on salesmanship that might be used in selling bonds and stamps to others.

A number of persons were appointed as speakers to organize groups. Others were selected as personal solicitors in the sale of bonds and stamps during this second bond drive.

James H. Hinton, manager of the Pilgrim Life Insurance Company in this state and W. H. Harvey, manager of the North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Company in this district are requiring all their agents to spend a part of their time on the field attempting to place war bonds in every home where the agent makes collections. Other individuals present who represented organizations where group purchase would be encouraged were President Higgins of Allen university, Mrs. J. J. Starks of Benedict college, and T. J. Miles, director of playground activities among the colored people of Columbia.

The persons present came prepared to start the drive by making their personal purchases at this first meeting. Dean G. E. Nelson, secretary of the committee, announces that the 53 persons present bought and he has already delivered to them $11,950 worth of bonds. Several hundred dollars have been reported since the initial meeting.

More bonds have been sold every day since the meeting and the campaign will continue until May 1. Agents will canvass the city and the entire county. Much of the soliciting will be done in the county by letter, because the gasoline shortage prevents the use of cars for personal visits.

COLORED SCHOOL HAS GOOD REPORT

Poplar Springs Buys Bonds, Improves School

February 19, 1943

47c

Poplar Springs Colored School has made an excellent record on funds raised for improvements, on War Bonds and Stamps bought by patrons and students, and in other activities.

Oliver W. Ford, School Principal, gives the following report:

"The colored people of Poplar Springs are very proud of their accomplishments for the past four and a half months. They have made every effort they could in aiding the war effort. Not only have they willingly given their sons, but have purchased more than $700 worth of war stamps and bonds. In addition, they have found time to raise money for the improvement of their school. By using the suggestion given to the Poplar Springs PTA by their principal, the patrons of the community were divided into five groups. Four of the teachers of the school were made chairmen of four groups, the fifth group being headed by Nettie Cole, a patron of the school. Beginning January 1 and continuing to February 15, these groups were in a contest with each other and raised the sum of $282.32.

The amount each group raised is as follows: Sarah Ray, $21.78; Sadie Monegan, $15.41; Erie L. Jackson, $106.85; Alma C. Ford, $35.45; Nettie Cole, $103.83. Other money raised for the school during its present term was $193.26, making a grand total of $475.58, to date.

The Poplar Springs colored school expresses great appreciation for the liberal contributions made by white friends of Philadelphia. Special thanks goes to the white schools that donated them number of discarded books.

Bonds And Stamps Drive Among The Negroes

47c

Monday, March 29th, John B. Jordan, Negro Farm Agent, and also chairman of the bond and stamp committee, called the committee together to further discuss plans for the big bond and stamp rally that will be held here on Saturday, April 17, 1943.

The chairman made it known to the committee that Jesse O. Thomas, a member of the War Savings Staff, Treasury Department, Washington, D. C., Dr. F. D. Patterson, chairman of the War Savings Staff, for Negroes of Alabama, president of the Tuskegee's Institute, Alabama, and T. M. Campbell, Consultant, War Savings Staff, for Negroes of the low south, also Field Agent, U.S.D.A., Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, will be the speakers on the program for said rally. Along with them there will be the Tuskegee Army Flying School Band, headed by Lt. Frank L. Drye, Band Master.

The committee requests all Negroes of Conecuh County to exhaust every effort at his or her command, to be on hand that day, to have a real part in this big rally. Both white and Negroes are asked to stand by in taking care of those people for dinner. We must not let this chance of doing a big thing for our government, as well as for ourselves pass without giving it our wholehearted support. We truly believe that our white friends will not let us down. It will take $40.00 to give the group dinner. There will be sixty four people in the party.

It was agreed in the committee meetings that we must aid in this great struggle for world freedom, that we must exhaust every means that we have to stand by our great America, and our boys that are fighting our cause. And too "when the lights go on again, all over the world, our boys will be home again, all over the world, and the ships will sail again, all over the world," we will need a little savings to tide us over while the world is going through the readjustment period.

The committee reported over $4,000.00 worth of pledges already.

Farmville Negro Elks Buy More War Bonds

47c

Calumet Lodge No. 273, I. B. P. O. E., of Farmville, has recently helped to throw another big bomb into Nazism by the purchase of $400.00 in War Bonds.

This lodge, composed of high type colored citizens, has always shown its patriotism in deeds rather than words whenever occasion demanded it, and is recognized as the strongest in Eastern North Carolina. It has always held up the tradition of the order: "Friendship, Benevolence and Brotherly Love."

This lodge has always demonstrated its loyalty to its country by strict obedience to its laws and an unstinted support of every principal for which this great government stands. Its motto is "Our country, all for one and one for all, in peace or war, we are solidly behind you.

COLORED PEOPLE IN STAMP RALLY

47c

Central colored school had another successful War Stamp rally last Thursday night when the primary grades gave a patriotic play. "This Is Our Country," with the admission being a minimum of one ten-cent stamp for children and two stamps for adults as the admission.

The stamps were sold the people attending, so they actually saw a free show and still have their stamps.

Taft Broome, principal, said a sale of $75 worth of stamps was anticipated, but that all stamps on hand were sold out and orders for others were taken, bringing the total to $78.70 for the evening.

The combination fourth and fifth grade room of Gladys Smyre took first place for stamp sales and Fannie Headen's third graders placed second.

Professor Broome said the event was very colorful and was enjoyed extremely by the school children and patrons.

The colored people have extended thanks to Yount Lumber company for materials used in arranging the stage and to Mrs. Ernest Crouch for miniature flags presented the school.

During the past school year the school has raised more than one thousand dollars, which was to be used for school house improvement, but since material and labor has not been available, it wisely concluded to invest a major portion of the sum in War Bonds.

James W. Jenkins, principal of the school, has done a fine work since succeeding W. M. Donald, deceased.

Negroes Here Support Two War Drives Well

Cairo, Ga., Messenger
April 2, 1943

Cairoites and Grady countians have been doing well on war calls, generally, but if the white people supported the various drives as well according to their means as the Negroes the record here would be still better.

This was indicated this week when the second monthly War Bond and Stamp parade of the Negroes resulted in the sale of $356.50 in War Bonds and Stamps, with nearly all of the 500 Negro school children here having a part. Of course, this was not their monthly total, by any means. Green Johnson and Lottie Jordan, the chairmen, reported that Monday's parade and sales event was much more enthusiastic than the one last month.

Moreover, Green Johnson and other leaders in the Negro Red Cross drive this week turned in an additional $111 in Red Cross contributions, even though $113 had already been turned in. This was about seven per cent of the total which sent the county well over its goal last week. Local Negroes are unquestionably doing an excellent job of supporting the war effort.

Negroes Hit $1,000,000 Goal In Giant War Bond Auction

Speeches, a spectacular parade down Beale Street and a grand War Bond auction climaxed the million-dollar campaign of the Colored Division of the Shelby County War Finance Committee last night.

Lieut. George Washington Lee, chairman, reported that purchases totaling $611,250 were counted before the auction results were tabulated and without counting pay roll deductions.

Drive Photographed

"We feel confident we have exceeded the $1,000,000 goal," he said.

Photographers of the Office of War Information were dispatched to record various phases of the enthusiastic campaign.

Roscoe Cinkling Simmons, negro orator from Chicago, declared that Memphis is the most advanced city in the South and has done more for its negro population than any other city.

"Its educational system for colored people is the finest in the land," he said. "Its centers of negro health are incomparable. Its parks for colored people surpass any park system to be found anywhere.

"What Memphis has done, Memphis was expected to do. It is our chief city, for from its famous streets rose the genius to undo the myriad frowns of often oppressive scorn," he continued.

2000 Attend Program

"I do not wonder that colored Memphis leads the Nation in the purchase of War Bonds, for in the Memphis spirit white and black march together in war as in peace."

More than 2000 attended the program in Booker T. Washington High School where Prof. Nat D. Williams was master of ceremonies. Leading off the festivities was the patriotic parade including 35 units of 3000 marchers and the bands from Booker T. Washington and Manassas High Schools, the Melrose and Hamilton Junior High Schools and of the Letter Carriers.

Aged Bootblack Saves for Bonds

JUN 6 1943

For Tom, who was born a slave, makes buying war bonds his hobby. He admits that it "isn't easy, saving all my money, but I got to do what I can."

The aged bootblack, who has had his stand in a Portland office building since 1914, has two special reasons for war bond purchases. One of his sons, a lieutenant, is in an Army hospital in Australia with an arm blown off. The other, a captain, is in Walter Reed hospital in Washington, D. C., with a hole in his head received in North Africa.

"The only way we can win it is by getting more stuff over there," Tom explained. "Maybe if we'd had more stuff over there my boys wouldn't be hurt now."

Howell has done a mite of fighting himself. He began as a drummer boy in Sherman's Army in the Civil War, served 30 years in the Army during the Indian wars and was pensioned in 1900 while fighting at Peking, China.

"My country's been mighty good to me," Tom said, "and I got to do what I can for it—and for my boys. We all got to do what we can."

Tom's "ole woman" thinks the country has been pretty good to her, too. When her boy in Washington was delirious and called for her, the government sent her back to the nation's capital to be at his side.

First War Bond In Drive Bought At White House

WASHINGTON, April 7—(AP) A veteran Negro messenger shoved $18.75 into the hands of President Roosevelt today and bought the first war bond as the White House "jumped the gun" on a $13,000,000,000 second war loan drive which starts Monday.

The purchaser was John H. Pye, a White House messenger for 10 years and Mr. Roosevelt's chauffeur for five years when the chief executive was assistant navy secretary.

In a ceremony on the portico outside Mr. Roosevelt's office, White House employes gathered around to buy bonds and Secretary Morgenthau told the chief executive:

"On the 12th of April the treasury department is offering the people of America the opportunity to lend their support to our fighting men in the great spring offensive by subscribing $13,000,000,000 to our second war loan."

"Mr Secretary, this is just a small cross-section of the White House staff" the president replied, "but this is like a great many other American houses throughout the country. Most of us have got some member of the family in the fighting forces of the United States.

"And we back home are trying to do our bit too. We subscribe. If I might paraphrase the slogan of this new drive to maintain the war and turn out things for our troops at the front—the slogan is for us: They give their lives. We lend our money."

Negroes Continue War Bonds and Stamps Campaign

The program launched by a group of Negro leaders January 9, 1943, to buy War Bonds and Stamps has continued with a reasonable degree of success. The leaders went out to get their neighbors to pledge part of their income to be invested in War bonds and stamps.

Two weeks ago, three school teachers reported that their classes were buying stamps every week.

R. D. Harrison, employed at the Mill, displayed his patriotic services when he reported his success with the Colored who are working at the Mill. Many of the employees had pledged to invest in Stamps had failed to come up to their promise. R. D. Harrison explained the value of buying Stamps and Bonds was an investment to meet future needs. His report showed that he contacted 84 persons: 66 pledged to invest $72.20 in stamps weekly, 14 buying 10 per cent of their weekly income, and 4 were unable. This is a remarkable piece of work and R. D. Harrison should be congratulated for his unselfish service. He also met with the local Union Sunday afternoon to further explain the value of this investment.

Thomas People of Blairs reported that he had contacted 25 persons and found that only 6 pledged to invest $2.95 in Stamps weekly.

Negro Farmer Uses Most Of His Savings to Buy A War Bond

W. L. Singleton, a negro farmer living near Camden, worked hard last year and when he had sold his cotton and paid his debts had five hundred and sixteen dollars left in the bank.

A few ays ago he came to town and told banker Howell at the First National Bank that he wanted to buy a War Bond and help his country win the war.

The banker asked him how much he wanted to spend for a bond and he said he would like to buy one of the $500 denomination "E" bonds. The price of this bond is $375 and when reminded by the banker that this would leave him only $141 to make his crop on, Singleton, said "Yes sir, but I can do without a lot of things and get by and I want to buy the bond."

Here's hoping that Singleton does "get by" and that he lives to cash in his bond for $500 when it matures. Such patriotism and self-sacrifice is a worthy example for all Americans to follow.

Memphis, Tenn., Commercial Appeal

TO THE EDITOR

A Negro Pleads For All His People To Support The Nation In This Crisis

To The Commercial Appeal:

May I, a negro man, have a little space on your editorial page to say a few things to my people?

The Commercial Appeal has, on a number of occasions, been a real friend to my people, a fact for which I am deeply grateful. Here is what I would like to say:

Listen fellows: This is our load of lumber. Our pay checks are all tied up in it. It's up to us to help put it over the hill and into town.

Several years ago I worked at a sawmill in Webster County about nine miles west of Eupora, which was our leading market center. At that time our main highway ran across upper Sand Creek and then up a long incline commonly known to people of that vicinity as Susan's Hill.

At the mill where I worked it was the practice of our employer to knock off Saturday at noon, load his truck with lumber and mill hands, drive to town where he would sell the lumber and pay off.

On a particular Saturday evening we started to town with an unusually heavy load. We crossed South Creek bottom and got about halfway up Susan's Hill and there the motor quit. There was nothing wrong with the motor; it was overloaded and the uphill strain was too great.

Our employer said our only chance was to unload part of our lumber, take the rest to the top of the hill, unload it, come back for the rest, etc. That meant getting to town several hours later, and every true native and lover of Dixie knows how that sounded on Saturday evening with payday pending. We decided we could beat that. There were six of us. Every one of us hit the ground, got our shoulders under that load and yelled to our employer at the wheel to "step on it."

It was a long crawl, but not once did we stop. Soon we were on top and in a fraction of the time it would have otherwise required we were in town and had our pay. Our employer was so pleased by our initiative he paid us an extra bonus.

Now listen, fellows, our American way of life, our free democracy, America with all its resources: that is our truck. Our chief Government center in Washington is the engine. Our President is at the wheel. The responsibility of winning this war and placing the advantages of the four freedoms in reach of all nations is a terrible load and the engine is strained to the limit. Remember, fellows, this is our load, too. Our paydays are all tied up in it.

Our very existence, our inalienable rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, all these are our pay days; and they are all tied up in the destinies of America.

The Axis dictators are struggling like rabid wildcats to make us unload, not temporarily but for all time.

This is our load of lumber; there is something everyone of us can do to put it over the top. Our Government has outlined our programs. Some of us must fight, others must work in the fields, factories, on the highways and waterways, and thousands of other occupations depending on our individual qualifications. But whether we mix dough or cement we must put our very souls into it. We must invest every spare penny in war bonds and stamps during the war bond drive from now on. We can forego an occasional soft drink, and hard one to, and put the savings in stamps for our next bond.

And we must pray.

This is America, thank God, and here we do not have to smuggle out a prayer to our maker and the answer to our prayers do not have to be smuggled or bootlegged in. Our faith in God is not affected by budget or point rationing and His love for mankind is beyond measure.

The responsibility is extremely heavy, but we must not unload it. We must get behind it heart and soul, bayonet and broom. We must put this truck load of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness on top of Susan's Hill. We must, because there is too much at stake —our pay checks.

Once over the top we can 'go to town' get our pay checks, wave their red, white and blue signatures in the faces of those dictators who would enslave the world, tell them to go to blazes and be whanged.

What about it, fellows?

Negro Planter Buys First $1,000 Bond

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, ALA., April 10.—Daniel R. Richburg, a successful and prosperous negro farmer made the first purchase of a $1,000 bond, opening the big war bond and stamp drive held Saturday at Luverne. His children purchased sizeable bonds, and pledged to support the war effort by the purchase of additional bonds.

T. M. Campbell, field agent service, U. S. Department of Agriculture, made the principal address, representing J. O. Thomas, U. S. Treasury Department, Washington, who was unable to be present. Campbell brought greetings from Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, and chairman for sale of bonds and stamps among negroes in Alabama.

Dr. Patterson was to have spoken, but was called away from the Institute on matters in connection with the war effort.

Harry Simms, Tuskegee Institute, who followed Campbell, illustrated his remarks with various woods, nuts and plants gathered from the farms. He showed how farmers with little effort could use these products as a source of cash income to buy war bonds and stamps.

Hundreds of school children and farmers took part in the rally which was sponsored by T. J. Foreman, Tuskegee graduate, county agent, Crenshaw County.

Negroes Organize to Help Put Over War Bond Drive

Augusta, Ga., Herald
October 1, 1943

By WALTER S. HARRIS

Aroused over the uncertainty of Augusta reaching its goal in the current War Bond campaign, a special called meeting of the Negro Civic and Business League executive committee was held yesterday afternoon in the offices of the Pilgrim Insurance Company, where plans were outlined for a last-minute drive among the Negro citizens to help raise Richmond County's quota of $5,041,000 by Saturday night. The meeting grew out of a conference yesterday morning, headed by Walter S. Hornsby, chairman of the Civic and Business League Committee, with Elbert Peabody chairman of the Third War Loan Drive.

While local colored citizens have participated in the drive in a large way, it was said that no direct effort was made to prosecute the campaign among them, no organization was set up and no representatives were authorized to solicit the sale of bonds among the Negroes. Those responding to the campaign were moved to do so through the newspapers and radio as a patriotic duty. Through organization more direct personal contacts could have been made and better results obtained as was in Columbus, Ga., where the Negroes were assigned a quota, which was over-subscribed, one women purchasing $20,000 worth of bonds.

However, with only two more days of the drive left the Negroes set up a whirlwind machinery in motion to make contacts in person and by telephone, today and Saturday, in order to help the county reach its quota, Hornsby stated, and the cooperation of every Negro citizen is urged.

The league's executive committee, composed of the following members, was assigned the last-minute task: Chairman Hornsby, C. W. Hickson, Dr. A. E. Maxwell, A. M. Carter, George M. Johnson, Rebecca V. Gray, L. D. Perry, Walter S. Harris, Rev. A. C. Griggs, J. W. Wallace and Rev. M. J. Sherard.

Citizens are urged to make contacts with the committee by telephone or in person.

'Spirit Of East Lake' Gets Sendoff: Two Others To Be Launched

Although the Third War Loan drive closed officially at midnight Saturday with Jefferson County and Alabama soaring well over their quotas in War Bond purchases, echoes of drive activities were still in evidence here Monday, with a bomber launching at 12:30 p.m. Monday and preparations complete for launching ceremonies of two other bombers.

Alabama Monday had rolled up a total of $123,100,000 in its drive for $108,000,000, it was announced Monday night by Ed Leigh McMillan, state drive leader. This latest figure was the tabulation of Alabama War Bond sales released by the Federal Reserve Bank at Atlanta, Mr. McMillan said.

Jefferson County had passed the $42,000,000 mark when the drive was closed officially at midnight Saturday, leaders here announced. Final totals will be released within the next few days, Judge Clarence W. Allgood, Jefferson County chairman, said.

The "Spirit of East Lake" took off at Bechtel-McCone-Parsons Corporation modification plant at 12:30 p.m. Monday and the "Fairfield Avenger" will receive its name officially at ceremonies at the same hour Tuesday.

Bringing to a close bomber launchings as a result of the drive will be ceremonies at which the "Julius Ellsberry," purchased through efforts of the Negro division, will be dedicated at 12:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Jennings B. Mitchell was drive chairman for East Lake and was assisted by Mrs. M. D. McRae, co-chairman. Christening the bomber for that locality was Mrs. Thomas McKinney.

Mrs. Willa W. Demaris, widow of Chief [illegible] Officer W. W. Demaris who lo[illegible]s life when the aircraft carrier [illegible]ngley went down, will christen [illegible] Fairfield plane.

With [illegible]T. Bennett and C. W. Askew, Negro drive leaders, in charge of plans, Negroes of the city will see their bomber launched in honor of one of the first Negro heroes of the war, Julius Ellsberry, who was serving at Pearl Harbor when the attack was made there.

Negroes Praised For War Bond Efforts

Athens, Ala., Courier

Negro citizens of Limestone Couunty have made a fine contribution in the drive to raise the county quota of war bonds according to W. A. Caughran, chairman of the County War Saving Staff and B. F. Hall, negro county agent, chairman of the negro county committee in this county.

Interest was stimulated among the colored population of the county by the appearance last Friday on the courthouse square of the 76-piece Tuskegee band, one of the finest musical units that has visited here in some time according to local observers.

After a number of selections by the well known band and brief statements by several well known local citizens, T. M. Campbell, negro extension leader in Tuskegee and Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute addressed the crowd of several hundred assembled on the east side of the court house. September 30, 1943

Following the meeting several thousand dollars worth of bonds were sold at booths set up at convenient places for the negro citizens who were present.

Teh committee in charge of the county drive among the negroes consisted of B. F. Hill, chairman, G. R. Bridgeforth, Ella McKissack, and E. K. Gray while the Athens committee consisted of Rev. G. H. Holmes, Rev. A. H. Harris, Rev. F. D. Sowell, Maxie Allen, the Rev. Judson King and the faculty of Trinity school and Maggie Watkins and her faculty members.

Goal Sighted As Close of Third War Loan Nears

[illegible], Ala., News
September 30, 1943

Two Days Remain For Macon County To Attain Quota

With only two more days remaining until the close of the Third War Loan, scheduled for next Saturday night, county leaders in the campaign redoubled their efforts to put Macon County over the top. Late reports on progress of the drive indicated that, although the goal is not yet assured, the county may reach its quota if every worker makes a last minute effort during the remainder of the drive.

County Chairman H. A. Vaughan, admitting that prospect of reaching the quota look brighter than they did last week, said only that the "Goal is in sight" but warned that it would not be reached if anyone relaxes during the remaining two days.

"We can see the end of the road now," said Chairman Vaughan, "but it is not at all certain that we will reach it unless every worker in the county makes a last minute effort. I want to make an urgent appeal for all who have solicitation lists to make another try at seeing every person on these lists. Also in many cases persons who have already bought bonds will be willing to make additional purchases if approached."

Mr. Vaughan also pointed out that mere pledges will not count toward the county's total and he urged that everyone who hed pledged to buy bonds to make their purchases before Saturday night. Only in this way, he said, will their purchases count in the final tabulation of the Third War Loan.

Pointing out that the county had a heavy quota, Mr. Vaughan said that he has been confident all the time that the county would go over the top, although he admitted some concern at the slow start made in bond purchases.

Prospects for success of the campaign here took a brighter turn earlier this week when the City of Tuskegee invested $100,000 in bonds and Tuskegee Institute took $50,000 in bonds. These two purchases represent more than one-fifth of the quota.

Negroes Buy Many Bonds In Drive

Columbia, S. C., State

Chairman Maceo Entzminger of the Richland county Negro committee for the third war loan drive reported yesterday that he has encountered a very high degree of enthusiasm among the Negro population of Columbia and sounding communities.

His committee, he reported is co-operating in a fine manner, and he expressed the opinion that the results achieved will be far beyond his fondest anticipation. Chairman Entzminger was unstinting in his praise of the work that has bene done by Principal John Whiteman of the Waverly graded school, who is chairman of the school group co-operating in the drive. Due to his capable leadership the Negro teachers in the several city schools have purchased bonds in percentage as follows: Booker T. Washigton high, 88.6; Carver junior high, 100; Waverly graded, 100; Howard graded, 100; Saxon graded, 100; Ridgewood graded, 100; Booker T. Washington Heights graded, 100. September 26, 1943

Chairman Entzminger expressed his gratitude to Principals Simmons, Whiteman, Rogers, Madden, Nance and Burton for their activity in the matter. He believes that this spirit of patriotic sacrifice on the part of the teachers of our youth, who for the most part have been spending rather than earning during the past several weeks, many in the endeavor to better equip themselves to serve the educational needs of their pupils, will serve to stimulate the Negro citizenry in the by and large to buy bonds to an extent they have not thought of doing before. There is a deep-seated consciousness on the part of Columbia Negroes that this is their war, and that they must back to the utmost those fine young Negro men and women who are actively participating in the war so that when the fighting is all over they may return to a really democratic Columbia which those whom they left behind made possible because they backed the attack by buying war bonds.

There will be a mammoth bond rally at Allen university Monday evening. The program will be featured by music rendered by the band of the 339 from the Columbia Air Base. Among the scheduled speakers will be Special Service Officer Lieutenant Kennedy and Chaplain Lieutenant Thornhill of Fort Jackson. It is expected that many commissioned officers, non-commissioned officers and service men in general will be in attendance. Leading civilians from all walks of life will be present to lend their support. A capacity house is assured. There is no doubt in the mind of Chairman Entzminger that Columbia's Negro citizens will back the attack to the limit of their resources, and then some.

Religious Meet Is Turned Into Patriotic Event

By NAT WILLIAMS
Memphis WORLD
(Written for U. S. Treasury's Third War Loan Drive)

WASHINGTON—(S N S) — The tramp of marching feet attuned to martial music mingled with the melody of hymns and gospel at Griffith Stadium here as Elder Lightfoot Solomon Michaux, famous Negro evangelist, turned over the first half of his huge outdoor religious meeting to a War Bond Rally.

The pageant-like opening ceremonies featured the music of an American Legion Band, heading the line of march, followed by a uniformed company of WACs, soldiers bearing rifles, and uniformed members of the local Negro unit of American Women's Volunteer Service. Additional color was lent to the processional when the 'Happy Am I" choir, 156 men and women, garbed in white satin robes, marched to the center of the stadium and took their seats. Elder Michaux led the choir in a special demonstration in behalf of the Third War Loan, singing songs dedicated to the war effort.

Major R. R. Wright, 86-year banker of Philadephia, was introduced and appealed to the thousands of persons in the audience to buy War Bonds immediately, or sign pledges to do so. Major Wright, veteran of two wars, was described as having sold, individually over $2,500,000 in War Bonds since the First War Loan. At the conclusion of his speech, members of the AWVS went among the audience taking orders for War Bonds, or passing out and collecting pledges for them.

Elder Michaux concluded his plea with the remark, "The word is not lost, just confused, and if we Buy Bonds we'll straighten this thing out."

P. D. Davis Names War Bonds

Weekly Review
Birmingham, Ala.

PROVIDES REVOLVING FUND FOR WAR STAMP PURCHASE

Of interest to all Smithfield residents and to those persons whose traffic takes them near the corner of Eighth Avenue and John St., No., where the Davis Grocery is located, is the fact that Mr. P. D. Davis the thoughtful proprietor-owner has created a Revolving Fund in cooperation with the Third War Loan by which method, children, parents and citizens in general can purchase their war stamps at his store. This patriotic gesture on the part of Mr. Davis is to be highly commended. It will be remembered that Mr. Davis during World War I was secretary of the Speakers Bureau for Four Minute Men in Jefferson Copnty and Negro chairman of the Fourth Liberty Bond Loan Drive.

NAMES SPECIAL BONDS

Mr. Davis purchased a War Bond on the day of the Invasion of Italy and another one the day that Italy surrendered to the Allies. These Bonds, he has named respectively, his "Invasion Bond" and "Surrender Bond." This unique idea sets an example to other patriotic citizens especially the younger set who attend Parker High School near by. The all-out purchase of war stamps brings nearer the day when our boys will be home with us again.

The Annual Men's Day Address at Metropolitan A.M.E. Zion Church Sunday Sept. 12 at 8 P. M., will be delivered by Mr. Davis whose subject for this occasion is "Thinking and Planning For Better Living When Peace Comes." It promises to inspire as well as instruct.

Negroes Feel Special Kinship To Russia, Says Granger In Endorsing War Fund Drive

Weekly Review
Birmingham, Ala.

"Negroes in this country feel a special kinship with the brave Russian people, not only because the Russians' record of physical and emotional suffering during the centuries matches that of the American Negroes, but also because the Soviet Union has succeeded in stamping out racial prejudice from its national life."

Thus spoke Lester B. Granger, Executive Secretary of the National Urban League, this week when he endorsed the National War Fund's coming drive as it relates to the Russian War Relief, Inc.

The Russian War Relief, with 15 other war service and relief agencies will share in the funds collected during the National War Fund campaign to be launched on a national scale in conjunction with united community campaigns in October and November. Funds collected during this national campaign will provide aid for milliosn of Russian civilians who have lost all their worldly belongings. They need food, seed, medical supplies and clothing.

Among the agencies which merged to form the National War Fund in order to conserve time and cut down overhead expenses are a number in which Negroes have a direct and vital interest and which they read great benefits, namely: the USO, through which hundreds of thousands of Negro servicemen are entertained and made comfortable; the United Seamen's Service, which serves over 9,000 Negro merchant seamen; and the French and Belgian Relief Societies, whose funds are spent on millions of Negro French and Belgian subjects in Africa, supplying them with clothing, hospitalization, medical and other equipment.

Colored Population Raises $12,000 In Third War Loan

Franklinton Leader
October

The Third War Loan Drive among the colored population of Washington Parish terminated Saturday with a very interesting and enthusiastic parade under the leadership of F. E. Dyson, assisted by R. H. Tucker of Bogalusa. The parade began at the colored A. M. E. Church and came through the town and ended on the hill at the Washington Parish Training School where the program got under way. Rev. Ira Flowers of the Centenary Methodist Church, Franklinton, was the principal speaker. Colored speakers appearing on the program included J. E. Burris of the Vernon community; Rev. J. F. Marshall of the A. M. E. Church, and Rev. L. H Norris, Methodist Church, both of Franklinton.

Over the three week period of the Third War Loan the colored population outside the Bogalusa area have purchased bonds and stamps amounting to $12,000. The largest contribution made by any one community was from Wesley Ray near Angie. Their total was $3,000, followed by the Vernon community whose total was $800. The largest contribution by any colored organization was made by the Teachers and Parents Federal Credit Union by purchasing bonds in the amount of $6,000.

Among those appearing on the program at the school Saturday was "Aunt Sarah" Watson, who was given quite an ovation when it was made known that six of her sons are now serving in the armed forces of their country.

T. W. Barker, chairman of the drive states that without the splendid cooperation of both white and colored the drive could not have been the success it was and he wishes to thank each firm and individual who took part in making the drive a success.

Bonita Colored People Plan Bond Selling Festivities

The colored people of the Bonita community are to be commended on their efforts to raise money to buy war bonds.

Rev. W. L. Debro, pastor of St. Joe A. M. E. church at Bonita, is the originator of a plan which is going over big, and shows that our colored friends are both resourceful and patriotic.

Members of St. Joe church worked a crop on the church land, and have set aside one 500 lb. bale of cotton for a drawing to be held on October 17.

Printed tickets or chances are being sold at $1.00 each, and when the drawing takes place somebody is going to win a bale of cotton with the lucky number. The money will be invested in bonds and later, probably after the war, it will be used to help build a new church.

$21,000 In War Bonds Sold At Colored Rally

Jackson, Tenn. Sun

September 29, 1943

A total of $21,000 in war bonds was reached in the auction sale Tuesday night by the Colored Division in the Third War Loan effort here, more than twice as much as the goal set for the rally. With the cooperation of leaders in the campaign here, the sale was held at Merry High school, with the Camp Tyson colored military band furnishing a major portion of the entertainment.

The high bid of the sale was made by Prof. George F. Porter, $5,700 for a small pig. The Rev. W. P. Pipkin made the second high purchase of $3,100 and Dr. J. F. Lane, chairman of the Colored Division, was third with a purchase at $1,800. The colored Methodist Publishing House made a purchase of $1,000.

The auditorium of the high school was so crowded that auctioneers T. R. White and W. R. Bell at times had difficulty in making themselves heard. The service flag of the school was unveiled with appropriate exercises, and the Lane College Glee Club and the Merry High Glee Club furnished entertainment also.

Herron Pearson, regional chairman for Madison, Gibson, Crockett and Haywood counties in the campaign, expressed himself as being delighted with the results of the sale, the original goal for the sale being set at $10,000.

COUNTY GOES OVER TOP IN 3RD BOND LOAN

Wetumpka, Ala., Herald

More Than A Million Dollars Raised In Bond Campaign

Inspired by a determination to maintain their record, the people of Elmore County, under the leadership of S. B. Reneau, Executive Chairman, oversubscribed their quota by approximately $100,000, and everyone responded generously and enthusiastically in the Third War Bond Finance Program. Mr. Reneau stated that he would like to find time to write a personal letter to everyone who helped put over this war bond drive.

This was an outstanding achievement, since the quota of $1,044,000 was $200,000 above the quotas of other counties of equal population and wealth. In spite of the fact that the quota was a tremendous one, our people accepted their responsibility, and raised a total of $1,144,000 during the month of September.

The distribution of "E", "F", and "G" bonds, which the government asked us to buy, was better than during the Second War Loan Drive.

The War Finance Committee received a letter dated October 2, signed by Marc Ray Clement, State Manager, stating that Elmore County's performance in exceeding the Third War Loan quota was next to a miracle. He congratulated and commended each one for the fine record made by Elmore County.

Mr. S. B. Reneau, Executive Chairman, stated that he was most grateful for the cooperation and loyal support given him by the members of the War Finance Committee, the civic clubs, particularly the Rotary and Lions Clubs of Wetumpka and Tallassee, the Men's Civic Club, of Millbrook, and the Federation of Women's Clubs throughout the county.

Many individual families deserve special mention. Thanks go out to men like Mr. D. W. Speigner, who bought bonds of substantial value for each of his children, grandchildren, his wife, and himself. Many outstanding patriotic family groups could be mentioned.

The negro division, under the leadership of Louis Peake, did an outstanding piece of work, and the wave of patriotism pervaded their many achievements in interesting their own people to lend the government their money.

Elmore County is proud to lend her money for buying the many shells that will go to storm Hitler's European fortress, furnish fighter planes, tanks, jeeps, and bombers that will shorten the invasion time and return our weary boys to their restful homes.

All Alabama Counties Over

Every county in Alabama met its quota in the Third War Loan Campaign, rolling up sales of $119,300,000 with many more millions yet to be reported officially.

"Alabama has certainly done a magnificent job in the Third War Loan," said State War Finance Committee Chairman Ed Leigh McMillan, "and I know the fact that not one single county failed to measure up to what was asked of it is going to win national recognition for Alabama."

"We Alabamians can look proudly into the eyes of our fighting men now and tell them that we, too, are in the fight, that we have Backed the Attack," Mr. McMillan said.

"Alabamians, in the traditional spirit, have invested unstintingly of their dollars, going beyond the quota set for them in response to their country's call for funds.

"Such a record as Alabama has made in the Third War Loan could not have been possible without the help of hundreds of groups and thousands of people. On behalf of the men and women now in uniform, I wish to thank every person in Alabama who had a part in rolling up the State's magnificant total of Bond purchases so that we here at home could do our full share to 'Back the Attack.'"

"Julius Ellsberry" And "Spirit Of Tuskegee" Christened

Weekly Review 43

Birmingham, Ala.

Twelve Negroes from the large group taking part in the Jefferson County Negro War Bond Sales Campaign to raise $300,000 in War Bond Sales and who are responsible for upwards of a million dollars in bond sales, assembled last Tuesday Morning at Bechtel McCone-Parson's giant Airplane Modification Plant to dedicate the "Julius Elsberry" Bomber

Among those taking part in the dedication were: S. J. Bennett, A. G. Gaston, Charles J. Greene, Oscar W. Adams, Rev. W. D. Hargrove, Mrs. A. G Gaston, Mrs. Ruth Jackson-Odum, Mr. L. K. Shivery, H. D. Coke, E. O. Jackson and Robert Durr. Mrs. Florence Ellsberry, mother of Julius Ellsberry, who after remarks made by Messers Bennett and Gaston, spoke some quite awe inspiring words expressing the same type of hope for Victory that her son's death testified to, and as is the attitude of all the Negro citizens of Birmingham who made the big bond rally a success

"Spirit of Tuskegee" Christened

Following the dedication of the Julius Ellsberry Bomber, a group of officials of Tuskegee including Dr. F. D. Patterson, Chairman of the Negro Division War Savings Staff of Alabama, Prof. T. M. Campbell, Mr. Harry Sims and two or three army officials from Tuskegee arrived to participate in the dedication of "The Spirit of Tuskegee" another Giant-60 Bomber, which shows that through the leaders at Tuskegee more than three hundred thousand dollars worth of War Bonds and Stamps have been sold.

The dedicatory ceremonies were broadcast via WAPI. Photographs and further details will appear in an early issue of this newspaper.

The event at BMP Wednesday was a significant, history-making one which destroys all grounds for the current argument in some quarters as to the extent to which Negroes are buying War Bonds and Stamps.—The dedication of the two 60-ton bombers, both of which are "avengers" destined to put sting in the attack on those who have attacked the things for which this nation stands and to plow the earth in order that the flowers of freedom may grow and the lights go on again all over the world for all lovers of freedom, justice and unity

FRANKLIN COUNTY GOES OVER

Louisburg, N. C. Times

October 8, 1943

LOUISBURG & FRANKLINTON LEAD

Youngsville and Dunn Also Go Over; Colored Citizens Do Fine Work; Chairman Beam Very Grateful

Franklinton, Youngsville, Louisburg and Dunn No. 1 districts have oversold their quotas in the Third War Loan by over one hundred thousand dollars, Third War Loan Chairman Gaither M. Beam announced Thursday. Beam also said the county itself had overbought the $327,000 quota by around $3,000 according to an unofficial summary of sales made this week.

Leader in the group of townships going over their quota was Louisburg with approximately $85,000 over the township quota of $68,000. Franklinton was next in line under the leadership of Leonard Henderson who reports sales of $88,458, or about 23,000 over their quota of $65,000. J. L. Brown, Youngsville chairman, revealed that Youngsville went over the top on September 29 with sales of $38,800 to top that townships quota by over $8,000.

O. G. Thompson, chairman of Dunn No. 1 District sent in sales of $18,700 in bonds and $87.75 in stamps to top that district's quota by over $2,000.

Beam said that other townships were doing equally good jobs but at press time Thursday there were no other reports of townships over the top.

In the Negro division, Co-chairmen Carl A. Harris and the Rev. J. P. Mangum announced that their division had sold $5,825 to date and that returns were not all in. Leaders in the Negro division were Louisburg with sales of $3,000, Franklinton, with $2,000, Sandy Creek-Gold Mine with $300 and Dunn-Harris with $225.

Chairman beam urged township chairmen to keep selling bonds as many and as often as they could until the drive ends next week and to sell the bonds possible to insure the future of our people and our country.

Beam also expressed thanks to the many men and women who have given their time, scarce gasoline and tires to the all-out selling effort that put the county over the top. He also expressed appreciation to the cooperation of the merchants who gave invaluable assistance in the bond auctions and to the bond buyers themselves who accepted the county's quota as a challenge. "The Treasury challenged Franklin County with a high quota during a poor crop season but the county met that challenge," Beam said. "Franklin County folks know a good buy when they see it."

County's Negroes Exceed War Bond Quota Of $300,000

Birmingham, Ala., Age-Herald
September 2[illegible], 1943

Goal Is Surpassed At City Auditorium Rally Attended By 4,000 After Downtown Street Parade

BY INGRAM BLANDING

More than 4,000 Jefferson County Negroes attended a bond buying rally at the Municipal Auditorium Sunday afternoon to over-subscribe their $300,000 quota. Cash sales at the rally totaled $34,175, which swelled the more than $278,000 already raised by the Negro division of the Jefferson County War Savings Board to above the $312,000 mark.

This assures that christening of a Liberator bomber in the name of Julius Ellsberry, Birmingham Negro, who was killed at Pearl Harbor the day it was attacked by Japan.

Parade Precedes Rally

The rally was preceded by a colorful parade through downtown Birmingham in which four Negro bands, benevolent and civic organizations and protective corps units of the OCD participated.

Master of Ceremonies H. D. Coke said subscriptions at the auditorium consisted of cash only and that many purchases by checks remained to be totaled Monday. One of the largest of the latter was for $1,000, tendered by the Rev. W. D. Hargrove on behalf of the Union Bethel Independent Methodist Church.

Mayor Addresses Rally

Principal speaker at the rally was Mayor Cooper Green, who expressed assurance that the Negroes of the city and county would continue to give the support they have given in the past. Others who spoke briefly were Judge Clarence W. Allgood, county chairman of the bond drive; Jack McCormack, WSGN announcer; A. G. Gaston, chairman of the Negro Division; S. J. Phillips, Harry Sims and C. J. Greene.

Led by the Tuskegee Army Air Base Band, the parade formed at Sixth Avenue, North, on 16th Street, marched south to Fourth Avenue, east to 18th Street and thence to the auditorium.

Other groups participating included the Beauticians Volunteer

War Bonds and Stamps

Corps of the CVD, Jones Valley Lodge No. 14 of the Independent Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the World, and its auxiliary, Red Cross nurses, Boy Scouts, and bands from Parker High School, the Fourth Provisional Regiment, Camp Sibert and Fairfield Industrial High School.

County Still Short Of Goal

Meanwhile, week-end totals for the Jefferson County War Loan drive were boosted to $25,500,000 while the state reported totals of $78,300,000.

At the Negro rally it was pointed out that the sales recorded by the bomber committee represented only a part of the total Negro purchases, as many bonds are being bought through neighborhood postoffices, payroll deductions and other authorized agencies, for which there is no official check.

Byrnes Urges Individuals To Purchase War Bonds

WASHINGTON, Sept. 26.—(AP)—War Mobilization Director Byrnes appealed Sunday night to individuals to buy more war bonds, declaring that "foolish indeed is the man who when the sun is shining does not save money for a rainy day."

Byrnes, in an address broadcast by NBC from the Army's War Bond Show here, said that while total bond sales in the $15,000,000,000 Third War Loan had reached $13,305,000,000, individuals had purchased only $2,800,000,000 or about 56 per cent of the goal set for them.

"As never before," he said, "the sunshine of high wages and spendable income is bearing down throughout this land. Our national income is approaching the all-time high level of $150,000,000,000."

Of the income, he estimated, Americans will have left over to spend or invest about $40,000,000,000 after paying taxes and buying all available goods and services.

"It is only common sense to invest a large portion of this in war bonds and hold them for a rainy day," he continued. "If we spend this surplus bidding up prices in an effort to get more than our fair share of the available goods, it will be impossible to hold ceiling prices. We will make black markets. We will start an inflation spiral that will impoverish the people."

Negroes Win Praise for War Loan Work

October 2[illegible], 1943

"During the Third War Loan drive the Negroes of Richland county showed much enthusiasm, not only making a splendid showing but cooperating in every way," Frank P. McGowan, county chairman of the drive, said yesterday.

The Richland County Negro War Finance committee put forth an effort to reach every Negro in the county by holding rallies at the various city schools, making individual contacts, sponsoring a bond dance at the Taylor Street USO club, and giving a rally at Allen university, he added.

County rallies, conducted by J. E. Dickson, Richland County Agricultural Extension agent, resulted in the sale of $3,000 in war bonds. The rally at Allen university was held by the Negro committee, raising $2,000 for bond purchases.

The bond dance at the Taylor Street USO was sponsored by graduate members of Kappa Alpha Psi, Negro collegiate fraternity. It netted $5,500.

Through its combined work the Negro committee sold $39,900 worth of war bonds, Mr. McGowan said. This figure does not include the bonds bought by Negroes regularly by the payroll savings plan.

The committee, who, Mr. McGowan reported, worked "hard and faithfully," had its headquarters at Allen-Benedict court. Members of the group were the following: M. A. Entzminger, chairman; J. E. Dickson, Richland County Agricultural Extension agent; E. A. Adams, president of the Victory Savings bank; C. A. Johnson, supervisor of the Columbia Negro schools; H. E. Lindsay, real estate operator; J. C. Artemus, business agent, Carpenters Local No. 2260; C. W. Madden, principal, Howard and Saxon schools; Dr. S. R. Higgins, president Allen university; Dr. J. J. Starks, president Benedict college; and W. H. Harvey, manager, North Carolina Mutual Insurance company.

Negroes Reach Goal

Before long a Liberator bomber will be christened here bearing the name of Julius Ellsberry, Birmingham Negro who was Jefferson County's first casualty of the war, at Pearl Harbor on that fateful December day in 1941. This christening was assured at a rally Sunday at the Municipal Auditorium attended by some 4,000 colored citizens and at which cash sales of $34,175 swelled the previous total of $278,000 well into the $300,000 bracket. This total was expected to be increased through later sales.

Thus Ellsberry was an inspiration to the members of his race whereby they not only honored his memory but reflected much credit upon themselves as patriotic Americans. Much praise is due to the local Negro leaders in the War Bond campaign for their untiring efforts to make the drive here a success and for individual responses to the appeal.

Colored Citizens Urged Buy Bonds

Fayetteville, Tenn., News
September 22, 1943

James Lemons Is County Chairman

To The Colored Citizens Of Lincoln County:

We have been asked to purchase $25,000.00 in War Bonds by October 1. Let us show to all that we are loyal to our Government and our country by purchasing this amount and more.

We have been in this war from the start, and since that December day at Pearl Harbor the blood of our beloved ones has been running down beside that of other races that are fighting for Freedom, and out of this disaster, heroes of our race have also been born.

This war is not only the soldier's war on the battlefield, but for every loyal citizen of these great United States. Surely that makes it yours and mine.

It is like three men putting roofing on a house — the man on the housetop is the soldier, the man on the scaffold is like the man in the munition plant who gives to the man on the top which is the soldier to utilize, and the one on the ground is you and I, who with our purchasing of War Bonds keeps the man on the scaffold with material to hand to the man on the top so when the rain comes it is not one but all's responsibility if the top is not completed and not one but all will get credit if it is completed.

Let us purchase a Bond today to overrun that quota of $25,000.00.—Your country chairman, James Lemons.

STATE WAR LOAN QUOTA IS PASSED

Birmingham, Ala., Age-Herald
October 6, 1943

Total Of $125,280,000 Raised; Bomber Is Named For Hero

Alabama's Third War Loan drive total continued to increase Tuesday, with a total of $125,280,000 being released Tuesday night by the U. S. Treasury Department, an Associated Press disptach from Washington said. With a quota of $108,000,000, the state had acquired 116 per cent of that figure, the dispatch added.

In Tuesday's tabulation, Alabama joined the seven previously announced states which had gone over their quota in individual sales. A total of $56,000,000 of the original quota was prescribed for purchase of War Bonds by individuals. The state had raised more than $57,000,000 through this source. In the state-by-state poll of those raising or surpassing their general quotas, Alabama was ranked 12th.

Announcing a final tabulation of War Bond sales in the Third War Loan drive amounting to $431,000, leaders of the Negro division in Jefferson County Tuesday made final preparations to honor Julius Ellsberry, one of their race who lost his life at Pearl Harbor, when a Liberator bomber is dedicated to his memory at ceremonies at Bechtel-McCone-Parsons Corporation modification plant Wednesday.

The launching ceremony will take place at 12:30 p.m., with the mother of the war hero, Florence Ellsberry, acting as christening official of the bomber.

A. G. Gaston, bomber committee chairman, pointed out in announcing the total figure that many War Bonds purchased through banks, postoffices and other issuing agencies were not included in the total of $431,000. Negro leaders, he said, estimate that actual purchases would reach more than $1,000,000.

36 States Pass Quota In War Loan Campaign

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5—(AP)—With 36 states over their Third War Loan goals, the national total went to $17,733,000,000 Tuesday night—a $349,000,000 one-day gain.

Seven new states—Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Washington and Wisconsin—moved up to the 100 per cent or better class, and four more states—Alabama, Arkansas, Montana and Oregon—joined the seven previously over their quotas for individual sales.

Only four states, part of a fifth and the possessions are short of their assignments for corporate investments. They are Arkansas at 82 per cent; Northern California, 87; Kansas, 97; Kentucky, 84; Vermont, 91, and the Possessions, 85. New Mexico led all states in that division. Its $2,000,000 quota was 330 per cent oversubscribed.

Negro Farmer With 11 Children Has $650 In War Bonds

Joe Young, a Negro FSA borrower from Clarender County—a man with a wife and eleven children—has definitely proven that the small farmer can be depended upon not only to buy his proportionate share of war bonds, but also to produce his full quota of livestock and foodstuffs vital to the war effort.

In the fall of 1942, Young invested $650 in war bonds, and this year he plans not only to pay his total debt and set aside his operating capital for 1944, but to invest $350 in war bonds during the Third War Loan drive.

"I want to bring that last year bond up to a thousand dollar one," the Negro farmer declared. "When I complete the sale of my crops and meet all of my other obligations, I am going to invest what is left in bonds." And he added, "I want to buy as many as I can so that we can invest in a farm of our own when this war is over."

Colored War Bond Workers Organize

Carthage, Miss. Carthaginian
September 16, 1943

There was a large meeting of colored War Bond workers and other leaders at the Courthouse Saturday afternoon, Sept. 11, at which time an organization was effected for the thorough canvassing of this group in Leake County for the purpose of selling war bonds.

The meeting was opened with prayer and impressive singing. Mrs. J. J. Paschal and Mrs. J. H. Sasser made talks after which there were questions from the audience about the work.

Ten of these leaders made three minute inspirational talks and pledged themselves and all their group to work to make this drive a success in Leake County.

Following is a list of those who have been appointed to work in their respective neighborhoods:

Chester Johnson, Johnson School; Maggie Sanders, Harmony; L. C. Gray, Mt. Bethel; Hazel Smith, Francis Dier, and F. M. Carson, Ofahoma; Magnolia Wilder, Dossville; A. V. Williams, W. C. Harrelson, Mattie Sanders and Oda Kirkland, Gallilee; May Hanna, Conway; Ethel May Fortune, Johnson; Elsie Smith, Ofahoma; V. H. Gee, Marydell; Laura Leflore, and Florence Whittington, Carthage; Oda Gates, M. L. Coleman, and Q. L. Jones, Walnut Grove; Henry Sharkey, Conway; E L. Barron, Lena; Emma Rushing, Carthage; Essix Myrick, Dossville; P. H. Whalen, Thomastown.

Aleda McGowan Jones, County-at-large.

Great things are expected of this patriotic group, and there is every evidence that they will live up to these high expectations.

WAITER URGES NEGRO HOUSE SERVANTS TO STICK TO JOBS

Bishopville, S. C., Messenger

August, Ga., Sept. 20.—W. Allen Murphy, Negro waiter and war bond salesman extraordinary, urges Negro servants to think of their post war future before throwing up their jobs for higher paying industrial positions. October 14, 1943

"In numerous white homes where the help of reliable colored servants is badly needed and would be appreciated, servants refuse to stay on the job even after higher salary demands are agreed upon," Murphy declared in an article written for the Augusta Chronicle.

This attitude, he said, may provide Negroes "a temporary feeling of relief today, but it is a hindrance to the war effort now, and if not corrected will be a hindrance to the peace."

Murphy, as chairman of the Atlanta service group war bond committee, was a leader in a July 5 war bond rally among Atlanta Negroes which sold $10,000 in bonds within a few hours. Murphy is a waiter at the Piedmont Driving Club in Atlanta.

Murphy wrote that it seemed to him "the domestic field offers a large area of fine opportunities where vast numbers of Negro people could serve well and profitably.

"The profits may not be all cash today, but tomorrow will come, with its peace. . . We shall need many friends after this war is over. Most of us have to depend upon our friends for all we need. Why can't we let them depend upon us now for what they need?"

NEGROES UNITE FOR WAR BOND CAMPAIGN HERE

Haynesville (La.) News
September 16, 1943

The colored people of Haynesville have united in an undivided effort to sell bonds for the third war loan, which opened last week. G. C. Jones was selected as chairman of this division at a meeting held Sunday afternoon at the colored school building, and reports that an all-out effort will be made to sell bonds to his race of people in this area.

Every citizen is being asked to buy bonds in the treasury's third war loan campaign which opened a few days ago. There are two fronts in this war, the battlefront and the home front. The battlefronts all over the world have gone the flower of America's youth to stem and throw back the tide of enemy aggression. For these youth there is no choice but to meet the challenge of sacrifice as it comes to them. Every Emerican soldier abroad must face the risk of death and privation for the sake of those who remain at home.

We all know that it takes money and still more money, to buy the rifles, ammunition and the thousands of other things needed to win a war. If our fighting men do not have these tools, their attack may fail, no matter how strong their hearts may be. They need the tools to win and to protect their own lives. Our government has devised the best method of raising that money any could want. They are not taking it away from you or forcing you to give it to them. They are simply asking you to lend it to them, to be repaid with interest. The little sum of money you put into War Bonds each month or each year will grow into large amounts that will provide a fine nest egg for you later on. Perhaps you have already bought a Bond, or even two. Fine. Buy some more. Buy all you can. If the Axis wins, your money won't be worth anything.

Someone once said: "If I should strike you with one finger, I would hardly get any results; if I should strike you with two fingers, I would get a bit more; if I should strike you with five fingers, I would get no more than a slap; but if I should organize those same five fingers into a fist I would get a blow that would be substantial." So let us buy all the Bonds we can to see how hard our blow will be against the enemy.

Buy all the extra War Bonds you can in this Third War Loan Campaign. Buy them to help your son, husband or brother. Buy them so that America may win and our boys may return to help build the greater America of the future.

COLORED CITIZENS SOLD $65,560 WAR BONDS AND STAMPS

Springfield

A great effort on the part of the War Bond Committee of the colored citizens, during the Third War Loan Drive, resulted in the sale of $65,100 in bonds and $460 in stamps. Serving on this committee with Sidney W. Harris, chairman, was Mrs. T. L. Smith, Mrs. Cornelia Thompson, L. J. Thompson, Dr. R. L. Suggs and Rev. H. E. Taylor, who have voiced their appreciation for the support of citizens in purchases made from them.

Realizing that possibly other drives may come in the future, this committee, if selected to serve as in the past, is asking the same cooperation.

Featuring the activities of the program held at St. Paul were two short motion pictures entitled, "Let My People Live" and "Farmer Henry Browne." This presentation was given free of charge by the Negro Division of the Alabama Extension Service under the direction of R. R. Bell, Movable School Agent of Tuskegee Institute.

The following officials also participated in the program on Thursday: Col. Jeff P. Beeland, County Chairman War Savings Staff; Rev. D. B. Bennett, Chairman Colored County Committee; James Herbert, Co-Chairman County Committee and Elliott Robbins, Director of the Drive.

Through the courtesy of the War Savings Staff, the following prizes were awarded to solicitors reporting the highest amount of War Bonds and Stamps sold during the drive: First prize, a $25.00 War Bond, awarded to A. B. Johnson and wife, Leviticus Johnson, of Greenville for having sold $5,025.00 worth of War Bonds and Stamps; second prize. $3.00 worth of Stamps awarded to Edward aldwell, of Greenville for having sold $514.50 worth of War Bonds and Stamps; third prize, $2.00 worth of Stamps, awarded to C. J. Newton, of Chapman, for having sold $337.50 worth of War Bonds and Stamps.

Runners-up in the contest also reported as follows: Rev. E. P. Pugh, of Georgiana, $303.25; Johnnie Womack, of Ridgeville, $275.00; and Edward Crittenden, of Greenville, $231.40. Rev. Bennett stated that his community, Mt. Zion, would not be eligible for a prize in view of the fact that he is serving as county chairman. However, he purchased more than $700.00 worth of War Bonds for his community. M. I. Brewer, Colored Jeanes Supervisor, and the following teachers of the county assisted in making the official tabulation: Ophelia Caldwell, Mary Faddis, Lillian Gregory, M. J. Dent, and Eddie B. Stanford.

The colored county committee is grateful to all county officials and agencies for such a fine spirit of cooperation and support during this drive. The committee also wishes to express thanks to the colored citizens of Butler county for having made such a creditable showing in this effort, says Elliott Robbins.

Negroes Given Two Weeks Extension Of Time in War Loan Drive

Livingston, Ala., Home

Despite the very low income bracket that most of the negroes of Sumter County live in, it is encouraging to note how they rallied to the call of Uncle Sam in the Third War Loan Drive. The interest seems to have been very low on their part at first, but after it was explained to them that it was not a gift that the government was asking for, but a loan that would be repaid with interest, and it was economically sound their attitude changed, and so much interest had been worked up among them at the closing date that George H. Paris, Chairman of the negro division, was given an extension of two weeks. It is felt that within the next two weeks we will be able to sell several more hundred dollars worth of war bonds. Special Rally Called For Negro Workers Promoting Bond Sales

Birmingham, Ala., News

Parade For Colored People Planned; Green To Address Participants

September 22, 1943

A special pep rally for Negro War Bond workers has been called for 7:30 p.m. Thursday at Smithfield Court when F. D. McArthur will be the speaker.

The two agencies at "Bomber Headquarters" already have tabulated $150,000 War Bond purchases by Negroes toward the $300,000 goal set for colored people, but the total will run considerably over the half-mark figure when tabulation difficulties are adjusted, it is pointed out.

All colored people who have purchased War Bonds or stamps through agencies other than the "Bomber Headquarters" agencies are urged to call 4-3581 and report the amount of their investments and the agencies through which they have made the purchases.

Following the Thursday night pep rally at Smithfield Court, Birmingham Negroes will hold their mammoth War Bond parade Sunday afternoon, climaxing the event with a War Bond rally at the Municipal Auditorium at 4 p.m. when Mayor Cooper Green will be the speaker.

All groups who will participate in the parade are requested to be at Ingram Park, corner Sixth Avenue and North 16th Street, promptly at 2:15 p.m. Sunday.

COLORED PEOPLE OVER THE TOP IN WAR FUND DRIVE

Our people of Telfair County will share my pleasure, I am sure, in knowing that our colored citizens have gone way over the top in the United War Fund drive.

Chairman A. L. Spaulding accepted for the colored people of the county a quota of $500.00. I at the time thought this was rather high, though he was optimistic. He immediately organized his people throughout the county, and he and his solicitors have reported to date contributions aggregating $696.04, and funds are still coming in.

I congratulate Chairman Spaulding and his committee of solicitors. His and their patriotism and cooperative spirit and the like patriotism, spirit and liberal contributions of all of our colored people is greatly appreciated and will be remembered with pride.

Negro Bond Rally Was Big Success

A large, enthusiastic crowd was in attendance at the bond rally held Saturday afternoon for the negroes on the lawn of the Lauderdale county courthouse under the auspices of the negro division of the county war finance committee, when a total of $66,044.50 worth of bonds was sold as a direct result of the rally.

Featuring the occasion was the inspiring music furnished by the band from the negro air field at Tuskegee; the beautiful rendition of "America" by the negro soprano, Mildred Meadows, demonstration agent for negroes for Lauderdale and Colbert counties, and the group singing of "Old Time Religion" effectively led by T. M. Campbell of Tuskegee, negro field extension agent for the U. S. department of agriculture.

The Lauderdale county negroes have made a fine response whenever a call has come for their help in the present emergency and the response is always a generous one that shows their patriotism and loyalty.

Negro Groups Will Sponsor Parade Floats

Negro groups will sponsor several floats and a number of other entries in the "Gasless Parade" which the Retailers for Victory Committee will stage Saturday afternoon in connection with their July War Bond and Stamp drive. Mrs. M. V. Binga is chairman of the parade entries for this group and has arranged an OCD canning float showing Richmonders how to preserve the fruits of their Victory Gardens. The Sabbath Glee Club, under the direction of Joseph Matthews, will ride on another float and sing the spirituals for which they are famed. Negro riders and a bicycle group also will be in this division.

The Negro band from Camp Pickett, one of the four military bands which will provide patriotic theme songs for the procession, will be entertained by the Negro committee on Saturday afternoon at the Monroe Center.

The first three days of the street booths, with only 10 of the 20 scheduled booths in operation, netted more than $1,800 in stamps, George C. Robinson, secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association, reported. The other 10 block-buster booths will be erected and staffed by members of the Volunteer Service Bureau by Saturday. Construction difficulties prevented the 20 booths being in readiness on the drive's opening days, Mr. Robinson said, praising the volunteers who, under the direction of Miss Claire McCarthy and Mrs. Irving Thomas, have sold the stamps and bonds.

Bicyclists who intend to ride in the parade have been asked to register at the block busters or with committee chairman or to fill in the coupon which appeared in Sunday's Times-Dispatch. This division, which will be the largest in the parade, is headed by Charles Pennell. Cyclists are wracking their brains and spending time and money decorating wheels in spectacular and elaborate ways for this group.

War Bond Rally Gets National Recognition

In keeping with our countywide War Bond Rally, which was held in Greenville during May. Mr. William Pickens, Chief of the Inter-racial Section, National Organizations Division, with the U. S. Treasury Department at Washington, has expressed thanks and appreciation to the War Savings Staff of Tuskegee and to the colored citizens of Butler county in making the War Bond Rally a success. His letter was addressed to Field Agent T. M. Campbell, of Tuskegee. Agent Campbell, who is also consultant for the War Savings Staff of the Treasury Department, sent copies of Mr. Pickens' letter to the Colored Committee the past week. The Colored Committee on behalf of the colored citizens of Butler county are grateful for the honor recently received from Washington.

Extension Service Review

In an effort to produce more food and feed for home consumption, and to support the war effort, a series of evening classes were started the past fall in cooperation with the Butler County Board of Education. In this effort, a story with full details of the work accomplished through the spring of this year came out in The Negro Farmer, our monthly publication for April.

A brief story also came out in the Extension Service Review, a monthly publication of the Extension Service, U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., entitled, "To Help Negroes Grow More Food." One paragraph which came out in June's issue follows: "At a class held at Pine Level under the direction of Dave Marlow, community leader of Simpson Chapel, a fire-heated hotbed was built and one bushel of sweet potatoes bedded.

At the request of the County Superintendent of Education, the names of 18 Negro community and neighborhood leaders have been approved to teach classes in foods, poultry, victory gardens, egg production, peanut production, and milk, swine and beef production in their respective communities. The first three schools started have increased from 37 to 120 men and women in attendance as given in April's report."

At present there are 29 evening classes in progress in 20 communities of the county in charge of trained leaders, with an enrollment of approximately 350 adults. Each leader is given a unit of instruction, together with demonstration material which is furnished by the Board of Education.

These classes have proved very helpful according to reports coming from leaders, and we feel that they will help every farmer to produce more food during 1943. These leaders are at present teaching classes in food preservation, peanut production, swine, poultry and milk production and Victory gardens.

BOND SALES AMONG NEGROES

Montgomery's Negro citizens are authority for the statement that their recent successful war bond selling rally proved a wonderful morale-builder. The war was brought home to them as never before and they were made to feel that they were part of it in a very impressive way.

The bond-selling campaign among colored citizens was sponsored by the Negro Civic and Improvement League, J. E. Pierce, chairman, and R. L. Battle secretary. It continued for one week and closed with a big parade, headed by the Tuskegee airport band, and a rally at the city auditorium, where Gov. Sparks made an inspirational address. At the end of the week it was announced that $47,850 worth of bonds and stamps had been sold, and this represented many hundreds of purchases by hundreds of people many of whom were making real and genuine sacrifice to do their part.

Attention is called to this campaign at this time to encourage the hope of the Negro leaders that the good work will be continued and that subscriptions and purchases will continue to be made because of the continuing need.

It would be gratifying to every citizen of Montgomery to know that the members of the Negro race in the community are showing such interest in this patriotic cause and are participating so heartily in the sacrifices that must be made by all to insure the great victory that is ahead.

WALTER MURPHY SELLS WAR AIMS TO 'PLAIN FOLKS'

By Associated Press

W. Allen Murphy is a 45-year-old Negro waiter at the Piedmont Driving Club. He's tall, spectacled, quietly dignified, earnest in thought and action.

You won't find his name on the list of people who have set records in sales of War Bonds. Most of the purchases he wins are in stamps—25 cents, 50 cents each. Amounts like that don't add up very fast. But Murphy works with people to whom a quarter or a half dollar is a sizeable slice of their income.

Murphy thinks and works constantly for the improvement of his race. His theory is that if "just plain folks" want to get ahead, they must do their own planning and acting.

He took his ideas to others of his profession, to members other service occupations, and so has emerged the Atlanta Service Group, an organization of 100 waiters, chauffeurs, cooks, Pullman porters and other public and private workers who make their living by service.

Aim of Group

The first aim of the service group is to get each of the 21,000 families of Negroes in Atlanta to put at least $1 a week into War Savings Stamps. That's a modest goal, but Murphy explains it:

Many of the families should be able to buy more than one dollar's worth of stamps a week, but "with the service people, an average of $1 a week for each family would be good with the income they have."

Back in March, the service group held a stamp selling rally, with entertainment by Negro musicians and signers from nearby Army posts. The sales were 2,200 families. It will be a proilies signed the $1-a-week pledge.

On Monday, July 5, a much larger rally will be held. It, too, will center around the Negro housing projects in which live 2,200 families. It will bea progressive rally, starting at one of the projects, and moving parade-fashion from there to the other five, with a half-hour stop at each.

For the first time, there will be an effort to sell bonds. There will be a "bond wagon" from which the bonds can be delivered immediately by authorized sellers. The Army is considering lending two bands and has been asked, also, to let bond buyers ride in jeeps during the parade.

Murphy says the stamp drive has a double-purpose—"to teach our people about government, and to make them save money."

As for saving money, he says only "after all this war is over, they're going to need it. They've got to save now."

As for teaching them about government, he holds "most of our people now consider that government is something that they have no connection with at all. They feel that they are not part of the government.

Teach Citizenship

"We've got to teach them that whatever citizenship rights they have now are just so much advanced beyond what they would have under any of the Axis powers. And we've got to teach them that rights of citizenship carry responsibilities."

Stamp sales through rallies are not the only means Murphy and his group will use. There's the large matter of Negro clubs. As Murphy says, "everybody who is anybody belongs to some kind of a club."

Already the social clubs of the six housing projects have been enlisted in the movement. The selling of stamps weekly will become something like paying dues to the club—a regular obligation to meet. And there are clubs throughout the city—"from high to low," Murphy says.

Churches, too, will be enlisted. Murphy himself is superintendent of a Sunday school and district superintendent for Atlanta in the colored Methodist Episcopal Church. Preachers, he says, can do a lot of good in telling their congregations why stamps and bonds should be bought.

Negroes Double Quota of Sales In Cruiser Fund

The Negroes of Norfolk have more than doubled their war bond quota for the Cruiser Norfolk fund, it was reported yesterday by F. E. Turin, general chairman. Having started out to raise $100,000, the Negro committee already has reported the sale of $202,973 worth of Government securities, and has pledged itself to continue working until enough bonds have been sold to have a new destroyer named in honor of a Portsmouth naval hero.

S. H. Bell is chairman of the Negro committee, with Horace G. Christopher, F. W. Merritt and H. C. Holman as co-chairman. Major Turin reported last Sunday that unofficial figures showed Norfolk had oversubscribed $37,500,000 to pay for a new cruiser to be christened the USS Norfolk. Official confirmation will have to come from the Secretary of the Navy after the Treasury Department reports have been canvassed.

In a recent letter to his mother he wrote: "I am saving my money so I will have something when I come home. I think I will buy $100.00 worth of War Bonds this pay day and send them to you to keep for me." He goes on to say: "So far the war is just about over here. There have been two small air raids in a place I just left, but no one was hurt. There are some fine cities over here and I live in one of the biggest ones. Negro Units Add Color To Parade

Atlanta, Georgia

APR 20 1943

The longest and most brilliant parade seen in Atlanta passed down Peachtree Street Monday night as the city and metropolitan area pushed forward the mammoth bond drive.

The Negro units won the acclaim of the thousands who lined the path of the parade which wound for an hour down the Gate City's most famous thoroughfare.

The Naval Air Base band was the first colored unit seen in the parade. Proudly it played and led the Naval unit from Georgia Tech and the local contingents of WAVES and SPARS, as well as other representatives from Naval divisions.

The crack 70-piece Booker T. Washington High School band brought cheers from the throng as it played and marched under direction of Prof. Earl A. Starling. Following it were the 500 soldiers from the Atlanta University Air Corps Administration School marching proudly and in perfect ranks, local Boy Scouts and representatives of the Colored Division of the Civilian Defense.

It was the first time colored units had participated in a parade marking a unified effort to stir up public interest in a local bond campaign. Atlantans have promised to meet their quota in the treasury bond sales effort.

Represented in the parade were numerous civic and private enterprises whose floats and banners bore the message from the Treasury Department, telling Americans to do their best in aiding the war effort and "They give their lives; you give your money."

WAR BOND SALES HERE TOP $9,000,000 MARK

Memphis, Tenn., Com'rcial Appeal

Total Represents More Than One-Fourth Of Goal

September 16, 1943.

'ROCHESTER' COMING HERE

War Bond sales in Memphis rolled along yesterday past the $9,000,000 mark—more than one-fourth of the goal—as volunteer salesmen canvassed the city like Government cansus takers.

Doddridge Nichols, general chairman of the drive, said workers from practically every industry and business in Memphis were working "overtime" to assure that Memphis would reach her goal of $33,023,500 in the Third War Loan Drive.

$147,194 In Week

Local liquor dealers glanced at their almost whisky-less shelves last week and entered the campaign as bond sellers. Their first week's results were tabulated at $477,194 last night by Charles Garibaldi and Charles Murphy, co-chairmen of the Memphis Liquor Industry Committee.

R. A. Trippeer, vice chairman of the committee, declared that the wholesale and retail liquor dealers were working during their spare time and offtime and not only were selling bonds across the counter, but were canvassing their home neighborhoods and friends as well.

Reports from other fronts revealed that both large and small sales were being made in increased amounts. W. T. Buckner, in charge of the Insurance Division, in charge of selling to buyers of small denominations, declared that more small sales are being made now than during the Second War Loan Drive.

Sells Himself Bond

Neely Bowen, in charge of the Real Estate Division, became so engrossed and convinced with his salesmanship yesterday that he purchased a $50,000 bond himself.

Meanwhile large purchasers were encouraged with news that American Airlines, Inc., had allotted $50,000 of its national bond purchasing fund for use in Memphis. The Standard Oil Co. of Louisiana has appropriated $150,000 to be used on the local bond market, C. L. Williams, executive assistant in charge of the local office, announced last night.

Another $50,000 sale will be made to the General Shoe Corp. of Nashville, it was learned last night. Anderson Spickard, assistant treasurer of the shoe firm, promised that that amount would be spent here out of the $1,000,000 total to be used for War Bonds.

Extra Bond Stressed

Officials of the drive here are stressing the importance of extra bond buying through the pay roll deduction plan, and each firm is being urged to have every employe increase his purchase this month by at least one extra bond.

Hugh Stanton, chairman of the Pay Roll Division, met with executives of Memphis firms last night at the Peabody and explained the need for the added buying of bonds by average Mr. and Mrs. Memphis.

That has been brought out by Mr. Nichols and national Treasury representatives as the one "must" to reach the national goal of $15,000,000,000.

Memphis' negro population is "backing the attack" with dimes and dollars and yesterday afternoon Mayor Chandler addressed 200 members of the Negro Division of the Shelby County War Finance Committee at the Beale Street Auditorium, lauding them for their response to the drive.

Matthew Thornton, Beale Street "mayor," reported another $5000 sale of bonds. Mayor Thornton said the bonds were bought by negro postal workers, who had pledged to purchase more before Sept. 30.

"Rochester" Coming

Lieut. G. W. Lee, chairman of the Negro Division, announced that Eddie Anderson, Jack Benny's "Rochester" and scene stealer, would appear next Monday night at Ellis Auditorium. An unannounced film player will be on the program with "Rochester."

Pupils of Manassas High School have bought $600 in bonds and $202 in War Savings Stamps, the Education Committee reported. Negro school principals and teachers unfolded plans for the 20,000 negro students to make a house to house canvass.

Special sermons on the bond drive will be preached in each negro church next Sunday, Rev. W. H. Brewster Sr. said.

The landing fleet scoreboard at the Victory House is rapidly being blacked out. As bonds are sold across the counter of the Victory House a black pencil is traced over the section of the scoreboard which represents the sale, and Mrs. W. B. Fowler, chairman of the house, hopes soon to cover the 10 landing craft on the board.

81 Names Added

Eighty-one new names, to be placed on the permanent honor roll of members of the armed forces, were added to the rapidly growing list yesterday, Mrs. Fowler said. The scroll of Memphis heroes will be displayed at the courthouse.

Names added yesterday were: Ben V. Rittelmeyer, Ebb Kitchens Jr., Lieut. C. H. Poland Jr., Herbert S. Ballentine Jr., Wilbert E. Remmers, Lieut. (j. g.) Granville Sherman Jr., Pfc. Harry E. Scroggins, Lieut. W. S. Craddock, Corp. Allen B. Scroggins, Lieut. Philip H. Sherman.

Negroes Reach $47,000 Mark In Bond Sale

Macon Negroes will have contributed more than $50,000 toward the Third War Loan Drive, Chairman Hutchings said yesterday, stating that the sales of War Bonds had already passed the $47,000 mark late yesterday afternoon.

Hutchings said that the drive "had meant a lot of hard work and a lot of time given by a lot of folks," but that the goal was reached and passed and almost reached again. Due to the last minute rush of bond buyers, it has been almost impossible to get the bonds as quickly as it was earlier in the drive, it was stated. Fifty-four applications were taken to one of the banks early Thursday morning, and the officials placed a special stenographer on the job, but all the bonds were not ready late in the afternoon.

Those who have bought bonds and have not received them were asked by the chairman to be patient for a day or so, as all bonds will be delivered by Monday.

"It was a case of everybody at home trying to do something to help win the war," the Negro bond chairman said. "This was proven by the fact that well over a hundred $25.00 bonds were bought. And it again proves that if the colored people are given a fair chance to do their part, they will do it and then do some more."

It is believed that when the schools make their reports the grand total will be more than $50,000, Hutching stated.

Beale Street Does Flip-Flop As Rochester Comes To Town

Memphis, Tenn., Com'rcial Appeal
September 21, 1943 By LILLARD M'GEE

Eddie Anderson, Rochester of the radio and motion pictures, came to Beale Street yesterday and in just no time at all, an eight-inch cigar cocked between his teeth, turned the old street over.

Here for the big negro War Savings Bond rally last night in Ellis Auditorium, Rochester stayed in character. He was the same witty character that wrestles with Carmichael, Jack Benny's bear; with Mr. Benny in regard to money, and with sin in his motion picture "Cabin in The Sky."

Beale Street, he said, is not altogether a strange place to him. "I was here last Spring on my way from a USO camp show at Camp Campbell, Ky., and saw the old street after dark. Also had some of those famous Beale Street ribs and took whole sides of them home to my wife."

Asked how many bonds he expected to sell at the rally last night, Rochester reckoned he could dispose of at least a "dollah and a half" worth of stamps.

"You know," he said suddenly, "I used to be a newspaper man myself."

Sold Papers On Coast

"Uh, Huh," the interviewer said without enthusiasm, thinking, "good gosh, Rochester too."

"Yes, suh," he went on, "I sold papers down by the Ferry Building in San Francisco. Before that I had a route for one day in Oakland. They give me that book with all the names and addresses. I went along lookin' at the book and throwin' papers. Then it started to get dark, so I began throwin' two papers at every house. Then it got darker, and I threw three, finally four. It got real dark and I began gettin' rid of them by armfuls. The next day they didn't seem to want me to carry papers."

It was by selling papers that Rochester got his start in the entertainment field, a field that both his father and mother had followed.

"Used to go out to the Presidio to sell papers to the soldiers. They kept wanting me to sing and dance for them, and for the sick men in the hospitals."

From this start, Rochester went on to the vaudeville circuits with two partners who called themselves "The Anderson Brothers, Dispensers of Syncopated Sunshine." "We wore big straw hats and coats with big stripes," Rochester grinned. "Co'n, just pure Co'n."

Will Start Seventh Season

From vaudeville he went to bit parts in pictures and then got on the program with Jack Benny as Benny's valet. He will be starting his seventh season on the air around Oct. 10. He's also just made a new picture, "Broadway Rhythm," which stars George Murphy, Ginny Simms, Charles Winninger and Thomas Dorsey's Orchestra.

At a special "Rochester" bond rally yesterday morning students of Manassas High School sold $2800 worth of bonds. The rally was staged by J. A. Hayes, principal of the school. Students of Carnes School accounted for $681.15 in sales, $400 of which was sold by Eighth Grade pupils.

Lieut. George Lee estimated that total sales yesterday by the negro division would amount to well over $200,000, including the Atlanta Life purchase. Largest individual salesman was Matthew Thornton, mayor of Beale Street, with $6000. Other large sales included the $10,000 by Dixie Homes and $9500 by T. H. Hayes.

3000 See Show

Official tabulations of sales yesterday by the negro group will be completed today. Lieutenant Lee said that over 3000 persons crowded the Auditorium to see Rochester.

In connection with the bond rally at the Auditorium last night, Lieut. Lee announced the firm he represents here, the Atlanta Life Insurance Co., had sent E. L. Simon of the home office here with a check for $100,000 to invest in bonds at the rally. The company is buying $600,000 worth of bonds in all.

"We want," Lieutenant Lee said, "to raise $2,000,000 on Beale Street to go toward the purchase of a Flying Fortress to replace the 'Memphis Blues' which was shot down over France. We'll need $2,500,000 to do this, but W. C. Handy is coming in Friday to remain a week and help us with the drive and we expect to borrow the other $500,000 from Mr. Handy's white friends."

Negroes To Take Big Role In Second War Loan Drive

Chicago, Ill. Defender

WASHINGTON. — With millions of dollars already invested in war bonds and stamps, Negro organizations and individuals are expected to play an important part in making the Second War Loan the greatest financial drive in the history of the United States, the Office of War Information announced this week.

Calling attention to substantial Negro contributions as the Second War Loan drive opened on April 12, the OWI pointed out that America's gigantic war machine can be kept in successful action only if sacrifices on the home front match those of American service men fighting all over the world.

Typical of Negro participation in previous campaigns the OWI pointed out, was the action of Negro insurance companies in purchasing and sponsoring the purchase of war bonds and stamps.

Reports to the Treasury department indicate that since May 1, 1941, 18 Negro insurance companies have invested more than $3,650,000 in war bonds alone, including more than $1,380,000 in F Series and $1,098,100 in G Series. Thirty-two similar companies have also made investments in war securities, although statistical reports had not been received by the treasury.

Purchases by individual Negro organizations before April 1, 1943 included $462,535 by the Supreme Camp, American Woodmen, Denver, Colo.; $337,500 by the North Carolina Mutual Insurance company, Durham, N. C.; $292,000 by the Southern Aid Society, Richmond, Va.; $250,000 by the Domestic Life and Accident company, Louisville, Ky., and $200,000 by the Universal Life Insurance company in Memphis.

Other companies purchasing more than $100,000 worth of bonds prior to the Second War Loan included the Mammouth Life of Louisville, Ky.; the Afro-American Life of Jacksonville, Fla., the Richmond Beneficial Life of Richmond, Va.; the Metropolitan Funeral System of Chicago, Ill.; the Southern Life of Baltimore, Md.; the Golden State Mutual of Los Angeles, Calif.; the Supreme Liberty of Chicago, and the Great Lakes Mutual of Detroit, Mich.

"This 50-thousand-watt voice for victory tonight salutes the International Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters. . .which has made a 25-thousand dollar war-bond investment through our mighty-club-to-beat-the-axis.

"That order was placed through the union's executive committee, meeting in Chicago. . . and raised to 55-thousand dollars the total amount of Canadian and United States war-bonds held by this brotherhood, which is the only international trade organization of Negroes affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

"Headed by A. Philip Randolph, an outstanding Negro citizen, the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters includes maids, attendants, pullman, chair and coach car porters operating throughout the United States Canada and Mexico. Organized in 1925, the union received its first bargaining contract in 1937.

"International secretary-treasurer. . .when making the bond purchase. . .declared: 'I am sure it will encourage other units, most especially Negroes, to do their bit toawrd the war effort.' We are proud that the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters chose W-H-O's bond-club as its medium for striking this 25-thousand dollar blow against the enemies of human freedom and self-respect."

NEW 'MEMPHIS BLUES' WILL BE AXIS DIRGE

W. C. Handy And City Negroes To Push Bond Sale

THEY'LL BUY A BOMBER

The first "Memphis Blues," shot down in a raid over Europe, has been lost but another "Memphis Blues"—even more deadly to the Nazis—is going to fly the same skies on its mission of liberty, Lieut. George W. Lee, chairman of the Negro Division of the Third War Loan Drive, promised yesterday.

Coming to aid the campaign for the bomber's purchase is Prof. W. C. Handy, composer of the famous tune that has rung around the world, who declared that he intends to purchase a $1000 bond for this purpose. Professor Handy so notified Lieutenant Lee in a telegram yesterday, stating he would arrive in Memphis from New York shortly after Sept. 19.

Will Provide Bomber

"The colored people of Memphis are glad of this opportunity to provide another bomber," Lieutenant Lee said yesterday. "The first ship which met such an unfortunate end was manned by a young Southern officer and a crew of Southern men. There will be another."

When Professor Handy comes there will be a big bond rally on Beale Street, where he first penciled, on a cigar counter, the lines of that sad, sweet song that came straight from the heart of the Southern black man. Also, said Lieutenant Lee, it is possible that Eddie Anderson, otherwise "Rochester," Jack Benny's radio and screen comedian, will be present.

Already the drive has started and the Colored Division of the War Finance Committee has raised $200,000 toward putting "The Memphis Blues" back in the air. The most unique sale came yesterday when Marie J. Nixon, of Hyde Park School, acting as administratrix for Ella Robinson, a negro woman who died recently, invested $11,000 of the estate in Government Bonds in accordance with her wishes. Autress Russell Post of the American Legion, named in honor of a negro hero of World War I, received credit for the sale.

A permanent scroll in honor of members of his race who purchase bonds will be erected in the Beale Street Auditorium, Lieutenant Lee said.

Largest purchase to date has been $100,000 by Dr. J. E. Walker, president of the Universal Life Insurance Co. Largest sale through the Fraternal Group was $2000, made by Morris Hulbert. Largest purchase through the Women's Division has been $1000, reported by J. E. Bell. Booker T. Washington

High School pupils purchased $500 in bonds and stamps on the first day of the drive, and Prof. Blair T. Hunt and Prof. J. A. Hayes, cochairmen of the Schools Division, report it has only begun.

Report Due Wednesday

Under the direction of D. H. Hancock, of the North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Co., and H. D. Whalum, of the Union Protective Assurance Co., cochairman of the Negro Underwriters Division, 125 agents have pledged sales of $500,000 in a door-to-door campaign. Vice chairmen are P. W. Thornton Jr., O. W. Westbrook, A. J. Lewis, John Bluford Jr., R. L. Johnson, S. L. Johnson, Robert Davidson, J. L. Redditte, L. F. Simpkins, C. W. Cox and E. M. Stevens.

First general report will be made Wednesday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock at Beale Street Auditorium, when the committee will be addressed by Mayor Chandler.

"The Third War Loan campaign," said Lieutenant Lee, himself a veteran of World War I, "not only gives to the colored people of Memphis the opportunity to perform a simple patriotic duty, but also offers them the chance to save money which can be used after the war for the purchase of homes and farms and business establishments. We are confident that the members of our race in Memphis will reach their goal by Sept. 30."

Negro Third War Loan In Sumter County

47c

The negro citizens of Sumter County have realized the importance of loaning Uncle Sam their extra dollars by buying war bonds and stamps to the limit of their ability.

A series of community and neighborhood group meetings have been held to organize committeemen in each town and each locality.

We are asking our white friends to please report to their nearest committee men or Geore Paris, Chairman negro Division War Finance Committee at Livingston, any bonds purchased by negroes that may or may not have been counted in the negro quota.

After all points have been reached and all negroes contacted, it is felt that we will more than reach our quota of $25,000 in purchases of bonds and stamps by October 1.

The Coal Bin

BY HENRY VANCE

SOMETHING FROM THE BRIEFCASE

Did any of you readers (even one out of the six) know that there is a "Swap Day" observed weekly in a certain Alabama town, with one day in the year the biggest swap day of all? Didn't think you did. The fellow that told me about it allowed that he figured it had been going on one day a week almost back to the days of the Civil War, and that interest had never lagged, and swappings had never failed to take place. It's nothing at all like Hitler's barter system, you can bet on that. The little city of Scottsboro is the municipality that inaugurated the innovation and every Monday even during wartimes, "Swap Day" is on the boards in Scottsboro. Everything from giant bulldozers to puddle-jumpers, acreage to a 50-foot city lot, a sawmill to a paper of pins, all these may change hands during "Swap Day" in Scottsboro. The fellow on the little end of the show must give certain boot, of course. My informant ventured the guess that Scottsboro's "Swap Day" was originated way back yonder when folks came into town by horse-drawn wagon or by saddle horse. They got the habit 'way back then, and they've never given it up. And you can't blame 'em, because "Swap Day" produces a certain trade stimulus that would otherwise be missing. The chief shoveler is glad for the tipoff, because before next Summer arrives he's going up, sit in on the party, and see if he can't trade a typewriter for a lawnmower in working condition, and a year's subscription to a certain magazine that he owns in fee simple for about 50 feet of garden hose that won't spout like Old Faithful somewhere between the hydrant and the nozzle.

* * *

The chief shoveler helped out on the bond campaign during the Third War Loan Drive from what he laughingly called an oratoracle standpoint. His assignment was to face the microphone each day and tell the people on a state hookup the figures reached to that moment by Jefferson and the other counties, and to narrate certain interesting features that the campaign brought out. I believe the most interesting story I had to tell throughout the campaign was about the old Negro who marched up to the stage of the auditorium and poured out $500 in nickels and dimes. To this small change he added a couple of hundred dollar bills and walked away from the auditorium with $700 in War Bonds in his valise. A testimonial to one's faith in Uncle Sam like that would and probably did more to accelerate War Bond sales than anything that could have happened during the campaign.

Small Bond Buyers

It is upon the common people that there now rests the major burden of carrying the Third War Loan drive to success.

Individual bond buyers had reached only 56 per cent of the goal set for them, it was declared Sunday night. If they reach their goal, the drive, the largest ever made by any nation, will be a success.

The person particularly called upon to buy a bond in the remaining days of the drive is the man with a swollen war pay envelope. He is the man who thronged the nation's football games last Saturday. He is the man who is helping to set new attendance records at picture shows. He is the man who has more money for luxuries than ever before. She is the woman who buys unneeded things for the home.

Birmingham's Negroes have shown how it can be done. They have surpassed the quota set for them.

If all the white people of Jefferson County with small means do their full duty, the remaining portion of this county's quota will be subscribed before the deadline at the end of this week.

It can be done. But it can be done only by everybody doing his share.

NO TIME TO HOARD MONEY, SAYS SPAULDING

Washington, D. C.—"This is no time for hoarding money" C. C. Spaulding, president of the big Negro-o[illegible] and operated North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Company, Durham, N. C., this week advised Americans engaged in the Third War Loan.

Mr. Spaulding listed "Five Golden Rules for Winning the War": 1. Loyalty on the part of everybody. 2. Sacrifice to the limit. 3. Put all of your surplus earnings in war bonds and stamps. 4. Hold bonds to maturity. 5. Be generous in the support of all war efforts.

The business leader amplified these rules with the declarations that "It is better to be taxed to the bone by our government than to submit to Hitlerism. After all, it isn't a matter of what we can afford to do but rather of what we cannot afford not to do."

"Inferior Status" Idea, Humiliation, Violences Called Out-Out Shame!

WASHINGTON, (ANP) — In a fortright editorial statement, the Washington Post, leading capital daily, last week charged that the "humiliation" and "violence" visited against Negro soldiers by both white soldiers and civilians, and the consigning of colored troopers to an "inferior status" is "one more manifestation of a dangerous disregard for dem[illegible] values which has [illegible] carried over from civilian life [illegible] the armed services."

AUG 28 1943

Inescapable Duty

Declaring it the inescapable duty of the army to "promote among its enlisted personnel a decent regard for the rights and feelings" of Negroes in the service, the Post suggested launching of an educational program among whites to afford a "greater knowledge of the Negro's contribution to the war effort of his legitimate aspirations. They simply cannot effectively wage a united nations war with color prejudices in their minds."

Continuing the widely read daily stated:

"Efforts must be made at the same time to make Negroes feel that their contribution is appreciated. They have shared in some of the toughest fighting in this war. They are entitled to hope that this world struggle for human liberation will open up to them richer opportunities for advancement and education than they [illegible] hitherto enjoyed. Th[illegible] scarcely be expected to give full devotion to the democratic cause unless it affords some recognition to their legitimate aspirations.

"Any such program of education obviously must be accompanied by a firm insistence on the part of the army that Negro rights be respected by men in uniform and civilian alike. There are many ways in which any intelligent camp commander can act to erase the causes of friction between white and colored troops.

Glorifies Jim Crow

"He can see to it, if Negroes are segregated, that adequate recreational facilities are available to them, not only inside the camp but also in the community near which the camp is located. He can act to secure reasonable transportation service for his colored soldiers in places where jim crow traditions prevail. And, above all, he can insist that civilians show respect to the uniform his men we[illegible]ever the color of [illegible]kins. Officers should not be placed in command of Negro troops unless they have a sympathy for them and a willingness to safeguard their rgihts.

AUG 28 1943

"It is no part of the army's business, to be sure, to remedy all the defects of American life. But it is a part of the army's business to set an example of devotion to democratic principles. And it is high time now for the army to do this in regard to its Negro soldiers."

Cites New Prejudice In Air Corps

Defender
Chicago, Ill.

JUL 31 1943

NEW YORK. — Specific cases in which skilled Negroes are being denied opportunity for training and technical service in the Army Air Forces are cited by Roy Wilkins, assistant NAACP secretary, in the most recent protest against racial discrimination in the armed services.

JUL 31 1943

In one cas[illegible] pointed out that four Negro enlisted men of the air corps, one the top man and all ranking students in their class in photography, were rejected for advanced training leading to higher ratings and commissions in this field, while white classmates whom they had out-ranked were selected.

The pretext for this discrimination was the charge by one of their officers that Yale university, where the advanced training is offered, "is not ready to accept Negroes."

Wilkins also cited the case of a Negro soldier, a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of a leading university, with advanced study in biology and bio-chemistry, who was first denied assignment to laboratory work in an army hospital, then especially trained as an air corps armourer and finally sent to an air field to work as a laborer.

JUL 31 1943

In presenting the matter to Assistant Secretary of War John J. McCloy, Mr. Wilkins thus summarized the position of the NAACP by stating: "While the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People asks for remedial action in the cases above cited, we are even more concerned that by more careful and frequent checks and inspections, and by disciplinary action against particular commanders as may be merited, the War Department actually enforce [illegible] of assigning, training and advancing the skilled Negro soldier on the basis of his merit and potential usefulness, rather than wasting and demoralizing him, as is all too often the case at present."

Nowhere to Go as Living Quarters at Fairfield Condemned

UNSANITARY, SAYS CITY HEALTH DEPT.

Blamed for Death of Grandchild; 2 Boys in the Armed Forces

BALTIMORE

The eleven members of the family of Martin Molock, sheet metal worker at the Maryland Dry Dock Company, facing eviction from their condemned four-room "home" this afternoon (Friday) at 4 p.m., have no place to go.

Mr. Molock, who lives at 3310 Fairfield Road, said Thursday he has sought the help of the welfare and health departments and War Housing Center, but to no avail. He knows of no other agencies that can help him and has no idea under whose roof his family will sleep tonight.

The removal order was issued Wednesday by Magistrate Sol Liss, in Southern District police court, who admitted it was a cruel edict, but indicated that he felt it was the responsibility of Mayor McKeldin and [illegible] city to house war workers.

AUG 28 1943

[EDITOR'S NOTE: The mayor has refused to approve a site near Herring Run Park for a housing development for colored war workers like Mr. Molock.]

Another Family Ordered Out

At the same time, Magistrate Liss ordered the eviction of the family of Mrs. Nettie Graham from their 3-room one story house at 3304 Fairfield Road.

Mr. Graham is employed at Bethlehem Fairfield Shipyard. They have three children.

Mr. Molock said that his application for tenacy in the Somerset Homes, Central Avenue and Orleans Street, has been approved and that he will be able to move there in October. He asked that the eviction be stayed until that time.

The house in which Mr. Molock lives is a 2-story frame building and was condemned by the health department two years ago after a fire in an adjoining structure caused damage to the place.

Has No Running Water

The house has no running water and a faucet in the rear for the house has been cut off for two weeks. The house has open air sanitary facilities, and Mr. Molock says he had made repeated requests to his landlady for improvements, all of which have been ignored.

AUG 28 1943

Only Three Bedrooms

The house's four rooms include a kitchen with a stove and tables, and a 12 by 16 bedroom, both on the first floor. In the first floor bedroom, Mr. and Mrs. Molock and their one-year-old daughter sleep.

On the second floor are two bedrooms. In the smaller of the two, which is about 11 by 12, three daughters, ranging in age from 4 to 16 sleep on two delapidated beds.

In the other room, the 5 sons, ranging in age from 8 to 18, share two beds and a cot. This room is about 12 by 16.

Residents of the Molock House showed an AFRO reporter leaks in the roof, broken windows where rain pours in and holes where rats and mice have ample opportunity to invade their home.

Last week a granddaughter of Mr. Molock died, her death being attributed to the unsanitary conditions under which she lived, according to testimony before Magistrate Liss.

AUG 28 1943

Forced to Leave Work

Three weeks ago, he said, the health department ordered him to vacate and since that time he has been futilely scouring the city in search of a new home. During the past six days he did not work and devoted all his time to this task, he added.

Mr. Molock has one son already serving in the army and another who was recently inducted will report for duty next week. The family has resided in Baltimore for the past twenty years—the last four at the Fairfield Road address.

Dear Editor:

I disagree with Morris Milgrim that the release of Alton Levy is a victory for democratic principles. Alton Levy was released for "good behavior" without restoration of his rank of sergeant.

There would be victory for democracy if not only Levy were restored to [illegible] and compensated for his sentence, but [illegible] those who are directly or indirectly responsible for his conviction were punished and all the records of Levy's trial made public.

Dubinsky Asks Inquiry Of Levy Court-Martial

PM
New York, N. Y.

OCT 8 1943

By JAMES A. WECHSLER
PM's National Editor

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8.—David Dubinsky, president of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, today urged Sen. Robert F. Wagner and James M. Mead (D., N. Y.) to intervene in behalf of Alton Levy, former ILGWU organizer who was court-martialed, convicted and sentenced to four months at hard labor at the Lincoln Airbase.

In a telegram to the two senators Dubinsky declared that "a grievous error of justice" was indicated in the treatment accorded Levy. Describing Levy as a competent and responsible person, the ILGWU president asked Wagner and Mead to throw their weight behind demands for a full-fledged investigation of the case.

"Wide accounts of case accentuate angle of prejudice toward Levy because of his trade union connections and strong sentiments against Negro discrimination," Dubinsky wired.

Text of Message

The telegram was sent from the American Federation of Labor Convention in Boston which Dubinsky is attending. The full page of his message follows:

"Grievous failure of justice, complicated by reported reversal of judgment, is indicated in the court-martialing and conviction of Sgt. Alton Levy at Lincoln Airbase, Neb., to four months of hard labor and demotion to a private on alleged charges of making false statements about mistreatment of Negro soldiers.

"Sgt. Levy formerly was organizer of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union and is known to us as a competent and responsible person. Wide accounts of case accentuate angle of prejudice toward Levy because of his trade union connections and strong sentiments against Negro discrimination.

"I urgently request you to lend your influence to the end that the Alton Levy case be given thorough investigation by the War Dept. or other proper agencies of Government whereby a full opportunity be given the convicted Levy to be heard in defense of his status as a soldier and rights as a citizen.

Others Appeal

Levy was found guilty of circulating slanderous remarks about the commanding officer and of making "false statements" about treatment of Negroes at Lincoln Base.

Appeals for airing of the facts in Levy's court-martial have been made by a number of organizations, including the American Civil Liberties Union, the Workers Defense League, Freedom House, the American Labor Party, and by prominent individuals connected with these gorups.

CIO Demands Levy Vindication

NOV 5 1943

Staff Correspondence

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 5.—The CIO voted last night to demand vindication for Alton Levy, onetime AFL organizer who was court-martialed after expressing concern for democratic treatment of Negroes in the Army.

The CIO convention, citing the Levy case as a specific example of racial discrimination in the U. S. A., called on all Americans to reject the "'Master Race theory" for this Nation as well as for Nazi Europe.

The CIO's anti-discrimination resolution set up a specific program:

¶ Supporting the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee.

NOV 5 1943

¶ Calling upon FDR to end the Army policy of segregation of Negro troops. The resolution said that discriminatory practices against any group aid the enemy "by creating division, dissension and confusion."

Soldiers In Alaska Refused Passes; Seek Investigation

Philadelphia Tribune
Philadelphia, Pa.

OCT 23 1943

NEW YORK, N. Y.—An investigation by the War Department of the treatment of colored troops stationed in Alaska was sought last week by the NAACP.

In a letter to Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, the NAACP stated that it had received from a number of sources reports alleging that colored troops in Alaska are victim of widespread discriminatory treatment.

One allegation has it that the troops are confined to camp and have been denied passes to visit some Alaskan cities. It is asserted that this condition has extended far beyond any quarantine period and is an established practice.

It is also reported that the men are discriminated against within Army camps in that they are segregated [illegible] a theatre "for, colored" and refused service at post exchanges except one designated "for colored."

OCT 23 1943

One unidentified soldier returning to the States from Alaska is alleged to have told his relatives, "So far as treatment is concerned, I would [illegible] be in Georgia than Alaska."

The NAACP urged an immediate investigation and asked that if these allegations are found to be true corrective measures be taken without delay.

Complaints From Two Cities State That Negro and White CPO's Wear Different Badges

A protest against an order forbidding Negro Chief Stewards and Chief Cooks, with the rating of Chief Petty Officers, from wearing the regular insignia for Chief Petty Oficers in the Navy, has been lodged with Secretary Frank Knox.

Complaints from San Francisco and Norfolk assert that the Negro CPOs had been ordered to wear a crescent with four straight bars underneath, whereas all other CPOs in the Navy wear three red chevrons surmounted by an eagle.

The NAACP has come into possession of a [illegible] signed by Commander C. Adams, executive officer at the Naval Air Station at Norfolk, one paragraph of which reads:

NOV 27 1943

"It is noted that Chief Cooks and Chief Stewards on this station are wearing the wrong rating badge on their uniforms. The proper rating badge for these ratings is the crescent with four horizontal bars underneath, similar to first class ratings with an additional horizontal bar. Non-regulation rating badges will be removed immediately."

Cites Other Complaints

In its letters to Secretary Knox the NAACP mentioned other complaints:

"We are informed that the colored Chief Petty Officers were told that they must remove the regular insignia from their white caps and substitute the letters USN. They were also told not to wear brass buttons and to wear bow ties instead of four-in-hand ties.

"All these orders seem designed but for one reason and that is to prevent the colored Chief Petty Officers from resembling in any degree the white Chief Petty Officers.

NOV 27 1943

"We are also informed that within the limits of the Norfolk Naval Air Station, Negro Navy men are segregated into the rear seats of buses operated to carry personnel from one part of the station to another.

"We urge the speedy abolition of these discriminatory rules and regulations."

Pamphleteering– Good And Bad.

AUG 29 1943

THE British Government Office of War Information has circulated widely a pamphlet—"Meet The United States Army." Restaurants, stores, transport workers, specifically—and all classes of British citizens generally have been given these pamphlets with a view of improving relations between particularly the Negro element in the U. S. Army.

The British felt prompted to do this because many Negrophobes in our army had attempted to have the British treat the Negro soldiers inferiorly just as they had been treated as civilians and soldiers in the states.

The pamphlet among other things, suggests the use of words which are inoffensive to Negroes and sounds a note of equality of treatment for Negro soldiers wherever they happen to be in the British Isles. Mention was also made of the pleasant manners exhibited by our boys. Whatever may be the shortcomings of this effort it does represent a civilized approach to a vexing problem, made largely so by American Negrophobes.

In contrast to this approach of creating a genuinely finer structure of interrace relations, Brig. General E. A. Stockton, commanding the Anti-aircraft Training Center at Camp Stewart, Ga., has drawn up a training report captioned: "Educational Program for Colored Troops".

This "educational" program might better be described as a conditioning program to harden further the crystallized pattern of southern segregation. Witness these gems: Negroes are reminded not to expect "to go everywhere the white folks go in Georgia. . . It is your duty to do exactly as the law says and accept the customs of the people while you are in Georgia. . . . Be polite and respectful in any talk you may have with white people. . . . . Don't try to start conversations with white strangers."

Or in other words, the general is simply trying to say, "stay in your place for custom has crystallized segregation into law in Georgia and the fact that you are preparing to fight to preserve the nation will not alter your treatment or your status."

War Department Adamant Against Mixed Units

Boston, Mass.

Guardian

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Reaffirming its stubbornly maintained position that it will not retreat from a policy of segregation in the armed forces, the War Department in a letter to Walter White, NAACP secretary, declared that "the suggestion contained in your recent letter for the formation of mixed units has been considered at various times by the War Department and the decision reached that such action would be inadvisable". The letter was signed by John J McCloy, Acting Secretary of War.

Mr. White, in releasing the above information, revealed also that recently he had visited McCloy and thanked him for the establishment of non-segregated training for colored bombardiers, pilots and navigators, and had at that time expressed the hope that after they had received this training in mixed units, colored aviators would be permitted to fight in mixed units. The negative answer recorded above is Mr McCloy's reply.

Jim Crow In Houston

PM

New York, N. Y.

Special Correspondence

PM Exclusive

HOUSTON, Tex., Dec. 21.—Some members of this city's Port Area Committee—setup in several localities by the United Seamen's Service to manage entertainment and housing for U. S. merchant seamen—are attempting to establish Jim Crow in the treatment of seamen here.

This attempt is in direct violation of the national policy of non-discrimination established by the United Seamen's Service, which the Government has formed through the co-operation of the U. S. Maritime Commission, ship owners and the National Maritime Union, CIO.

When the local branch of the United Seamen's Service acquired the Brazos Hotel here to house and entertain seamen without regard to race, some members of Houston's Port Area Committee, despite the fact that their only job was to carry out this program for the seamen, issued a bulletin to the entire Committee to determine whether discrimination should be practiced.

The notice, sent out by Chairman Robert E. Smith, admitted that the national policy of the United Seamen's Service was to offer its services to all seamen, regardless of race, creed or union affiliation, but said some Committee members felt "this policy must be amended to cover our local situation."

Members were asked to indicate whether they preferred to adhere to the national policy, or set up the program on the basis of racial segregation, or permit Negro seamen to use rooms in the Brazos Hotel but deny them the right to participate "in social activities involving both sexes."

Arthur J. Mandell, one of the Committee members and a Houston attorney, promptly wrote Smith that he felt no discrimination should be allowed, and said that if the second alternative outlined in the bulletin were passed, he would resign.

"Millions of colored people throughout the world," Mandell declared, "are involved in the outcome of this war. They look to our actions for the true meaning of our proclaimed Four Freedoms. We must not let actions such as these undermine the test of our sincerity in the cause for which we are fighting."

At the same time, Mandell wrote Malcolm Ross, chairman of the FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee), hailing the non-discriminatory policy of the NMU in regard to its own members and asking the FEPC to call on Adm. Emory S. Land, head of the Maritime Commission, "and other persons who may be of aid in stopping this shameful procedure."

Expensive Training Wasted: Men Bitter

By ALBERT ANDERSON

CHICAGO, Oct. (ANP)—Is it [illegible] the United States army [illegible] deliberately breaking up well trained Negro combat units and distributing them among service outfits rather than sending them across to do battle? The statistics would seem to bear out an affirmative answer to this question. The sometimes plaintive, frequently disgusted and bitter complaints of them who have been part of these fighting outfits likewise point to such a conclusion.

Trained up to the minute, proud of their organizations, ready for the big [illegible] soldiers report [illegible] their regiments, battalions or brigades, just as they feel they are ready to be sent across, broken up except for small leaders or units, which are then used as a basis for traini[illegible] groups.

In opinions expre[illegible] often not to have considerable veracity, these tactics seem to disclose a ruthless determination to prohibit Negroes, trained in actual fighting, from reaching any of the front lines where they might gain glory and prestige for themselves or their race, or where they might engage in killing white men even if they be Nazis.

Pra[illegible] every combat unit in the [illegible] exception of the two all-Negro divisions, the 93rd and 92d and the veteran 24th Infantry, reputedly in the Southwest Pacific, has been broken up in this fashion. There are said to be a few airbases protective units whose business is to protect airbases but the real fighting units of which the army is proud are conspicuous by their absence on the fronts.

The almost total lack of Negro casualties, while not to be prayed for, bears out the truth of these statements. Just where the 9th and 10th cavalry regiments are, few seem to know. Reports are that part of them are in a camp at Texas training newer recruits with some at Fort Riley where they engage in more common tasks.

Cites Negro Units Broken Up

To recite the names of a few units which have been "busted" in the fashion described:

The 78th Field artillery regiment at Fort Bragg; four zattalions, white officers, well trained. Disbanded all but a small group. Highly efficient men sent to quartermaster and engineer groups.

350th and 351st Artillery regiments, both of Camp Livingston, La. A few men were taken from these two outfits and made the basis for the new 350th Artillery group composed for the most part of new recruits. The men [illegible] regiments who had been [illegible] a year and a half had that training thrown to the winds. They went to engineering and quartermaster corps. Those outfits had white officers with a few colored second lieutenants. Some of these latter remain with the raw troops just starting training. Others went to the 92d and 93d divisions.

The 846 Tank Destroyer battalion, the oldest of the tank groups in point of service, broken with all new men to train over. The 828th Tank Destroyer battalion also at Camp Hood, Texas, broke up after it had gotten as far as California and had desert-training. Sent to Vancouver barracks wore more than 400 men as quartermasters. The balance went in the same category to Camp Swift, Texas. Those boys were crack soldiers. Even their wwhite officers hated to see the change and privately expressed themselves as disgusted, according to some of the men.

The 759th Tank Destroyer battalion, Camp Hood, Col. Thee Mann, a tough officer whom every white fellow officers respected, commanded this outfit, which was activated at Fort Custer, Mich. The 759th was busted. Col Mann is out in the woods in Texas with a small group of men, marking time according to reports. His men, who had been trained, went to quartermaster and engineer corps

The 184th, crack national guard regiment from Illinois. This group trained at Fort Custer also and was broken up there into two battalions. New training methods in the army call for smaller units, the explanation said. The regiment became two units, the 931st Field Artillery battalion, led by Lt. Col. Marcus Ray of Chicago, an officer idolized by his men, and the 930th Field Artillery battalion, Commanded by Lt. Col. Wendell T. Derrick. All three of these commanders were Negroes as, of course were the officers under them. A time honored ritual of the army prevents placing white officers under Negro commanders if it can ever be avoided.

Expensive Training For Naught

The training of those artillery groups proceeded apace. Days upon days they learned to manipulate their batteries of 155's, firing shells which cost $27 every time a gun spoke. As soon as they were hard as nails and really fit, their range records being outstanding, the order came stripping the majority of the men from the regiments.

The 930th F. A. batta[illegible] now at Camp But[illegible] Durham, N. C., with just a handful of its original men and a lot of new recruits whom it will take a year to whip into any sort of shape. The same is true of the 931st. It is now at Camp Forrest, Tennessee, the camp named so proudly for the famed rebel general of the Civil war. It too had an handful of its old personnel, the balance shanghaied to service units.

The army breaks these groups up but never abolishes them. They leave small segments, cadres. These, rumors says, serve the purpose of p[illegible]mitting the army to still boast that it has Negroes in every branch of the service. The army knows these boys are crack shots, that they have mastered the function, nomenclature and handling of numerous firearms, that they are potentially superior soldiers. It knows they have stamina because down in Texas, it is said that while Red Cross ambulances trail white troops to pick up soldiers unable to stand the heat and the grind, such is rarely true of Negro soldiers.

Put Negro Troops on Guard

The two national guard outfits are presumably combat troops. Actually, they are guard units according to reliable information. The 366th up at Camp Devens, Mass., under Col. McQueen is reported not to have been trained in any true sense for combat duty. It guards points on the New England coast. One battalion goes out on guard for two or three weeks. It returns and the other battalion goes out on guard for two or three weeks. It returns and the other battalio[illegible] its place. Observers expect it to [illegible] in this [illegible]y for the duration.

The 372d in New York City. It, too, a proud national guard outfit, is doing guard duty in New York City. Its role is important but no one ever pretends it has been put into any shape for arduous front line battle ordeal. It's a guard regiment but is expected to remain in New York until the war is over.

The 369th Anti-aircraft regiment at Hawaii is outside the country and in an important spot. It, with 24th and the gallant Tuskegee flyers now on convoy duty somewhere off North Africa, presumably are the only Negro troops which can really lay claim to being combat and the 369th in one sense is doing guard duty also. Guarding a key defense area but still guarding.

Quartermasters and Engineers

....The 93rd is ready. It has been so for many weeks according to information trickling back from the men who are part of it. The division has had desert training, specialized training, is as hard as nails and would like nothing [illegible] to get a few [illegible] of Nordic supremacy out in front of it, but it still languishes "somewhere in California." Why, no statement has so far indicated.

The 92d is preceding to get into shape. Under the rigorous hand of Maj. Gen. Almond it is expected to either of the divisions into the quar-glory, have every bit as much danger tion of the use of Negro troops in

Comment on General Stockton's Order

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.

AUG 14 1943

Camp Stewart Commander's Directive Called Stupid and Un-American

Leaders of Baltimore civic organizations, the Urban League and NAACP, not only disagreed with General Stockton's views, but described the directive and method of presentation as "revolting," "stupid," and "un-American."

Urban League Head Speaks

J. Harvey Kerns, executive secretary of the Urban League said this about the directive:

"In my opinion, it is one of the most revolting orders conceivable. The order itself breaks down the very thing the General proposes to do — build "the best damned outfit."

"The General evidently knows very little about the ability of colored people to assimilate knowledge, for he opens an old argument long ago exploded by reputable authorities as a myth—regarding the superior ability of one group to assimilate in contrast to another.

"The suggestion of developing 'stooges' in his company will do more to produce disunity than all the propaganda of Axis agents. Any colored soldier who could hear such an order and maintain his morale as a real American fighting man, is worthy of a Congressional medal.

"The General by such an order, is not building soldiers, but cringing submissive subjects. Every red-blooded American should protest any such order being read to colored soldiers.

Join the NAACP

The opinion of Randall Tyus, NAACP executive secretary was this:

"General Stockton's directive is stupid and un-American. It's stupid because he makes some very inaccurate and elementary statements about the colored man being less intelligent than the white.

"Then he ventures to give out material for a talk to officers of colored organizations, which is entirely out of his field and in a field where he's got no business as a military officer.

"The directive is un-American in that while colored soldiers are contributing as much as anyone, white or otherwise to this all out fight for victory—he is discrediting them, trying to subdue them, cow them down, and lower their morale.

"In a democracy we have no room for segregation and discrimination. It is practiced, I know, but at a time like this he is preaching it and enforcing it and glorifying it, when the people to whom he is talking, colored soldiers, are doing everything they can to help preserve the so-called democracy.

"He is actually practicing Hitlerism — probably knows more about it than Adolph does himself. The General's directive is the rankest piece of work I have heard of lately."

Air Base Clears Up Mystery of Surprise Release

NOV 15 1943

Alton Levy served only 88 days of his 120-day sentence in the stockade at the Lincoln (Neb.) Air Base, simply because he had earned time off for good behavior.

The Public Relations Office at the Air Base cleared up the mystery of the "surprise" release of the former labor organizer in a telephone conversation with PM.

In the first mouth in the stockade, under conviction by a military tribunal on charges of making "false statements" about the treatment of Negro soldiers at the base and "circulating rumors" about Brig. Gen. Early Duncan, commanding officer at the base, and his wife, Levy committed some minor breach of the prison rules and lost his automatic "good behavior" time for that month, the Public Relations Office said. But subsequently, it reported, he was a model prisoner and earned his full complement of days off.

Infraction

(Leon Despres of Chicago, Levy's attorney, told PM on the telephone that on a recent visit to the Air Base at Lincoln he had learned that the infraction of the prison rules which cost Levy several days of his "good behavior" time consisted in passing to a soldier who had visited him a slip containing the name and address of his father, to whom he asked the soldier to write.)

He thus has served out his sentence and has been restored to active service "with the same standing as any soldier." He has, however, been transferred to another base, where, in the words of the Public Relations Office, he "probably already has started on a new job."

Since Levy served his full term (less time off for good behavior) it may be adduced that efforts by the Workers Defense League and other liberal agencies to obtain his release played no part in the curtailment of his sentence.

Seeks Vindication

Attorney Despres said he would continue his efforts to obtain vindication for Levy. Through Sen. Wagner of New York he is attempting to intercede with President Roosevelt.

"We should like to obtain for Levy not only vindication, but restoration of his rank as sergeant and reimbursement of lost pay," he said.

First word of Levy's release came late Friday when he telegraphed his father, Morris Levy, of The Bronx, from Kansas City, Mo., that he was on a train and would write. Harriet Levy, his sister, told PM last night that the family had had no further word from Alton but were not worried, as they hardly had expected a letter before today at the earliest.

May Demand Parliament Note Color Bar

Journal & Guide
Norfolk, Va.

LONDON —(ANP)— That government action to eliminate the color bar biases of London establishments will be demanded when parliament reconvenes, was indicated recently follow[illegible]e forced removal of [illegible] Constantine, a West In[illegible] cricket player and employee of the Ministry of Labor, from a popular hostelry. The hotel manager asked Constantine to vacate his rooms because white guests might object to his presence.

Dr. H. Moody, president of the League of Colored People, has given details of the case to the Colonial Office and Constantine is said to have consulted lawyers for possible legal action. The league is seeking to promote legislation to end discriminations against Britishers of color.

"The government should make it illegal for any hotel to discriminate against the colored people," declared Dr. Moody.

TELLS OF INCIDENT

Constanstine, whose position with the labor office requires that he protect [illegible] welfare of hundreds of [illegible] Indians working at the Merseyside docks, came here recently to participate in a cricket tournament between England and Empire teams. His account of the incident was that:

"I booked rooms for four days at a London hotel for my wife, daughter, two friends, and their secretary. After taking over the rooms I was called to the manager's office and told we could stay for one night only.

"When I threatened to hold the management to the four nights' contract, I was asked to accept alternative accommodations at a near-by hotel. We moved on the advice of a Ministry of Labor official in the interests of peace and dignity." The hotel manager said that "There were some guests in the hotel who thought the atmosphere not congenial. Constantine saw my feeli[illegible]d after I had said there were alternative accommodations he left."

During the conversations the manager is reported to have discussed "another nation and its racial problems." It is believed the United States was the unnamed country.

A spokesman for the Colonial Office deplored the situation and declared that "any discourtesy shown to our Colonial fellow citizens should not be allowed."

RAILROADS AND LABOR UNIONS RECOGNIZE NO LAW AFFECTING NEGROES

The Northwest Enterprise
Seattle, Washington

DEC 15 1943

WASHINGTON. — The President's Fair Employment Practice Committee, openly challenged on constitutional grounds by 16 southern railroads, appeared today to be marking time on a West Coast Federal Court action for clarification of its powers.

In the railroad case, F. E. P. C. held that the southern carriers and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen were discriminating against Negroes under terms of an operating contract described by the committee as barring Negro workers from promotion and seniority rights. Adjusments were requested.

Find Action in Doubt

The southern railroads, in a joint letter of F. E. P. C. yesterday said the agency was wholly without constitutional authority to issue or enforce orders forbidding discrimination against Negros or any other group. The union has made no public reply.

F. E. P. C. reported today the final course of action in this matter had not been determined. No regular meeting of the committee is scheduled until December 27.

However, it was learned that the hearing now under way in Federal District Court at San Francisco would have a vital bearing on any further F. E. P. C. action.

In this action, 18 discharged Negro shipyard employees have petitioned District Judge Michael J. Roche for a permanent injunction against the Marinship Corporation and the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, an American Federation of Labor

Some 200 policemen were posted around the Point Breeze plant, where several hundred cat-calling pickets appeared when the shift changed this morning. No violence was reported, and hundreds of workers, white and Negro, passed through the picket line.

Company officials said the working force on the midnight to 8 a. m. shift at Point Breeze was cut about 50 per cent but had no immediate figure on the day shift.

Vernon L. Dorsey, union organization director, asserted 75 per cent of the day working force was idle.

In Washington the War Labor Board ordered the strikers to return to work immediately and warned that if they did not, the board would invoke the sanctions of the War Labor Board Disputes Act.

Under the Labor Disputes Act, the government could seize the plant and then institute criminal prosecution of any individual who encouraged the strike.

REVEALS HOW HE HAD BEEN IGNORED

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

By WILLIAM H. HASTIE
(Recently Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War)

FEB 6 1943

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4— Reactionary policies and discriminatory practices of the Army Air Forces in matters affecting Negroes were the immediate cause of my resignation as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War.

The Army Air Forces are growing in importance and independence. In the post war period they may become the greatest single component of the armed services. Biased policies and harmful practices established in this branch of the Army can all too easily infect other branches as well. The situation had become critical. Yet, the whole course of my dealings with the Army Air Forces convinced me that further expression of my views in the form of recommendations within the Department would be futile. I, therefore, took the only course which can, I believe, bring results. Public opinion is still the strongest force in American life.

To the Negro soldier and those who influence his thinking, I say with all the force and sincerity at my command that the man in uniform must get his teeth, square his shoulders and do his best as a soldier, confident that there are millions of Americans outside of the armed services, and more persons than he knows in high places within the military establishment who will never cease fighting to remove every racial barrier and every humiliating practice which now confront him. But only by being at all times a first class soldier can the man in uniform help in this battle which shall be fought and won.

When I took office, the Secretary of War directed that all questions of policy and important proposals relating to Negroes should be referred to my office for comment or approval before final action. In December, 1940, the Air Forces referred to me a plan for a segregated training center for Negro pursuit piolts at Tuskegee. I expressed my entire disagreement with the plan, giving my reasons in detail. My views were disregarded. Since then, the Air Command has never on its own initiative submitted any plan or project to me for comment or recommendation. What information I obtained, I had to seek out. Where I made proposals for recommendations, I volunteered them.

SEGREGATED SCHOOL BROUGHT CLIMAX

This situation reached its climax in late December, 1942, when I learned through Army press releases sent out from St. Louis and from the War Department in Washington that the Air Command was about to establish a segregated officer candidate school at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, to train Negro officers for ground duty with the Army Air Forces. Here was a proposal for a radical departure from present Army practice, since the officer candidate training program is the one large field where the Army is eliminating racial segregation. Moreover, I had actually written to the Air Command several weeks earlier in an attempt to find out what was brewing at Jefferson Barracks. The Air Command replied as late as December 17, 1942, giving not even the slightest hint of any plan for a segregated officer candidate school. It is inconceivable to me that consideration of such a project had not then advanced far enough for my office to have been consulted, even if I had not made specific inquiry. The conclusion is inescapable that the Air Command does not propose to inform, much less counsel with, this office about its plans for Negroes.

But the reactionary policies and discriminatory practices of the Air Forces are much more serious than the matter of ignoring my office. It should be understood that from the beginning the Air Command did not want Negro personnel. Resistance bred of that attitude has been met ever since. Moreover, even now the Air Command views the use of the Negro as an "experiment" designed to determine whether he can do this or that in the field of aviation. This attitude is the result of wholly unscinetific notions that race somehow controls a man's capacity and aptitudes. The tragedy is that by not wanting the Negro in the first place and by doubting his capacity, the Air Command has committed itself psychologically to courses of action which themselves become major obstacles to the success of Negroes in the Air Forces.

AVIATION SQUADRONS ONLY LABOR UNITS

The Negro program of the Air Forces began some two years ago with the organization of several so-called "Aviation Squadrons (Separate)". These units now greatly increased in number, were organized to serve no specific military need. They have never had a defined function. Except as individual commanders on their own initiative have found some military function for particular small groups of men, the characteristic assignment of the "Aviation Suadron (Separate)" has been the performance of odd jobs of common labor which arise from time to time at air fields. There are no equivalent white organizations. "Aviation Squadrons (Separate)" would never have come into existence except for the necessity of making some provision for Negro enlisted men in the Air Forces. Reluctant to use Negroes at all, the Air Command started off on the wrong foot by organizing some Negro labor units, while every effort was being made to recruit white volunteers with mechanical ability for skilled service.

Somewhat later, in order to provide enlisted technicians for the new air base at Tuskegee, a few Negro soldiers were accepted for technical training at Chanute Field where a large school is maintained. The men were well received and did excellent work. I urged the importance of continuing such training of Negroes in this existing unsegregated school. But the program stopped with the first group. The Air Forces then made efforts to set up segregated technical training at Tuskegee or elsewhere. Difficulties were encountered. Meanwhile, successive classes of Negro pilots were being trained, but no technical schooling of supporting ground crew members was in progress. Thus, even the segregated program got badly out of balance in the effort to effect its extension. The prospect is that in 1943, even with a tardy resumption of technical ground training, Negro pilots will be ready before and faster than adequate numbers of trained ground crews are available.

SERVICE PILOTS REJECTED

The Air Forces also are rejecting Negro applicants who wish to become weather officers in other highly specialized technical fields. A few such men were trained for Tuskegee. But for a period of more than six months, all qualified Negro candidates have had their completed applications returned to them with the information that the Air Forces need no more Negro weather officers. The Air Forces, however, do need large numbers of additional weather officers so badly that white volunteers are being solicited and accepted, despite a general policy against voluntary enlistments in the Army. Yet, it is unthinkable to those in authority that a Negro officer can fill such a position except at Tuskegee. The same situation exists in armament and engineering, both ground specialties for which the Air Forces have been accepting cadets generally, but refusing Negroes.

To date, all Negro applicants, a number of them well and fully qualified, for appointment as Army service pilots have been prejudiced. Two applicants were actually instructed to report for training. They did so but were sent home as soon as it was discovered that they were Negroes. I am advised that this matter is receiving further study. The simple fact is that the Air Command does not want Negro pilots flying in and out of various fields, eating, sleeping and mingling with other personnel, as a service pilot must do in carrying out his various missions.

AVIATION FUTURE IN DANGER

Negro medical officers in the Air Forces are getting only part of the special training in aviation medicine which is available. They are not admitted to the principal school of aviation medicine at Randolph Field. Even the branch school program in which it is represented that Negro officers share without discrimination is in fact discriminatory. Many white officers enrolled at branch schools of aviation medicine have the opportunity of full time resident study. The Negro officer is permitted to commute periodically from his home station at Tuskegee for work at the Maxwell Field branch school. Such grudging partial tender of makeshift schemes may be expected to continue unless a genuine change of racial attitude and policy occurs in the Air Command.

While Negro trainees and cadets at the Tuskegee Air Base have done well from a strictly technical point of view, they have suffered such demoralizing discrimination and segregation that, in my judgment, the entire future of the Negro in combat aviation is in danger. Men cannot be humiliated over a long period of time without a loss of combat efficiency.

Specifically, Negro and white officers serving at Tuskegee in the common enterprise of training Negroes for air combat have separate messes. They are not permitted to have quarters in the same building. Separate toilet facilities have been provided. If the group of white officers at Tuskegee insist upon this and I have no evidence that they do—they are psychologically unsuited to train Negroes for combat. If they do not so insist, the racial attitude of the local commander or of higher authority is all the more apparent.

POLICE DISARMS SOLDIER-GUARD

Despite original design to advance Negro officers and to place them in posts of administrative responsibility at Tuskegee as rapidly as they should qualify, that design is not being carried out in the post administration, except in the station hospital.

Early in the history of the Tuskegee project, a Negro soldier guarding a warehouse was disarmed and arrested by civilian authorities because he had challenged a white civilian. From then on friction continued. A new commander was appointed. He disarmed Negro military policemen assigned to patrol duty in the town of Tuskegee. A recent member of the Alabama state police force was assigned to Tuskegee as an Army officer with duties related to his civilian experience. The Negro soldier was embittered, but the prejudiced community was somewhat mollified.

Fundamentally, it seems to me the Air Command has either failed to comprehend or failed to care that its policies and practices are tending to tear down rather than build up the pride, dignity and self respect which Negro soldiers, like all other soldiers must possess if they are to achieve maximum combat efficiency. Military men agree that a soldier should be made to feel that he is the best man, in the best unit in the best Army in the world. When the Air Command shall direct its policies and practices so as to help rather than hinder the development of such spirit among its Negro soldiers, it will be on the right road.

Protest Discrimination In Air Corps Examination

DEC 10 1943

Kansas City Call

Kansas City, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—The St. Louis branch of the N.A.A.C.P. has filed a protest with the War Department against the policy, recently made known, of requiring one type of examination for Negro applicants and another type for white applicants.

OCT 23 1943

The discriminatory policy was brought to light when Russell H. Jackson Jr., who applied for aviation cadet training, received a letter from the Aviation Cadet Examining Board in St. Louis reading as follows:

"Dear Sir:

"This is to advise that it will be necessary for you to report for another physical examination as all colored applicants must have a Form 64 fine type physical for flying. Through an error you were given the physical on the Form 63.

"You may report to Room C-1, First Floor, New Federal Bldg., 12th and Market Sts., St. Louis, Mo., any Monday, Wednesday or Friday and you will be sent to Jefferson Barracks for another physical examination."

OCT 23 1943

The letter was signed by Sgt. Fred A. Bauer. DEML-RS.

Jackson first applied for aviation training on Nov. 23, 1942. He was rejected for "defective color vision." His score on the mental test was 128, the highest in the group of 250 taking the examination, only two of whom were colored.

OCT 23 1943

Jackson retook the physical examination Oct. 29, 1943 on Form 63 and passed without qualification. It was after this examination that Sgt. Bauer notified him that he had been given the exam on the wrong form.

DEC 10 194

Jackson then retook the examination on Form 64 and passed without qualification. His papers now have been sent to Washington where action on applications takes from four to five weeks.

Jackson is formerly from Kansas City where for four months he taught aircraft sheet metal courses at the Lathrop War Training center. He is now attending Stowe Teachers college here. He has the A. B. degree from the Ohio State university.

The N.A.A.C.P. branch of which Sidney R. Redmond is president feels certain that Jackson will be accepted for aviation cadet training but wants to clarify a policy which requires one type of examination for Negroes and another for whites.

Flay Red Cross Blood Segregation

DEC 4 1943

Several months ago there appeared in the Chicago Defender an article on the Red Cross policy of blood segregation and on the protest campaign which the Committee of Racial Equality was waging against this discriminatory practice. C.O.R.E. is still carrying on this program, which has consisted chiefly of leaflet distribution in front of the Chicago Red Cross blood donor center at 5 N. Wabash avenue. But this must be a program participated in by everyone interested in the cause of democracy.

Defender

The policy of the American Red Cross on blood donations, also maintained by the local Chicago chapter, is, as verified with Joseph H. King, first vice-chairman, that "The blood will be processed separately so that those receiving transfusions may be given plasma from the blood of their own race." The purpose of the blood banks is to receive blood to help our wounded men in service, men who are fighting for the democratic principles on which this country is founded.

Can we ask our men to go abroad to carry on this struggle — to give of their lives if need be — when we on our own home front allow race discrimination in such things as blood banks or in any other phase of our daily lives. These blood banks are a very essential part of our present day struggle against intolerance in other countries, and we all recognize the need for them and the merit of their work, but at the same time we must not remain silent on this policy of blood segregation, which is unscientific, undemocratic, and harmful to national morale.

Chicago, Ill

The medical science has time and again spoken forth against the unscientific basis for blood segregation. In the Journal of the American Medical Association, issue of July 4, 1942, the committee of race relations of the American Association of Physical Anthropologists states: "There is no evidence that the blood of Negroes differs in any significant respect from that of white persons. The successful transfusions with whole blood from white persons to Negroes or vice versa can be accomplished quite as readily as between members of the same race . . . The segregation of the blood of Negroes in the blood banks is therefore not only unscientific but is a grievous affront to the largest minority in our country . . ."

The Negro delegation to the American Red Cross on Sept. 1, 1942, claimed that "The segregation of Negro blood in the blood plasma project is the principle thing affecting adversely the Negro's morale today."

New York's PM on May 20, 1942, declared, "The Red Cross is a great agency for good. It should be big enough to admit its blunders when they occur, and to correct them. It should be big enough to admit that its present policy of segregating the blood of Negro donors in its plasma banks is a bad mistake. That policy should be repudiated in the interests of science, humanity, and national morale."

In 1941 it was only through constant public pressure and protests that the American Red Cross began accepting Negro blood. We can and must do the same again. The Chicago chapter of the American Red Cross needs your blood donations and we heartily encourage your participation in their program, but in giving your blood, register also your protest against their Jim Crow policy. — Sylvia Barger, Committee of Racial Equality.

BALTIMORE

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad steadfastly clung to its aged color ban this week in its refusal of colored applicants for brakemen and freight handler jobs in the face of serious wartime traffic delays.

DEC 18 1943

In a desperate effort to alleviate the manpower shortage this week, company officials:

Secured War and Navy Department permission to use men during off-hours;

Urged clerical workers in jimcrow office building positions to work in extra hours;

Began accelerated courses for brakemen and freight handler recruits;

Ignores FEPC Directive

B. and O. officials acknowledged receipt of a directive last week from the President's FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee) to cease discriminatory employment practices, but continued its campaign "for white men only" to ease the labor shortage.

F. G. Hoskins, white, general manager of the Eastern lines, told the AFRO the matter of hiring colored men was still under consideration Tuesday.

Despite the ban on colored help, management warned that unless workers answered the call for brakemen and freight handler jobs, passage of freight through Baltimore will be slowed up, war production delayed, and movement of finished war material through the port hampered.

The campaign designed to publicise the acute shortage of railroad workers and the subsequent need of help is being sponsored by the War Manpower Commission, the railways and the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

The latest victim of the com-Jones, 31, of 812 W. Fairmount pany's employment bias is Paul Street, who, on application Monday, was told by a white woman clerk that colored persons were not being hired for the job.

Navy's Out-of-Bounds Ruling In Norfolk

THE Navy, in a most amazing order, has forbidden the entry of any white military personnel under its jurisdiction into the major Negro section of Norfolk between sunset and sunrise. In this outlawing of the section the Army has joined. Why has this been done? The Navy has not taken the public into its confidence. It merely stated that if all the purported facts were known that the public would understand. Further than this, the Navy has merely been cagey, offering in justification of its action "the mutual protection of all concerned."

It is common knowledge, of course, that some fracases have taken place in colored sections in which white servicemen were involved. It is common knowledge that these same servicemen, in search of questionable "recreation" and alcoholic stimulants, have made forays into the colored areas. There have been one or two fatalities, occasional holdups, some reported "rollings" so-called, and at least one recent reported criminal attack upon the female companion of a white serviceman after they had by mistake wandered into the section.

FOR those who follow the papers at all, it is also common knowledge that similar, or worse, incidents have taken place in virtually every section of the city, among them some of the generally regarded best white sections, including suburban and beach districts.

A portion of Main street used exclusively for white living quarters and businesses was outlawed, but several contingent blocks of Main street that are not ideal, to say the least, were not outlawed. Nor were any of the other sections, where activities against the welfare of the servicemen have been noted, similarly outlawed.

Other measures presumably will be used for those districts in combatting the problem. Let it be thoroughly understood now that sound Negro opinion does not for a moment condone vicious conditions nor lawlessness in any form, regardless of the race or color or creed of the offenders. It is a hard problem, as has been pointed out by our morning contemporary in Norfolk, and the solution found is admittedly a hard solution, as the Virginian-Pilot observes. Our conviction is that the solution is not only hard, but harsh, hasty, inept, and uncalled for. It may be, from the Navy viewpoint, a solution—but it is definitely not a solution that solves the fundamental and underlying problems.

BY MAKING out-of-bounds the entire Negro business district and the adjacent residential sections—as well as those more outlying areas which can be reached only by passage through the outlawed sections, the official edict puts all of Negro Norfolk outside the pale of decency, makes it suspect, and by inference labels it as unfit for contact by decent service men; that is, white wearers of uniforms.

If things are so bad, what of colored service men? Is no thought to be given to them? Are they to be left to the dangers and vices of the section that are implicit in the outlawing order? Or doesn't the Navy care? If the Navy is to be strictly logical, its orders should apply to service men as such, without racial distinctions. The trouble is, it has not been logical or thoughtful in its initial action.

By its action, joined in by the Army, the Navy has given the Negroes of Norfolk, as such, a black eye. It has damned the good Negroes with the bad without distinction. It is making the innocent suffer along with the guilty. This is against the civilized conception of justice and equity. And it certainly does nothing to enhance good relations between the military services and the Negro citizens.

What has happened here is merely another example of the hasty and inept action, relating to Negroes, consistently taken by the Navy, without consultation with any of the affected population. In this, as in so many of its past actions, the Navy, particularly, seems to have no compunction in stigmatizing the Negro.

NOTHING has happened in Norfolk that could not have been controlled by proper policing by civilian and military authorities. Some months ago a similar out-of-bounds order was issued affecting Norfolk County. Prompt action by the law-enforcement authorities got at the root of the trouble and revealed the order's unfairness to the county as a whole—and the order was rescinded. It is significant that the ranking officer in this Naval District was moved to another command shortly after the Norfolk County order was issued. Perhaps his transfer was coincidental, but it is not to be lost sight of as possibly related to his responsibility for blanketing the good people with the bad in the county.

The outlawing of the colored section here reflects also upon the city of Norfolk officially. It is of interest to note that Chief of Police Wood has not taken to it happily and has sought some modifications of an unrevealed nature. The city, with the Navy sharing joint responsibility, has let conditions get to a state where such a sweeping out-of-bounds order could be promulgated.

One contributing reason has been the inadequate policing of the city, with this particularly true of the section now outlawed. The police authorities themselves are prompt to admit the policing inadequacy because of manpower shortages.

Some years ago an officially sponsored Crime Conference here voiced support of the use of colored policemen. Before that, and in the subsequent years, this newspaper and various civic organizations, including most recently the Junior Chamber of Commerce, have advocated affirmative action in this respect.

Only a few months ago the Journal and Guide took occasion to commend the especially fine service rendered by the colored Auxiliary Police force here, not only in civilian defense functions but in dozens of special assignments; and we pointed out then that from this body of patriotic and now experienced men the city had a reservoir of prospects for augmenting the undermanned city police force.

But apparently the city is too timid to act on this score. It seems not to realize that Negro policemen have long been used in many southern cities. Only last week Greensboro joined the several North Carolina cities that in the past two or three years have appointed Negro policemen and found them entirely satisfactory.

FURTHERMORE, by this action the military authorities imply that the races, even in such vital defense areas as Norfolk, cannot harmoniously get along side by side. They can, if proper and firm and socially-conscious leadership is provided. The military authorities have provided the Axis with excellent propaganda material.

As a matter of fact, they have adopted one of the ghetto-making policies of the arch racist of the Axis, Hitler himself.

The whole policy of the Navy, when it embraces the Negro, is arbitrary and undemocratic. And it is very ironical that certain white persons are always fearful of the supposed desire of the Negro to socialize with members of their race, without the desire being reciprocated, but that this order seems necessary, at least partly, in order to stop the movement of whites into the non-white sections.

Highlighting the nature of the order is the fact that in the affected area are many of the largest Negro churches, at least two white churches and one white servicemen's center, and recognized social agencies for Negroes which occasionally have white speakers, including servicemen, and other white program participants. But they too must bear the onus of the order.

Further, despite the able leadership provided our police department by Chief Wood and despite the generally able city government, they are certain pitfalls that are permitted to exist with impunity. It is hardly to be believed that they exist without the knowledge of the authorities.

What the Navy has achieved, with the concurrence of the Army, in the matter of branding Negro Norfolk with the sweeping out-of-bounds order; what they and the city have not done to remove reasons, even to have considered such an order; and what they still can do, whether the out-of-bounds order stands or is rescinded, but decline to do — all this constitutes ways NOT to keep the peace or respect-

Hines Hospital Discrimination Hit

Defender

I am a veteran of World War II. I have been in the army for three years and was overseas during that time. Now I am a patient at Hines Veterans hospital, where they are still fighting the Civil War. I was surprised to find such gross discrimination and segregation right here on the outskirts of Chicago, a supposedly democratic city, is worse than the deepest South. I wonder what's happening to this democracy I was fighting for?

Filipinos, Chinese, Mexicans and Japs all are put in rooms with other Americans; only Negroes are segregated. We have special lavatories to use. They come right out and ask us not to use the other lavatories as they are "for white patients." Some of the crackers even try to segregate us in the dining room.

One of our boys from a receiving ward reported to a surgical ward for a bed. The nurse said she only had "white beds." I don't know what color she thought he wanted.

I think something should be done about these conditions. A wounded Negro soldier overseas cannot expect very much if these things happen to veterans right at your doorstep. I know — A Returned Soldier, Hines, Ill.

Army Making England Like South

Weekly Review

Soldiers Bitter Over Dixie Officer's Rule

SEP 4 1943

47

Birmingham, Ala.

NEW YORK, Sept.— (ANP) — From confidential sources which the Associated Negro Press has every reason to believe competent and reliable, and which the Associated Negro Press will not reveal, the following account of the American Negro soldiers in England has been secretly received.

"The conditions over here are getting like those in the States. White officers are doing a fair job in convincing some British people about the race problem. Most Negro troops are gradually being moved out of and away from the cities to isolated camps. White MP's are usually placed in these vicinities and intimidate Negro soldiers as well as the girls who are seen with them.

"Last week, there were at least two riots over here. Another one on July 1st and the last of May. During the last of May, two Negroes were reported killed, more wounded and a white officer also wounded. Had an awful time throughout the night. One Negro officer practically took charge of the camp. He collected about 600 rifles in two days. Started when a white MP shot a Negro soldier.

"Last week, one started when fights broke out between Negro and white soldiers in a small city in northern England when white soldiers are reported to have resented British girls being with Negro soldiers. In a southern England city, there were a number of fights that started when white lieutenants made remarks about some "Nigger soldiers" and merchant men" who were passing. The soldiers resented it. A riot was prevented by some of the few Negro MP's who came up and rescued the officer. Yet an MP sergeant (white) at the same time insulted a Negro officer who had tried to quiet the soldiers. At MP headquarters, the Negro officer said that he was insulted by the provost officer (white) in front of the other MP's, who were enlisted men, and arrested as being drunk. The coolness of the four Negro lieutenants, the colored MP's and the colored American Red Cross personnel prevented a probable riot during the night.

"Riots are much more frequent than the press can publish. The troops break into the gun rooms and get their rifles and ammunition to protect themselves often. If something is not done by the U. S. Army soon, I would not be surprised to see a major battle between Negro and white American soldiers. It seems that some top people want southern U.S.A. transferred over here. Even Mr. Bondy from the American Red Cross is over here trying to find reasons for moving the colored clubs (clubs staffed by Negroes) out of certain cities, because it is said that certain people must be satisfied. One of them is Mr. Gibson, the American Red Cross commissioner in Great Britian. One of his excuses is that he understood that the Negro personnel were too highly skilled in their jobs.

"White officers are behind most of the trouble. They have even canvassed communities, telling the residents and business people not to serve or associate with the Negroes (whom they command and get their promotions off) The few Negro officers are treated as bad by their fellow officers. There are some fair minded officers, but they are not permitted to do much because they are not promoted and are shifted in many instances from place to place.

"Have seen a couple of colonels who were very good, but their executive officers are rotten and slip many things over. The Negro soldier is doing a job. All he wants is to be treated like a soldier. Negro soldiers want Negro women who have dedicated to carry on and it was plain that this has had marked affect because the Rising school building where the exercises were held was packed and jammed with people crowding the halls.

"If you can convince the white officer that each Negro soldier wants to get home to his colored wife or friend, you can do a good job. These boys are not excited by the white girls even though they are sought out by the girls in many cases. And the whole thing seems to hinge on the friendship of the Negro and the white girl. Many soldiers are in a very low frame of mind, and if they were not real soldiers, I am convinced that the enemy would be trying to work on them. However, it is possible that the enemy is helping these riots to break out since the tension is so great.

"The American Negro soldier is often fined his salary or more for the smallest infraction. Oftimes they must travel 20 miles to another town to have a little fun. The Negro Red Cross worker is being resented because the soldiers look to them for leadership. Also the American Red Cross workers are not wearing badnana handkerchiefs. The U. S. army is to blame for most of the trouble not the fifth column. The officers won't give the fifth column a chance."

HIT JIM CROW NAVY BADGES

Defender
Chicago, Ill

NOV 27 1943

NEW YORK, N. Y.—A protest against an order forbidding Negro chief stewards and chief cooks, with the rating of chief petty officers, from wearing the regular insignia for chief petty officers in the navy, has been lodged with Secretary Frank Knox by the NAACP.

Complaints from San Francisco and Norfolk assert that the Negro CPOs had been ordered to wear a crescent with four straight bars underneath, whereas all other CPOs in the navy wear three red chevrons surmounted by an eagle.

The NAACP has come into possession of a copy of an order signed by Commander C. Adair, executive officer at the Naval Air Station at Norfolk, one paragraph of which reads:

"It is noted that chief cooks and chief stewards on this station are wearing the wrong rating badge on their uniforms. The proper rating badge for these ratings is the crescent with four horizontal bars underneath, similar to first class rating with an additional horizontal bar. Non-regulation rating badges will be removed immediately."

In its letter to Secretary Knox the NAACP mentioned other complaints:

"We are informed that the colored chief petty officers were told that they must remove the regular insignia from their white caps and substitute the letters USN. They were also told not to wear brass buttons and to wear bow ties instead of four-in-hand ties.

"All these petty orders seem designed but for one reason and that is to prevent the colored chief petty officers from resembling in any degree the white chief petty officers.

"We are also informed that within the limits of the Norfolk Naval Air Station, Negro navy men are segregated into the rear seats of buses operated to carry personnel from one part of the station to another.

"We urge the speedy abolition of these discriminatory rules and regulations."

Coast Guard Officer Tells AFRO He Can't Order Policy Change

EXPRESSES FEAR OF RACIAL OUTBREAKS

Baltimore, Md

BALTIMORE

The responsibility for the ban against colored applicants for the Baltimore Port Security Regiment was charged Wednesday to Commander Howard A. Kelly, head of the local unit, by Capt. A. C. Marts, commandant of the coast guard.

While the regular coast guard sets up machinery for the organization of port security forces, they are composed of civilians, and recruitment of their personnel is left entirely to the discretion of local authorities, Captain Marts said.

In Baltimore, he said, Commander Kelly fixes the policy in regard to the selection of personnel. The regular coast guard as such exercises no control over his policy.

Commander Kelly, who told the AFRO in October that the only duty assigned to his unit was guarding piers, said that colored men were unacceptable because they would have to give orders to white stevedores, "and that wouldn't work in Baltimore." He declared that he would not change this policy unless ordered to do so.

Colored Used in Other Posts

The issue of jim-crow in the local regiment was discussed by Captain Marts with AFRO representatives at the U.S. Customs House, Gay and Lombard Streets. Commander Carl H. Abel, captain of the port, also attended the conference.

Representing the AFRO were Furman Templeton, personnel director, and W. A. Brower, staff writer.

Pointing out that the regular coast guard uses both colored enlisted men and officers without discrimination, Captain Marts admitted that colored volunteers are used in port security forces in Boston and other Northern ports.

Gov't Issue Equipment

Despite the fact that the Government issues arms, uniforms, and other equipment, he insisted that the coast guard could not prevail upon local authorities to change the policy here.

"Commander Kelly has given a great deal of his time without money and if we try to tell him how to run his organization he may quit," Captain Marts added.

Fear Racial Outbreak

Both he and Commander Abel professed fear that the acceptance of colored applicants would engender racial conflict. "Don't you think that the introduction of colored men will be a disturbing element?" Commander Abel asked.

Mr. Templeton pointed out that for more than fifty years colored and white stevedores have worked on local docks without mass conflicts, and that white stevedores daily take orders from colored gang carriers (foremen).

He also pointed out that color or race should not be regarded as a qualification for enrolling in the regiment. To this, Commander Abel replied

Reaction to Color Important

"Psychological reaction against color is a very definite qualification."

It was first revealed four months ago that colored applicants were restricted from enrolling in the Baltimore unit.

Since that time at least eight qualified colored men have applied for enrollment and all have been summarily refused.

Bans J.C. in Post Theatres

Afro-American

DEC 18 1943

Baltimore, Md

CAMP DAVIS, N.C.—Although there are no express regulations concerning the seating of officers in camp theatres, the written policy bars erection of signs and seating by race, the War Department informed the AFRO recently.

It is pointed out here, however, that through a loophole in the regulations which permit the seating of men by organization, the same result is obtained because of the army's basic policy of segregation. This rule, however, does not apply to officers.

Smith Case Raises Point

The point was raised in connection with the case of Lieut. Robert Smith, executive officer of Battery C here, who was ordered recently by an M.P. not to sit in the section reserved for officers in the post theatre.

Battery C also figured in another incident at Camp Davis recently when the men, charging that they were not given enough to eat, refused to leave the mess hall on one occasion until they were sufficiently fed.

Since that time no further incidents of this nature have been reported.

Indicted by County Jury, Army Won't Surrender Him for Trial

COLUMBUS, Ga. (ANP)—The case of Lieut. William H. Webb, commander of a truck regiment here, allegedly arrested, beaten and forced to put up $50 bond to obtain his freedom, threatened this week to develop into a cause celebre between military and civil law officials.

The army officer was reportedly arrested by Muskogee County police inside the Fort Benning reservation, hustled back to the Columbus jail, allegedly abused and maltreated, then forced to put up $50 collateral to obtain his release on a speeding charge.

The smouldering resentment between Fort Benning commanding officers and county authorities broke into the open Sunday when County Attorney Bentley Chappell revealed the heated exchange of correspondence resulting from Lieutenant Webb's arrest.

Army Won't Give Him Up

In disclosing the correspondence, Chappell raised the ancient issue of civil versus military law and sought to justify the treatment accorded Lieutenant Webb, who since the forfeiture of the $50 bond had been indicted by the Muskegee grand jury. Military authorities, however, refuse to surrender the officer for trial.

Chappell made public the letters after Col. William H. Hobson, commander of Fort Benning, criticized the treatment of soldiers at the hands of civilian police during an address before the Columbus Rotary Club. The case of Lieutenant Webb was cited as an example.

The arrest, made September 8 in the presence of military policemen, aroused the ire of military authorities and was given official attention when L. R. Aldridge, of the Muskogee County Commission, received a letter from Col. J. P. Edgerly protesting the action.

Facts of Case Cited

The letter cited the fact that the arrest took place on a military reservation, the alleged assault on the lieutenant, forcibly taken from his auto and jailed for an hour, and that one of the arresting officers who drove the lieutenant's car into town damaged it on the trip.

"It further appears," the letter said, "that during Lieutenant Webb's period of confinement in the county jail he was subjected to other indignities and finally intimidated into putting up a cash bond ($50) and was advised that it would probably cost him much more if he appeared in court."

Drastic Demands Made

The letter demanded the return of Lieutenant Webb's $50, that his arrest and incarceration be expunged from the record, reimbursement for damage to his auto and local officers be instructed as to their lack of authority to make arrests on the military reservation.

It also advised that civil officers be instructed as to the proper method of arresting any soldier, whether he be colored or white.

Segregation, Discrimination Rampant; Abused by Local Cops, Superior Officers, War Department Told

PAMPA, Tex.—Members of the 328th Aviation Squadron and the 908th Quartermaster Company are denied any chance of advancement and are assigned to menial jobs, soldiers on this port charged in a recent letter to the War Department.

The soldiers declare that they are "absolutely fed up and disappointed with the bad treatment, discrimination and injustices imposed upon us," adding, "We are proud to serve our country but would prefer to serve in a more important capacity."

They charge that they have been stationed here ten months (since February), have had six weeks of basic training, very little drilling, and that the only arms they've seen are the .45's carried by white military policemen.

Humiliation Constant Lot

Humiliation is their constant lot, the men say, charging that white soldiers and officers hurl all kinds of vile epithets at them with impunity and that their commanding officer, an Easterner, never sides with them on questions of discrimination.

They point out that while K.P. pushers (head K.P.'s) are made corporals and sergeants, K.P.'s on the whole—their permanent rank—are "a miserable bunch, worked like slaves without ratings."

"We are confined to these jobs," they charge, "not because we are not fitted for anything else, but because we are dark. We are referred to on this post as 'that n----r squadron at the end of the field.'"

"Segregated in Everything"

Charging that they are discriminated against, and segregated in, everything—in the post theatre, in the hospital and in the gym, they state that they are often forced to forego their nights off to wait on white officers and cadets on the post.

Nights sometimes alloted to them to play games in the gym are later taken away from them and assigned to white officers and cadets or enlisted men for dances or other social functions at which they must "serve as flunkies and be subjected to all kinds of abusive language."

Many men in the squadron, they contend, have passed the test for O.C.S. and aviation cadet but have been denied training, and add that the majority of the men are well educated and capable of performing more important tasks.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The War Department reports that most of the men in the group made low average scores in the army general classification test. "There is no record of any man who has qualified as an aviation cadet in that unit who has not been called up for service," it declared.)

Dancing With Negro Servicemen At The Stage Door Canteen

Informer

Informer Houston Texas

NEW YORK.—(ANP)—Declaring that the Stage Door Canteen's policy about Negroes is based on he famous quotation . . . "all men are created equal," Margaret Halsey, whtie, author, and captain of junior hostesses at SDC, in a memorandum to all junior hostesses titled "Dancing with Negro Servicemen at the Stage Door Canteen," said that the real reason back of the refusal of some whites to mingle with Negroes at the canteen is based on economic and historical facts and not on sexual or psychological reasons.

SEP 11 1943

"The canteen's policy about Negroes is based on a quotation which runs as follows: 'We hold these truths to be self-evident: That all men are created equal. . . .'

SEP 11 1943

"The canteen's policy about Negroes is the based on the 14th and 15th amendments to the constitution of the United States, in which it is specifically stated that nobody is to be denied the rights, privileges and immunities of American citizenship on account of race, creed or color.

"One hears a good deal of talk, in some circles, about the Reds and long-haired radicals who want to tear down the constitution. The Reds and long-haired radicals only WANT to tear it down. The people who deny Negroes democratic equality actually ARE tearing it down.

"I know that some of you on our shift are very deeply prejudiced against accepting Negroes as your social equals. You can't be blamed for having that prejudice in the first place. It was taught to you when you were too young and helpless to be critical.

SEP 11 1943

"But you certainly can be blamed for hanging on to the prejudice when: (a) you are now old enough to know better; (b) you are being given, in the canteen, a golden opportunity to come into contact with Negroes under the best possible circumstances and find out what they are really like.

"There is no scientific basis for the notion that Negroes are inferior to white people. A scientist, given a collection of human brains picked in alcohol, cannot tell which ones belonged to Negroes and which to white people. You can check this statement in any good reference library. Intelligence depends on the number and fineness of the convolutions in the brain. It has absolutely nothing to do with the amount of pigment in your skin. If it had, you would all be much stupider when you are sunburned.

"Actually, I don't believe any of you are very deeply concerned with Negro intelligence. What worries you more is the fear of rape. You unconsciously, but very arrogantly, assume that no male Negro can so much as glance at you without wanting to get you with child. The truth is, that while you are an extremely attractive group of young women, there isn't one single one of you who's that good. Negro males react to you no more and no less than white males. As women, you know in your hearts that men of any description respond to you pretty much as you intend them to respond. This is especially true in the canteen, which has hardly any points of resemblance at all to a lonely, moonlit shrubbery.

"The real basis of prejudice against Negroes is economic and historical, not sexual or psychological. The people who talk about 'keeping the niggers in their place' never admit this, because it doesn't show them in an entirely favorable light. Such people prefer to fall back on more melodramatic arguments, usually (1) the honor of their women and (2) the danger of a Negro revolt. Neither of these two arguments stands up very well under close inspection.

SEP 11 1943

"As long as you treat Negroes as sub-humans, you don't have to pay them so much. When you refuse to dance with Negro servicemen at the canteen, you are neither protecting your honor nor making sure that white southerners won't have their homes burned down around their ears. All you are doing is making it possible for employers all over the country to get Negroes to work for them for less money than these employers would have to pay.

SEP 11 1943

"You don't live in a romantic age. You live in a machine age, and it's getting more machinery every day. In the old days, large groups of people could live out their entire lives without ever finding out what other large groups of people were doing. That is no longer possible. Unless you can de-vent the aeroplane and cause it to fall into general disuse, you are going to spend an increasing amount of your time mingling with Negroes, Russians, Chinamen, Patagonians and all sorts of hitherto unfamiliar people this side of accredited lepers. You might as well get used to it here and now, on Sunday nights at the canteen. It will save you a lot of trouble later on.

SEP 11 1943

"There's only one possible basis for getting along with other sorts of people, and that basis is equality. Real, genuine, three-ply, copper-bottomed, equality. If we have any secret yearning to think of ourselves as a master race, we have only to pick up a newspaper to see that nobody is giving odds on master races these days.

SEP 11 1943

"One word of warning before I close. Don't be surprised if you find some of the Negro servicemen sullen and unresponsive and some of them aggressive and too responsive. This war has put the Negroes in a hell of a spot. We need them in the war effort, so we've been forced to give them more equality than we were ever willing to concede before. They aren't used to it, and neither are we. There are bound to be awkardness and mistakes on both sides. If there are, remember that they are inevitable and take them in your stride.

"When a Negro goes into the canteen, he has no reason to suppose he won't be snubbed by one of the girls on our shift or openly insulted by a southern soldier whose 'superiority' has not been noticeably enhanced by rye with beer chasers.

SEP 11 1943

"The main thing to remember is this: The Negroes aren't under any obligation to behave better than we do. They didn't come to this country because they wanted to. We brought them here in chains. They didn't write the Declaration of Independence or the constitution. We wrote those documents, and if we now wave them in the Negroes' faces and say, "Ha-ha-Practical joke!", we must expect to meet the customary fate of practical jokers.

SEP 11 1943

"We kept the Negroes in official slavery until 1864 and we've kept them in unofficial slavery ever since. If you meet a Negro serviceman at the canteen whose conduct doesn't come up to your delicate and exacting standards of behavior, just don't forget this one thing—whatever he is, you made him that way.

SEP 11 1943

"As a matter of fact, you meet plenty of white servicemen whose conduct fails to enthrall. Few outsiders realize, but all of us know, that being a Junior Hostess and entertain unselected strangers for three and a half hours is difficult at best. You only make it more difficult when you artifically set aside a portion of these strangers as targets for unreasonable, unscientific and undemocratic emotion. If you'd just relax and keep your pores open, there wouldn't be any 'Negro problem.'

Tuskegee Gets Mess Of Pottage From Air Force

MAR 28 1943

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

JUDGE WILLIAM H. HASTIE

THE ARMY AIR FORCES just announced a new program of five months academic training in selected colleges to be given to soldiers before the begin army flying training. The men will be taught by the college faculties and will live on the campus. Over a hundred schools over the country have been selected to provide this preliminary college training. But eligible Negro soldiers are to be segregated and all of them sent to Tuskegee Institute to study physics, mathematics, history, English and Geography.

Men from all parts of the country, with varying educational background, a large number of them already graduates of first rate liberal arts colleges, must be sent to Tuskegee Institute for five months of undergraduate training, just because they happen to be colored.

MAR 28 1943

Even if Tuskegee were an outstanding liberal arts college which it is not, this newest and wholly unnecessary Jim Crow scheme would be inexcusable. In all the circumstances the plan is outrageous. The time has come when the unholy alliance between Tuskegee Institute and the Army Air Forces must be publicly denounced and condemned.

NO VALUABLE SERVICE

Let there be no mistake. Tuskegee is rendering valuable service to the war effort in this latest step in its effort to concentrate a black aviation program on and around the Tuskegee campus. With callous indifference to the best interests of the Negro and to the importance of democracy in the war effort, Tuskegee Institute is looking out for Tuskegee.

The school gets its mess of pottage and the Air Forces have a willing and valuable accomplice in their design of keeping Negro soldiers out of all segregated colleges.

Several hundred Negroes may be affected by this scheme almost immediately. Early in March the Air Forces called to active duty the entire waiting list of several hundred qualified Negro Aviation cadet applicants. I am sure of this because of my personal acquaintance with several men who were near the bottom of the list and have been called to duty. These are the men who, after the usual preliminary processing, undergraduate study at Tuskegee, before they begin aviation training.

MAR 28 1943

UNSUPPORTED RUMOR

It still remains to be seen what will be done with these men after they finish five months of college study at Tuskegee Institute. A report was sent from Tuskegee to a leading newspaper that some of these men are to become bombardiers and navigators. There is no apparent truth to this report. I can find no evidence from any source of any plan to train Negroes for bombardment aviation.

It seems to me that some one has tried to take the curse off of this latest Tuskegee outrage by circulating the false report that new opportunity is being provided for Negroes in the field of bombardment aviation. The whole thing smells very bad.

There is one further question which we must ask and continue to ask until answer is given. What about new Negro applicants for aviation cadet training now that the waiting list is exhausted? I do not know of any plan of the Air Forces for accepting or using additional Negro applicants. Will they be accepted? If so will they go on a waiting list to remain there until 1944?

Hastie Replies On Delays in War Allotments

The People's Voice
New York N.Y

JAN 30 1943

(Below PV presents the reply of William H. Hastie, Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, to queries arising from complaints received by this paper involving delay in payment of salary allotments made by officers of the 369th Coast Artillery to their wives. (Since this letter was sent, Hastie has announced his resignation from the War Department post, withholding explanation of same until he actually leaves his desk Jan. 31.—Ed)

Facts in summary as outlined in Hastie's letter are:

JAN 30 1943

In the case of Mrs. Charlotte Charity, the allotment which was authorized in the amount of $150.00 commencing with July, 1942, was paid for July, August, and September, 1942. Through a regrettable error no further payments were made on the allotment, but a check in the amount of $450.00, covering the arrearage was mailed to Mrs. Charity on January 11, 1943.

In the case of Mrs. Dorothy Wilson, the records show that the allotment authorized to commence in June, 1942, in the amount of $85.00 was paid in that amount for June and July, 1942.

The allotment for $85.00 was discontinued by Lieutenant Wilson and a new allotment was authorized for $65.00 to commence in August, 1942. Payments of $65.00 were made on this allotment for August and September, 1942. The $65.00 allotment was discontinued by Lieutenant Wilson and a new allotment was authorized commencing with October, 1942, in the amount of $175.00. For this month $65.00 was paid as in the preceding month and the balance was mailed to Mrs. Wilson on January 11, 1943. Payment of the allotment for November and December, 1942, was made in the amount of $175.00, the latter check being mailed on January 1, 1943.

Payment for the month of January, 1943, and for subsequent months, will be made soon after the first of the month following the month in which they become due.

These cases undoubtedly involve errors on the part of clerical personnel which should not have occurred. At the same time I think it is only fair to say that in the handling of a million or more cases in recent months, the Office of Dependency Benefits has accomplished a tremendous task with relatively few mistakes of this character, particularly when it is considered that the present organization of several thousand employees was built from the ground up less than a year ago.

Ugly Picture Of Wasted Man Power, Undemocratic Action, He Claims

MAR 5 1943

The following is the 5th and concluding statement of William H. Hastie, recently Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, concerning conditions affecting Negroes in the Army Air Forces.

In four statements, one published each week in February I have tried to give the public a picture of racial discrimination and segregation as I have known them in the Army Air Forces for more than two years. It has been an ugly picture of wasted manpower and undemocratic action.

Thus at a given time, there have been more Negro applicants for appointment as weather and engineering officers than there were existing vacancies in Negro units. At the same time, there may be less Negro radio mechanics available than are required for existing Negro units. It has been shown that service pilots do a type of work which does not fit into the segregated pattern. It is too wasteful of men and money to have segregated training in all phases of aviation work, so the individual Negro is assigned, not where he fits best, but where there is a Negro vacancy. Negro flyers are ready, but insufficient Negro ground crews have been trained.

New white units are balanced by the mingling of experienced and inexperienced men. But since all Negroes in the Air Forces are new and inexperienced, and since the Army insists upon segregation, there is no leaven of veteran pilots or enlisted technicians in which Negro organizations. Thus the 99th Fighter Squadron will go into combat without a single veteran pilot and with no mechanics who have years of Army experience. It is for such reasons that the segregated training and assignment program cannot make the most effective use of available manpower.

Moreover, it is a tremendous job trying to set up the segregated scheme. An unbelievably large amount of time and energy is spent in the War Department and in the field trying to work out and to carry out plans for using Negroes and at the same time keeping them separated from whites. A year and a half was wasted making and discarding and remaking d discarding again various schemes for the segregated training of Negro mechanics and other technicians for aviation ground crews. More than two years have passed since the Tuskegee training plan was announced and not one man trained there is yet in combat. Truly the mountain labors and brings forth a mouse. Wars are not won this way.

The difficulty of the segregated program is increased by the fact that the Negro has had less opportunity for education and skilled work experience in civilian life than has the white man. Thus, relatively less Negro soldiers than whites are fitted by prior training and experience for technical work. But the same is true of white men from Mississippi or Arkansas as contrasted with white men from Wisconsin or New York. If all white Arkansans were put into separate organizations disproportionately large numbers of untrained and unskilled men would create a problem. But white Arkansans and New Yorkers are mingled so that the individual capacity of each man can be used where he will fit best. Only with the Negro is the uneven distribution of skills made a problem by putting all Negroes together.

Many of the above observations apply to the entire Army, not just to the Air Forces. Some people have wondered why I have confined my public statements to the Air Forces. In the first place, discrimination and segregation have been much worse in the Air Forces than elsewhere. Moreover, I have believed and still believe that it is possible to make progress by sitting down and reasoning with many members of the Army High Command. But not so with those who control the Air Forces. Confident of their self-sufficiency they view themselves as the elite of the Army. They believe that no one but a professional in their field can understand their problems or improve their program.

They do, however, understand the importance of public opinion. Just as public opinion has been so skillfully built up in favor of increasing independence for the Air Forces, public opinion can also be effective in curbing the foolish, harmful and unfair racial practices described in my several statements.

Within the last month I have seen some indications of improvement in the Air program for 1943 as it affects Negroes. The proposed segregated officer candidate school for Negro ground officers of the Air Forces seems to have been abandoned. At any rate, the school did not open as scheduled and increasing numbers of Negro candidates are attending the general administrative officer candidate school of the Air Forces at Miami.

Although the 18 months already lost while no Negro enlisted men were being trained for ground crew service can never be regained, there is some indication that substantial numbers of Negroes will be trained as technicians and mechanics in 1943. During the last few weeks, we have seen in the press and in newsreels the first large group of Negro soldiers sent to the general training center for aviation radio technicians. From an officer now teaching at one of the centers for training airplane mechanics word comes that several newly assigned Negro soldiers are showing aptitude in work on airplane engines. A number of Negro civilian instructors who have been marking time at Chanute Field for six months have been scattered all over the country at various training centers. They are teaching white as well as colored soldiers. Some of the mare teaching classes entirely made up of white soldiers.

We shouid be encouraged by these gains. At the same time we cannot afford to let up in public discussions or in public protest against the many remaining injustices and against the basic falacy of segregated training and organiation.

Ill-Judged Action

Governor John C. Vivian, of Colorado, v ill-advised when he ordered immediate h to military induction of any Colorado m actively engaged in agriculture. He clai authority for this action in a clause in the tional selective service act which reads: "The Governor of each state shall have charge of the administration of the selective service law in his state."

MAR 23 1943

The error involved in this act by Colorado's governor has nothing to do with the desirability or otherwise of exempting farmers and farm workers from military service. It was wrong because it introduces the element of inequality into selective service, a matter which is based entirely upon the democratic principle of equality of opportunity and responsibility in the bearing of arms for the national defense.

If it is conducive to the winning of the war that all agricultural workers be exempt from military service, that exemption should apply equally in all states. If the need for men for the armed services demands that a given proportion of farm workers serve their country in uniform, the proportion of such men inducted and the proportion of those occupationally exempted should be the same in every state.

It is high privilege to be chosen to bear arms for such a nation as this in such a war as we are now fighting. To say to any young man that he is denied that privilege because he is needed to work on a farm is a bitter pill for most young Americans to swallow. Yet, if food production requirements are of greater urgency than the Army's need for men, some of the rural youth of the nation must swallow that pill of disappointment.

To create special discriminations by states only makes that difficult situation, both for the individuals affected and for the nation as a whole, the more difficult. It tends to arouse resentment, both among potential inductees in the other states and in Colorado itself. For it involves inequality of treatment, a thing which American youth, called on to serve their nation in one capacity or the other, will rightfully resent.

Furthermore, it is highly contributive to a spirit of national disunity, which is one of the most dangerous threats to victory we could possibly face. There should be no hint of special privilege in respect to any wartime duties, responsibilities, restrictions or sacrifice.

Walter White Tells Senate Service Bill Perils Negro Labor

Apr. 10, 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Congress must halt practices of racial discrimination against workers in war industries before it undertakes legislation for compulsory employment, Walter White, executive secretary of the NAACP, told Senate Military Affairs committee last week.

White testified against the Austin-Wadsworth bill which provides for "the successful prosecution of the war thru a system of civil selective war service." 4-10-43

White pointed out that the bill is based on a false assumption, for there still exists a huge reservoir of voluntary man and womanpower which has not yet been utilized because of racial prejudice.

He cited the bill's failure to compel employers to accept all workers who volunteer or are drafted regardless of the worker's race or color as one of its most glaring faults. White added that the bill contains no adequate safeguards to protect workers from arbitrary action by employers or local draft boards.

Apr. 10, 1943

Charles H. Houston, attorney, spoke for the National Non-Partisan Council of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority and supplemented the testimony of Mr. White.

The bill provides that the President through the Chairman of War Manpower Commission, may issue a call for volunteers specifying the number of persons required with their qualifications and the places where their work would be performed. "But," said White, "it creates no obligation on the employer to accept such volunteers."

MEANEST TRICK

MAY 5 1943

A lot of pettiness along the color line has come to light in this war, but it seems to us that an incident reported by an eye-witness in Rocky Mount, N. C., takes the prize. Many troop trains pass through the town. The good white ladies maintain a free refreshment service for soldiers at the railroad station. But the refreshments are for white soldiers only.

MAY 5 1943

The day our informant was in the station on his way to Washington, between fifty and one hundred Negro soldiers were overflowing the 'colored" waiting room out onto the platform. They had been waiting for hours for a train. The first section of the train arrived, but without any jim crow car "for colored." The dark soldiers were hungry and fretful. Before their eyes gallons of coffee and soft drinks and candy and cigarettes were being handed out to white men in uniform. They oculd not get any refreshments — in fact were told bluntly that these were for white soldiers — and they could not get out of town, for four section of the train passed through without any accomodations for Negroes Nobody gave them any information. Finally, on the fifth section to arrive there was one jim crow car, already packed to overflowing. Many of the Negro soldiers could not be jammed into the restricted space and simply had to be AWOL.

MAY 5 1943

There they were, soldiers of democracy, not in Hitlerland, but in the greatest democracy in the world, in their own native land, branded, callously mistreated, humiliated. Looking about them in North Carolina, would it be any wonder if they had little enthusiasm for destroying the Master Race — in Berlin and Tokyo?

PROTEST RACIAL ATTACKS

Lawyers Urge Punishment for Violence Against Negro Soldiers

WASHINGTON, July 19 (U.P.)—The National Lawyers Guild made an attack today on "continued civilian violence, particularly by police officers, against the Negro soldiers and accused Attorney General Biddle of failing to prosecute offenders even when requested to do so by military authorities.

JUL 20 1943

Citing the slaying or wounding of five Negro soldiers in this country during the first three months of 1943, the guild declared that such violence might well be the greatest single factor now operating to make 13,000,000 Negroes bitter and resentful and to undermine the fighting spirit of three-quarters of a million Negroes in arms."

JUL 20 1943

The guild presented its views in a report on shootings of Negroes prepared by its vice president, William S. Hastie, former civilian aide to the Secretary of War.

Leaders Of United Nations Disagree On Post-War Status Of Colored Races

Philadelphia Tribune Philadelphia, Pa.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, in his latest radio broadcast, took much time to repeat his often-stated pledge that a victorious United Nations would have no truck with Fascism in any way, shape or manner. He emphatically declared that:

AUG 7 1943

"The liberated peoples would have the hard-won privilege of choosing their own governments and learning the meaning of Democracy."

It is significant that this official declaration by our President followed shortly after a statefent made a few days previously by Lord Harlech, British High Commissioner to the South African Republic. Lord Harlech was addressing a London Conference composed of American, British and other United Nations' newspaper correspondents. He stated that:

"The European populations have no intention of voluntarily granting the franchise to the blacks of South Africa out of fear that such an extension of political democracy would lead to the end of white civilization in South Africa."

This declaration by Lord Harlech is exactly in line with the statement made by Mr. Churchill earlier in the war, in which he bluntly exclaimed "that he did not become Prime Minister to liquidate the British Empire!"

This is evidence of confusion among the leaders of the British and American governments concerning what policy to follow toward the subjugated peoples of Asia and Africa and other Colonial dependencies.

That is a question which must be answered immediately. The color question looms large on the horizon of world affairs. To dodge it now may lead to future disaster.

ARMY BRUTALITY AGAIN

The suicide of the young soldier in Brooklyn adds a sad dramatic note to the protests which repeatedly have been made to the President and the War Department concerning the mistreatment of colored soldiers in Southern camps. His self-destruction is startling testimony to Army humiliation and brutality which he could not otherwise expose because of army regulations and the fear of punishment. Conditions must be unbearable when a soldier would rather die than be subjected to them. In peace-time many Northern bred colored people shrink from setting foot in Dixie because of Southern arrogance, conceit and general ill-breeding. What indeed must be the revulsion of feeling in a soldier from New York in time of war as he is tossed about, insulted and bullied by "crackers" who from infancy has been indoctrinated with the "poor" notion that his sallow skin makes him a superior somebody?

SEP 4 1943

Guardian
Boston, Mass

The bullied and beaten soldier has no redress. He is worse off than a slave; fora slave could run away to freedom. Army rules have heavy penalties for "talking out of school." Only interested civilians can bring the army outrages to the attention of the Commander-in-Chief and the Secretary of War. The President and Secretary Stimson personally should act to wipe out Army brutality. After all, it is the people's army. The great majority of the American people will not condone ill treatment of any of their soldiers. In taking action to suppress brutality in the armed forces, the President will have almost universal support.

SEP 4 1943

A STRONGER FEPC

Guardian
Boston, Mass

At last a step has been taken to give the Fair Employment Practices Committee (FEPC) some semblance of force to use in pushing its war against segregation in industry. This step is an agreement between the FEPC and the powerful War Manpower Commission establishing jurisdictional procedure under which the FEPC may prosecute violators of the President's Executive Order 8802 (prohibiting segregation). Under this arrangement in cases where the full power of the FEPC is not established or is disputed, jurisdiction may be determined by agreement with the Manpower Commission, decision of a committee of members of both bodies, ruling by the Attorney-General, or order of the President.

AUG 14 1943

The great amount of work done by the President's Committee in overcoming color prejudice has been warmly commended. Without power to enforce its decisions it has won notable results by "moral suasion," by appeals to patriotism, by emphasizing the immediate need of the utmost production to win the war. Of course there have been delays, disappointments and rebuffs and in general the process of breaking down discrimination in employment has been irksome though encouragingly successful. Now it seems the Committee is prepared, if need be, to put direct pressure upon slow-moving employers, and results should be quicker.

O.W.I. - British and American

George Padmore's story from London in last week's Pittsburgh Courier about the British Office of War Information pamphlet, widely circulated in England, instructing citizens on the proper manner in which to treat American Negro soldiers, arouses speculation about the strange inaction of our O.W.I. in this connection.

This pamphlet is reported to discourage the use of words insulting to Aframericans, and to sound the need for treating them on a basis of equality with other soldiers.

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa

We submit that such a pamphlet is needed a thousand times more in the United States than in Great Britain, and yet the Office of War Information here has refused to live up to its responsibility and print a similar one for the white public.

AUG 28 1943

Our O.W.I. has used a mountain of paper explaining what insignia and medals mean, why we should not talk, and depicting the heroism of our armed men in battle, but not a single pamphlet or poster has it published and distributed to deal with the worst social cancer in this country.

The U. S. Army abroad has printed pamphlets on how American soldiers should act toward Englishmen, North Africans and Sicilians,—but none on how they should act toward their buddies a shade or two darker in color, although there have been repeated demands for some such education of Army personnel.

Considering the gross mistreatment and humiliation of colored Americans by whites in and out of the services, such mass education in tolerance is obviously needed.

THE LEVY CASE

Afro-American

The War Department has a hot potato—Alton Levy, a sergeant in charge of instruction of colored illiterates at a Lincoln, Neb., air base, is serving a four-month sentence following conviction by a court-martial on charges of circulating slanderous statements about his commanding officer and false rumors concerning mistreatment of colored soldiers.

Sergeant Levy, a Jew, was a former labor organizer, and opposed race discrimination. There is ground for belief that the army court couldn't resist the temptation to make an example of such a soldier.

Baltimore, Md.

JUL 30 1943

The Ladies' Garment Workers, the Workers' Defense League and the Socialist party have descended on the White House and something is going to be done about the Levy case.

All soldiers talk about a commanding officer behind his back, and what they say isn't always complimentary. Levy's comments should have been ignored.

Nor is the fact that Levy's statements concerning mistreatment of colored soldiers were not correct of grave importance.

Negro Killed By Maxwell Field MP

Montgomery, Ala

An unidentified negro soldier was fatally shot and a negro civilian was wounded in the leg by shots fired by a Military Policeman on Monroe between Perry and Lawrence Streets early last night.

Military Police at police headquarters said that they were unauthorized to give a statement of facts concerning the shooting, but admitted that an M. P. had shot a negro soldier and a stray bullet had struck a negro civilian.

The Provost Marshal at Maxwell Field was unavailable for details of the shooting. However, a witness to the shooting said that the M. P. had remonstrated with the soldier and after a conversation in which the negro is alleged to have cursed the M. P. and then charged him. The M. P. is said to have wielded his night stick until it was wrested from his grip by the soldier. He then pulled his service automatic and fired twice, one bullet striking the soldier below the chest and the other hitting the civilian in the leg.

It was believed that the negro was carried to Maxwell Field in an Army ambulance and the M. P. placed under arrest pending an investigation.

If You Want to Join a New Uniformed Auxiliary, Your Man Must Be a White Merchant Marine Officer

The NMU Finds the WAAMMS Mysterious and Undemocratic

By [illegible]

PM Exclusive

There's a new women's organization on the books today—a uniform-wearing, bugle-blowing, parade-loving group, whose purpose, according to their executive director and founder, is to "help the families of the merchant seamen."

This is the Women's Auxiliary of the American Merchant Marine, Inc. (WAAMMS), headed by Mrs. Ada Mae Roll of New York City.

In a statement issued last week, Mrs. Terry Riggs Penman, national director of the Women's Auxiliary of the National Maritime Union, warned seamen's wives against the WAAMMS.

"The formation of the WAAMMS," said M[illegible]nman, [illegible]ded to confusion [illegible] the wives and families of NMU members. From what the Women's Auxiliary has been able to learn of the WAAMMS through attendance at two meetings and a conference with one of its sponsors, it impresses us as a thoroughly undemocratic, unrepresentative and mysterious body, which should be shunned by the wives of all seamen."

Some Facts

Here are the facts PM has learned about the recently chartered WAAMMS:

¶ A check with the War Shipping Administration, the United Seamen's Service, the Propeller Club and the National Maritime Union, shows the WAAMMS are apparently unaffiliated with, and unrecognized by, any established Merchant Marine or Navy welfare organization.

¶ Although its purpose is "to help the families of the merchant seamen," no plans have been made in this direc[illegible]and no statement has been ma[illegible] to [illegible] will be done, other than Mrs. Roll's: "We're going to try to cheer them up."

These are WAAMMS. A WAAMM is a member of a new organization set up with a Jim Crow twist—women relatives of Merchant Marine officers, and officers only, may belong. That's the qualification for "whites." As for Negroes, a Negro woman, even if her husband is a captain, can't join the WAAMMS. Leaders of the new group include, left to right: Drum-Majorette Arlene Powers; Florence Lindhurst, first vice president; Mary Ricker, second vice president.

Mrs. Ada Mae Roll

¶ Supposedly a democratic organization, the membership rules, as quoted by Mrs. Roll, allow only relatives of Merchant Marine officers to join. Seamen's wives will be permitted to work for the WAAMMS, but not to become members.

"Our husbands don't associate with the seamen on board ship," said Mrs. Roll, "and we can't do any different."

¶ Although Negroes make up about 20 per cent of the men at sea today, no Negro women are eligible for membership in the WAAMMS.

From the South

"I'm from the South, myself," said Mrs. Florence Lindhurst, first vice presi[illegible]of the WAAMMS. "You understand, I cou[illegible]ever mix with colored."

¶ All members of the WAAMMS must own all three of the official WAAMMS uniforms, designed by Mrs. Roll. These consist of a Winter uniform, costing about $100; a Fall and Spring uniform, about $50; and a Summer white, about $50. In addition, there's a formal gown, of WAAMMS design, which is a must for all WAAMMS affairs.

¶ No statement has been made on how the WAAMMS will finance themselves, but Mrs. Roll anticipates that dues will be $25 a year, plus a $100 initiation fee. All expenses up to now, including rent for the WAAMMS office at 152 W. 42d St., says Mrs. Roll, have been paid by herself.

¶ To d[illegible] the only activities of the WAAMMS have been to march in two parades and to form a drum and bugle corps of about 20 Merchant Marine youngsters, all in uniform. Mrs. Roll hopes the corps will eventually grow to include 100 drums, 100 bugles and 100 drum majore[illegible]

"We officers' wives are sponsoring this," said Mrs. Roll, "to help out the seamen's families, because we realize that our men can't take a ship out unless they have their crew. We're going to work with the families, visit the sick; do what we can to comfort them. And we're going to have banquets, dances and clubrooms.

"We hope to have every officer in the merchant service soon. We don't want to let one of them run loose."

Mrs[illegible] a small, thin woman in her middle 40s, is [illegible] wife of a chief mate in the Merchant Marine. Her son also is a Merchant Marine officer.

Refusal Sent In Reply To Letter From The NAACP

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(SNS)—Reaffirming its stubbornly maintained position that it will not retreat from a policy of segregation in the armed forces, the War Department, in a letter under date of September 4, to Walter White, NAACP secretary, declared that "The suggestion contained in your letter (of July 14) for the formation of mixed units has been considered at various times by the War Department and the decision reached that such action would be inadvisable."

The letter was signed by John J. McCloy, Acting Secretary of War.

Mr. White, is releasing the above information, revealed also that recently he had visited McCloy and thanked him on behalf of Negroes for the establishment of non-segregated training for Negro bombardiers, pilots, and navigators, and had at that time expressed the hope that after they had received this training in mixed units, Negro aviators would be permitted to fight in mixed units. The negative answer recorded above is Mr. McCloy's reply.

Negro Group Asks Pardon For Schappes

The Daily Worker

New York, N. Y.

The National Negro Congress yesterday urged Governor Thomas E. Dewey to grant an immediate pardon to Morris Schappes, loyal teacher unionist and anti-fascist fighter, sentenced to serve a two year prison term on charges of "perjury" growing out of the witch-hunt trials of the Rapp-Coudert Committee more than two years ago.

In requesting the Governor to pardon Schappes, Edward E. Strong, executive secretary of the National Negro Congress, called attention to the "inconsistency of Schappes imprisonment today in the midst of an all-out struggle against [illegible]cism," and called upon Negro [illegible]ple to rally to the defense of Schappes.

Mr. Strong [illegible]cated his belief that Schappes had been unjustly convicted on the charge of "perjury" because the Rapp-Coudert Committee failed miserably in trying to convict the great anti-fascist fighter for un-American activities.

"Morris Schappes has been one of the staunchest supporters of the Negro people and all minority groups," Mr. Strong stated.

Chief Objection Is Employment Of Mixed Race

DEC 18 1943

WASHINGTON ([illegible]) — While there was no official reaction at the Fair Employment Practice committee to the order of the Atlanta City Council telling the regional office of the FEPC to "get out of town," considerable concern has been shown for the ultimatum.

Handlew by Local People

It was on Monday night that the council unanimously adopted a resolution in which it said "the race situation can best be handled by local people," and calling upon "our representatives in the national congress to insist upon the removal of the said office from the city of Atlanta."

Chief objection was that "mixed employment of the races" was untenable. The office, with jurisdiction over Georgia, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee, was opened on Nov. 24 with A. Bruce Hunt, Virginia-born and educated, as the regional director.

Hunt had not even organized his staff when the council passed the resolution. It was planned to hire two field examiners. The offices are located in Atlanta's one skyscraper.

All the papers in Atlanta carried the story and, according to information received here, the local radio stations plugged the action all day.

Hearing of the resolution, Chairman Malcolm Ross of FEPC declined to discuss it. The committee was awaiting a "crystallizing" of sentiment in Atlanta.

From a reliable source, however, it was learned that Ross had contacted the White House, but it could not be determined what was said or done or with whom he talked since the President was known to be out of the country.

Received no Copy

It is also understood that he called upon Rep. Robert Ramspect of Georgia to discuss the resolution. Ross would neither confirm nor deny this, and when reached for comment, Congressman Ramspect said he had not yet received a copy of the resolution and therefore could say nothing.

There is apprehension in some quarters that a concerted move might be developing to kill FEPC. On Dec. 3 Rep. John Rankin of Mississippi declared on the house floor the committee "is doing everything it possibly can to drive the white people of the south out of the Democratic party."

"When they go out and attempt to force every private enterprise in the south to accept Negroes, force them to employ Negroes and promote them," he declared, "they are simply creating dissension." Further he added: "This so-called Fair Employment Practice committee is really a rump organization without any legal authority, and should be abolished at once."

No Difficulty in Dallas

While objection is being raised in Atlanta to mixed staffing of the regional office, Carlos Castaneda, acting regional director operating out of Dallas, is proceeding with no apparent difficulty. The case load there is 120.

An Open Letter

YOUR HONOR:

I am not quite sure how I should address you. Titles have never meant very much to me, and I have always felt that pl[illegible]r." was good [illegible]gh for most men.

But I am very sure of what I want to say.

I am saying that I am worried as much about democracy in my state of Tennessee as I am about democracy in Germany.

I am more than a little bit worried about the democracy of the War Department to which you are attached as a high official with the power of life and death over the boys who step across the tight bounds of Army regulations.

And as you can guess, Mr. Judge Advocate General, I have an axe to grind. I want to know what is going to happen to the 64 Negro soldiers court martialed at Paris, Tenn., given long sentences at hard labor for playfully taking a couple of army trucks and stepping on the gas for an AWOL holiday.

Now, I know something of the military temperament even if I am a 4-F and a turn-down myself. If I ever got past the Maginot line of lieutenants and colonels in your office and got in to see you, I can imagine your telling [illegible]ething like this:

"War is [illegible]nd regulations a regulations whatever sentimenta journalists may think about it. The men were convicted for misuse of government property by a court of commissioned officers. I have no choice but to sign these papers locking them up for from one to five years apiece."

You probably have the impatience of most old soldiers for newspapermen. You would probably end up by pressing a button and having some gorgeous gentleman wearing gold braid and military hairbrushes show me the door. Then you would take your pen and sing those commitment papers in the same impersonal manner with which you would light a cigar.

But before you have the gentleman with the hairbrushes bounce me out, before you turn the key on those boys by signing those papers, let me say my piece.

Rules Of Law

I AGREE with you, Mr. Judge Advocate General, that a soldier has to obey rules and orders. We are fighting an enemy who has turned his men into deadly machines without mercy and without conscience.

Not only our amry has to maintain strict discipline. So does our civilian population in these last, tense months before we rip through the heavy armor of the enemy to pierce the evil heart that has already brought death to more than forty millions of the world's people.

But I believe that discipline can be maintained longer in a democracy than in autocracy because the courts of democracy are bound by three essential rules [illegible] civilized law which have [illegible] wiped off the books [illegible] the carrion courts of the Nazis. [illegible]ese rules are:

That the severity of the punishment must be tempered to the seriousness of the offense.

DEC 18 1943

That justice must be tempered with mercy.

That justice must be equal for all people — whether they pray in a church or synagogue, whether they be people with white skins or people with black skins.

Mr. Judge Advocate General, I can find nothing in my own troubled heart to convince me that any of these rules were followed by that court martial which convened to try these young Negroes in the army camp near Paris, Tenn I strongly suspect that these boys in uniform were convicted before they were ever tried.

"If a black man steals a chicken in the South," so a preacher friend remarked to me once, "they give him 90 days. If a white man steals a chicken in the South, they give him a setting of eggs."

These men are black, so they were given long days of shame and disgrace for breaking loose from the inhuman and insulting restrictions of a jim crow army camp.

The men were black and the men could go to jail. Long live the memory of Crispus Attucks and Dorie Miller.

The man was black, and the man was shot. That's what happened at Lewistown, Ill., when some white men who lynched a Negro soldier were acquitted by a jury their "peers" — jurors who themselves thirsted for black [illegible] and hungered [illegible] black flesh.

DEC 18 1943

Broom — Not A Whip

I KNOW Lewistown, Ill., as I know Paris, Tenn., Mr. Judge Advocate General. I'm not worried about what black men will do for democracy — I've been able to get in words edgewise with Negro soldiers riding the jim crow busses of Tennessee with me.

I've ridden with men doomed to die on the far-flung battle fields of the United Nations — men who will die cheerfully because they feel that their deaths will mean a new day for Tennessee and Georgia.

These men carry in their souls that great phrase of Vice President Henry Wallace: "Our victory must bring in its train the liberation of all peoples."

The sharecropper draftee from Georgia realizes this even if he can barely sign his name. He knows that this war must free the [illegible] wading knee [illegible] in the stagnant water of the Philippine rice fields, must free the pregnant women dragging the hundred pound sacks of cotton on the great plantations of the Mississippi Delta.

DEC 18 1943

I'm not worried about what black men will do for democracy. They will die for it.

But I am worried about what places like Paris, Tenn., and Lewistown, Ill., will do to democracy if the ingrown, senseless hatreds of Paris, Tenn. and Lewistown, Ill., continue to dictate the policy of the War Department and of local courts when dealing with Negroes in uniforms or Negroes in overalls.

And I now know how I would feel if I were black and cooped up in a jim crow camp where I was forced to tip my hat to Negro-hating white officers from the South. I know how I would feel if I were insulted and shunted off to the side streets when I got a pass to go into town.

I'd feel mad as hell. And I'd get so fed up on it that I'd probably bust loose and raise a little hell.

But that would be no cause for sending me off to jail for the duration. It would be a sign that I had raised the danger flag and that my superiors had better get down the broom instead of the whip.

White Soldier Fined For Dancing With Negro Girl

MORGANTOWN, W. Va.—Because he danced with a colored girl "in view of those present," a white aviation student at the U.S. Army pre-flight training center located at West Virginia university, was deprived of two-thirds of his pay by a prejudiced commanding officer here last week.

The soldier, Private Herman P. Suiter, however, was spared the punishment when the commanding officer's decision was reversed by his superiors. Ironically, Suiter is a native of Louisville, Ky. The officer involved, Capt. Walter C. Troutman, is from Athens, Ga., and his repudiation came from the Eastern Flying Command at Montgomery, Ala. The girl who caused the disturbance, Miss Dorothy Johnson, is a Negro hotel maid.

According to the story, Capt. Troutman, who came here recently from a post at Lynchburg, Va., to head the 48th College Training Detachment, an air crew, imposed the sentence on Suiter after the latter had invited the girl to dance at a reception being held in the Morgan Hotel ballroom, on Nov. 5. Suiter had been declared the winner of a jitterbug contest at a previous dance, and he and the young woman caused a mild furore when they indulged in a sensational interpretation of the fad.

Three days later, Capt. Troutman ordered deduction of the better part of Suiter's pay for a month, basing his action on the charge that the soldier "wilfully and wrongfully to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, conducted himself in a manner to bring discredit upon the military service by dancing with a colored girl in public view of those present."

In addition to the penalty on his salary of $50 per month, Suiter was confined to his quarters by the captain's order. Other excerpts from Capt. Troutman's bulletin read:

"The information as listed above in the results of this trial will be recorded on the service record and will become a permanent part of the army records for this aviation student. This record will seriously impair his opportunity of being classified as an aviation cadet at the classification center and will be used in any further case against this aviation student during his entire career.

"Further, any recurrence of this or any other act against the military code, regulations or traditions of the service will result in immediate elimination from air crew training and transfer to a basic training center without recommendation for further advancement in the service."

Immediately upon receipt of Capt. Troutman's report at flying command headquarters, the officer was dealt a rebuke. He was overruled and the sentence was ordered vacated.

NOV 27 1943

In a statement following the action of his superiors, Capt. Troutman, who is a former University of Georgia football star, declared:

"The case was handled improperly on my part. The only issue with me was Pvt. Suiter's action in bringing in an uninvited person who was improperly dressed to the party. But the whole case is now closed and there's no sentence against the boy."

Troutman explained that he had taken the action "to discipline a boy who was out of line." He said he would have imposed the same sentence if the girl had been a white girl.

WE CAN'T EVEN GET JUSTICE IN COURT

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Is "Army Justice" a mockery? Are the military courts dealing fairly and impartially with all cases which come under their surveillance?

47b

This question is being asked on all sides following two startling military court - martial actions which were disclosed here last week.

In the first case—at Paris, Tenn.—64 Negro soldiers have been sentenced by a court-martial to from one to five years at hard labor, for making an "unauthorized expedition" to Jackson, Tenn., last October 10.

DEC 11 1943

In the second case, Lt. William Sammons (white) of Camp Swift, Texas, convicted several weeks ago by general court-martial of stabbing a Negro private under his command, was merely given a reprimand, according to a War Department disclosure.

In the case of the white lieutenant, the punishment meted out by the court-martial has been approved by the Judge Advocate General, it was stated.

In the case of the 64 Negro soldiers, Col. William M. Dunham, Jr., commanding officer of the Barrage Balloon Training Center at Paris, Tenn., said the court decisions had been submitted to the Judge Advocate General here for final ruling.

Col. Dunham, in explaining the incident, said the soldiers took two army trucks and other government equipment, without permission, and headed for Jackson, Tenn. Officials of the camp learned of the mission and notified Jackson police.

The soldiers, seeing police gathered at the city limits, turned their trucks and started the other way. Military police caught them at Henry, Tenn.

In the case of Lieutenant Sammons, the maximum punishment in the Manual for Courts-Martial could have been a dishonorable discharge and a sentence to a prison term of five years at hard labor, for his offense.

But Lieutenant Sammons, although reprimanded, still retains his commission and still is in charge of Negro troops, according to all available information.

So . . . for stabbing a Negro soldier, a white officer in Texas, is given a figurative "slap on the wrist" . . . while 64 soldiers, who sought a bit of fun and a surcease from the bonds of segregation and discrimination which constantly surround them in Dixie, must serve from one to five years AT HARD LABOR for their offense.

The exceedingly light treatment accorded Lieutenant Sammons serves to recall similar handling of the case of Col. William Colman who, while drunk, shot a Negro private at Selfridge Feld, Mich. Colman was reduced in rank by the court-martial to his permanent rank of captain. Later he retired, but he still gets a captain's pension.

This case also tends to revive the General Patton eposide. Although the story was "broken" as an instance of "democracy at work" and although the general was sharply reprimanded by his superior and later publicly apologized, both principals in the latter affair were white.

On the record as shown thus far, Negroes are forced to the conclusion that there is no "real justice" for them, even in military courts.

"SORE SPOTS" AROUND U. S.

DEC 11 1943

"Sore Spots" which should be checked immediately are:

PARIS, Tenn. . . . where 64 Negro soldiers were court-martialed and sentenced to from one to five years of hard labor. Cause: An unauthorized "joy-ride" in two Army trucks.

CAMP SWIFT, Tex. . . . where a white Army lieutenant, William Sammons, convicted by court-martial of stabbing a Negro private under his command, was merely reprimanded and returned to duty.

DEC 11 1943

STARKSVILLE, Miss. . . . where a Negro soldier, Pvt. Rieves Bell, was beaten by four whites, and was later sentenced to three and a half years by a Mississippi court because he refused to take off his uniform.

FORT BENNING, Ga. . . . where First Lt. William H. Webb, Negro commander of a truck regiment, was arrested inside the military reservation, taken back to Columbus, Ga., slapped into jail, allegedly abused and mistreated, and then forced to put up a $50 cash bond to obtain his freedom.

Sa[illegible] Northerners Are Too Busy Making Money to Run the Army

[EDITOR'S NOTE: Here is a story of a white fellow who thinks nothing can be done at present to change segregation. Southerners thought nothing could be done about slavery either. They were wrong then and are wrong now. If in this war the nation's life becomes at stake, as it was in 1862, we shall have of necessity a new emancipation.]

By JEHU JASPER

(Special to the AFRO)

EL PASO, Tex. — The United States Army is fundamentally a prejudiced army, and it will remain so as long as the American way of life retains its present mould.

That is the opinion of Edward Spencer, 23, a white Decatur, Tex., discharged soldier, as it was given to me on a train pulling into this town last week.

Uninhibited, he talked freely as we sat in a crowded diner speeding eastward across the Southern tip of New Mexico. He attracted my attention by engaging me in conversation.

This struck me as somewhat odd because the moment he opened his mouth I could literally smell the h[illegible] grits and beaten biscuits.

Hated Blindly in [illegible]

"When I was a kid," Spencer declared, "in my early 'teens, I followed the pattern of my parents and my associates. They didn't like your people and I didn't either. As a matter of fact, I guess it would be safe to say I was a 'Negro-hater.' To me, the black man represented some form of parasite that had been permitted to multiply in a land that belonged to me and mine.

"Then something happened. I don't know what it was, but somewhere between the time that I reached the age of 19, and when I joined the army, I began to break through the web that had been woven around my thinking.

View Changes Slowly

"I know that sounds right bookish but that's really the best way I can describe it. Anyway, I began to figure things out for myself, and this without any direct contact with colored people, too.

"It became clear to me that much of the weeping and moaning attributed to your [illegible]eople had some justification. I began to see them as [illegible] beings the same as I was, an[illegible]egan questioning myself as to what was my reason for hating them in the first place.

"They had done nothing to me and since there were none among the 2,578 inhabitants of my home town, what could they have done to the other folks there to provoke such a strong dislike?

"I guess being told by the army doctors a couple of weeks ago that I wasn't fit for service just about capped it off. I realized then that I wasn't such a great shucks after all, even though I was white."

Soldier vs Money-Grabber

Concerning [illegible]army, Spencer had this to sa[illegible]

"The United States Army is fundamentally Southern. Therefore it is fundamentally projudiced.

"The professional soldier in this country is the Southerner. He is the man who helps to make up three-fourths of the regular army in peace time and, naturally, he is the man most qualified to lead the troops when war breaks out.

"On the other hand, the Northern white man is too busy making money, and trying to figure out new ways of taking people's money, to be concerned with what goes on in the nation's defense machinery.

Way of Life Must Change

"The result is that when war comes the available military leaders are overwhelmingly Southern. As a consequence, then, the South has an uncontrolled voice in dictating the po[illegible] of the country's military.

"There never will be any change until the American way of life is changed. Things will continue to be the same as long as the 'cracker' is the professional soldier and the Yankee is the professional money-grabber."

Special Trades Ignored

Some of the men, it is contended, have special trades at which they worked before induction, others have finished cooks' and bakers' schools, schools for mechanics, returned here and are now doing K[illegible] duty for white units.

They charge that the bus company that holds a contract with the army post to carry the men to and from camp segregates them, confining colored soldiers to four seats (room for eight men) and that all others are forced to stand whether the bus is loaded or not.

"If we don't get on first," [illegible] letter states, "all stand and like it. No protesting over the number of seats allotted to us. It's take that and like it or have one of these Texas M.P.'s crack your skull with a .45 or a stick.

Mutually Hate Each Other

"White civilians hate us and we in turn despise them, because they abuse us in any way they see fit. City police have abused our boys on many occasions, pulling them out of government cars and trucks on some occasions, and beating them up."

The letter cited the case of one soldier who was badly beaten, then given thirty days in the guard house, fifteen of them in solitary confinement, while in the hospital as a result of the beating.

After asking the [illegible]er about the affair, it is reported, the commanding officer stopped him in the midst of his story to declare, "That's not the way I heard it." Seeing that his superior sided with his accusers, the soldier said no more.

The adjutant of the squadron, the letter charges, "wanted to beat him up again because the boy resented the attitude they took toward his case."

Blast Jim Crow At Md. Seamen's Service Club

Defender
Chicago, Ill

BALTIMORE — (ANP) — An investigation of the policy of the local committee of the United Seamen's service by the national [illegible]dquarters was reported unde[illegible] this week after the disclosure that colored seamen are not allowed to use the lodging and recreational facilities of the Seamen's Service club here.

The color bar was exposed by Archie Jenkins, 73-year-old merchant marine cook, who had just returned from a voyage to a war zone. Mr. Jenkins reported making a visit to the club to secure accommodations for overnight just as two white seamen were checking out and he was told colored seamen were not provided lodging.

That the club does have a ban against colored seamen using the facilities was later admitted by Victor W. Bowyer, white, port executive, who is in charge of the club.

Mr. Boyd said that [illegible]ort committee had enunciat[illegible] the policy for the club and in doing so had taken into consideration local traditions. He added that "we over at the club are in a difficult spot" in the matter.

The committee here is composed of representatives from shipping interests, maritime unions and the War Shipping administration.

James Drury, white, port agent for the CIO National Maritime union, asserted this week that some steps to eradicate the discrimination at the club are already begun. He added:

"The question of denying the [illegible]se of facilities of the club to colored seamen was raised by a representative of the shipping industry and vigorously opposed by the union, backed by representatives of the War Shipping administration.

"The matter was referred to the National United Seamen's Service

Shameful Conditions Revealed

Informer Houston Tex

Tuscon, Ariz. — (ANP) — Confidential information has been obtained by the Associated Negro Press of startling and sensational discriminatory practices imposed upon soldiers of the 92nd infantry division stationed at Fort Huachuca. Sources cannot be revealed fo[illegible] of reprisals upon the in[illegible]ants.

Particularly bitter are the men over the statements accredited to Atty. Truman K. Gibson and Gen. Benjamin O. Davis that conditions are "in excellent shape," training "good," morale "high" and the overall picture "gratifying." Enlisted men who said the two high officials were at Fort Huachuca recently to investigate the post must have known that the reservation is a "keg of d[illegible]mite" if they had their eyes open.

Conditions Disgraceful

The shameful situation threatens to develop into a national scandal, and more important, according to observers, unless the federal government and the army high command takes immediate, forthright action to correct the disgraceful conditions, it is believed that all the fury of an overseas battlefield will explode in this desert community.

Black American soldiers who a few months before had entered the U. S. army filled with patriotic determination to help win the war for democracy, even to the point of sacrificing their lives, are now reported to be enmeshed in the doldrums of frustration and despair as a direct result of the heartbreaking, inhuman treatment meted out to them by [illegible]manding [illegible]ral and white officers alike.

Charges made

Specifically the shocking charges made by army personnel attached to the fort are:

1. That the commanding general, E. M. Almond, of Anniston, Ala., refers to his Negro charges both in and [illegible] their presence as "niggers."

2. That the commanding general is formulating plans to convince the war department to ship the division overseas for combat duty, although the division is miserably unprepared for such service.

. . That Gen. Almond is not a top flight commander and was not assigned to a white unit because he lacked necessary qualifications. The war department foisted him upon the Negro group it is charged because it was necessary to place him somewhere.

4. That the commanding general orders the post Gestapo to hold a "shakedown" of enlisted personnel after each live ammunition practice to detect possible bullets secreted away for an allegedly planned "insurrection."

5. That a quota system operates in the making and promotion of Negro officers with few ever reaching the rank of first lieutenant. Most of the Negro officers are "frozen" at the second lieutenant level.

Information has trickled out of the camp that several white officers including one colonel have been severely beaten up or killed in altercations with enlisted personnel. The officers are also said to stand far behind the lines during firing practice with live ammunition, because they fear a sharpshooter might train his sights upon them and revenge mistreatment.

6. That enlisted personnel is trained with obsolete combat weapons and not given instructions in modern methods of warfare. Instead, training consists almost exclusively of marches and drills around the confines of the army post.

7. That the food served in mess halls at Fort Huachuca is the "worst in the army."

"This information was received from one of the patients plus my own observations."

Armed with that complaint and such other information as we could dig up from our files, Doris Hollis of the Dallas Express office got the assignment to go to Kerrville, San

SEP 11 1943

Antonio and other places where she might need to go to get information. Her report follows:

Food Major Complaint

Thirteen patients were interviewed. Among them were bed patients, rest patients and employed recuperates. The major complaint is about th food, and the first utteerance of all the patients is that it is terrible.

SEP 1943

Here the reporter gives a vivid picture through direct answers from the patients themselves:

Q. "What makes it so terrible?" (Meaning the food.)

A. "It isn't cooked right; the beans seem to be cooked in clear water, the meat is always goat meat and it is tough. We have the same thing all the time. Bugs are often in the beans and greens. We never get fresh vegetables and they are always canned greens. We can tell by the color, taste and smell. The ham sandwiches we get for Sunday night dinner are often made of spoiled ham, and the bread (light [illegible]) too hard to be eaten.

SEP 1943

Q. "What does breakfast usually consist of? Dinner? Supper? Do you ever get fruit juices or milk between meals?"

A. "For breakfast we usually have grits or oatmeal, a cup of milk and a piece of dry toast, a half peach or some other fruit. For dinner, the usual menu is beans, goat meat (most of time in stew with potatoes), cornbread (Nearly always, with light bread occasionally), a glass of milk, and sometimes bread pudding for dessert. The dinners are varied with squash or greens. Generally supper consists of some of the same things we had for dinner."

According to the patients, the bed patients are given the same food as the others and there is no difference made even to the very sick patients. The only way they get fruit juices is to buy them personally, or to have a friend in the kitchen who would provide them. When asked whether complaints had been made to the doctor in charge or the nurses, the answer was yes, but they had been told that they had no better at home, that they did not have to stay there (at the sanatorium), and that they could send to town and get what they wanted and have it cooked in the kitchen.

SEP 1943

Medical Attention Ample

All of the patients said that they thought they got enough medical attention when it was needed, saying that the doctor visited the women twice a day and made the same number of visits to the men, while the nurses visited them three times daily. It was also stated that patients who are supposed to have recuperated wait on the other patients. Some of those who are ill feel that these recuperates should not have care of them, thinking that they do not know enough about how to care for themselves in treating the disease. It was also said that many times those who were supposed to be well broke down under the strain of trying to care for those who were more ill than they.

Recreation is provided in the form of dominoes, checkers and a few other games.

Nurses and Head Doctor Interviewed

The nurses when interviewed said it was true that the patients did not seem to enjoy their food, not from lack of appetite but that they complained that they did not like it. But they also added that tubercular patients seem awfully sensitive and grouchy, anyway.

An interview with the head doctor disclosed that there are four nurses, three Negro and one white. There is only one Negro registered nurse. The white nurse, who supervises the nurses and has charge of the X-ray, and is also technician, is a registered nurse. The doctor said he thought he had sufficient nurses, and was not anxious to have any more registered nurses. He explained this statement by saying they did not work until they saw him coming.

SEP 1943

He has a shortage of doctors as he says he cannot get more. There is only one old surgeon who assists him. He said he had two colored doctors but they both have gone. According to him the services of the colored doctors were all right, the trouble was keeping them.

When the question of the employment of patients who are themselves just getting well was raised, the doctor shied away from answering and the reporter said she could not bring him back to it no matter how she approachtd it. She was inteersted in this because the patients resent having someone wait on them who is not well and who the feel do not know enough about the disease to try to treat it.

SEP 1943

Salaries

As to salaries, the registered nurse receives $60 per month, the practical nurse, $25; orderlies, $25; kitchen help, $30; and the dietician, $75. When asked if the dietician were trained, the doctor replied that she was not, but that she did better than the trained dietician he had. According to him, the employees are all slated for a raise at the beginning of the fiscal year in Septemeber.

SEP 1943

The Patients

He also said that the patients grumbled about the food, but that he ate the same things and they tasted all right to him. He also said he gave them the privilege of sending to town for what they wanted and it would be prepared for them. They were not given fruit juices because the sanatorium had not been able to get any for several months, but he thought conditions would be better beginning this month. When queried about the very sick patients' being given the same diet as the others, he said that when he knew a patient was going to die he let him have anything and everything he (the patient) wanted. It was also his opinion that tubercular patients are generally irritable and grouchy.

SEP 1943

There are between 175 and 180 beds.

Percentage of Cures

According to the doctor, their percentage of cures is above the average. He explained that they lost some but they were generally patients who were better and permitted to go home. They are given instructions when they leave on how to care for themselves, and to report to the institution for checkups. However, instead of following instructions they believe they are well because they look fat and fine and either work too hard or dissipate and then go back to the sanatorium almost dying. He said it was not their custom to accept patients back in that condition but sometimes they slipped in and were too ill to do anything but stay there.

SEP 1943

The doctor himself performs all the operations. He stated in the course of the interview that he had had tuberculosis in its worst stage 26 years ago but had gotten well.

General Conditions

The men's dormitory seemed to be more clean and orderly than the women's. The children's ward was not as clean as it could have been. The X-ray room seemed to have new and necessary equipment as far as the reporter could judge.

Another problem, the doctor stated, is that of keeping the men and women separated. He thought that a dormitory would eliminate that. One of the women patients in commenting on the food had also said if one allowed the kitchen men hang around in their rooms she could get better food.

A Word About the Doctor

The head doctor is a native of Yazoo, Mississippi. He seems to be informed himself so far as treating chest tuberculosis is concerned. However, otherwise his knowledge seems to be limited. The reporter said he impressed her as not caring for or valuing Negro training or efficiency for jobs or positions. He seemed to think that an honest, good Negro could do the work without an education as well as or better than someone who had been trained. He has a plantation down in Mississippi and boasted of how he treats his help there with kindness.

FEP — Fair Employment Practice. That is what the President's committee headed by Malcolm Ross is trying to give America.

But demagogues of Dixie don't like the word "fair" any more than they care for the word "equal." And again we have the spectacle of the old South rising once more with a rebel shout to attempt to kill FEPC.

Why? Because the FEPC under Malcolm Ross is doing its most effective job since its inception. The best sign is that the South is making the most noise now about FEPC.

The Dixie railroads rise up in righteous indignation and cite the Constitution to keep Negroes from the right to a decent job in a locomotive cab.

The Atlanta City Council yells: "Throw 'em out!"

Stiff-collared Rep. Howard Smith is in a purge mood and his House committee is out to kill FEPC.

With this unholy cabal out for the "kill," now is the time for every American — white and Negro — to come to the aid of FEPC, letters which have become synonymous with USA. FEPC is making the United States really united by breaking down phony color lines in employment.

Wire, phone or write the President to tell him what a good job FEPC is doing.

March 13, 1943

Dear Sir:

The news has come to me from Fort Huachuca, Arizona that the Commanding Officer of the 93rd Division stated to his Negro Officers flatly that the War Department orders had come limiting promotion of Negro Officers to First Lieutenants and that no Negro Officer would be promoted beyond that rank. Now Mr. President if this is the plan of procedure of your administration to hamper and handicap the aspirations of our Negro soldiers it will tend to break down the democracy for which we are now fighting and dying, also nulify the Four Freedoms that was planned in the Atlantic Charter and lower the morals of the Negro soldier, especially those who are to be drafted in the future.

Now Mr. President I have been a staunch advocate of you and your administration and especially your order that established the Fair Employment Practice Committee which gave a sense of democracy to the Negro of America, and now to hear and read that Negro soldiers would not be advanced beyond First Lieutenants shocked me. I express the minds of 15 million Negroes in America, when I say that we expect and demand the equality and rank with every other man regardless of race. This order coming at a time when citizens are expected to be patriotic, it seem to me that every encouragement should be given. The lynchings and discriminations that are taking place including the above mentioned order should be discouraged and democracy should be practiced. Therefore, may I ask your kindest consideration and co-operation to this end, and will you please let me know if this order is authentic, if not, will it be banished? For our soldiers desire to fight and prove to the world as in other wars, their worth therefore I am anxious that the rank and file of the American Army will not be disturbed by the undemocratic practices of Officers in charge of their welfare. I trust you will see my point of view and give me your answer by return mail.

Hastie Gives Cause For Resignation

Air Forces' Policy Of Discrimination His Chief Reason

By P. BERNARD YOUNG, JR.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Judge William H. Hastie resigned from the War Department post of civilian aide to the Secretary of War because of "reactionary policies and discriminatory practices of the Army Air Forces in matters affecting Negroes," he declared in a prepared statement, amplified in an interview, here Saturday.

He relinquished the post in protest, he said, as the "only course which [illegible] bring results," since "public opinion is still the strongest force in American life."

DENT DECLINES POST

Meanwhile, it was authoritatively but not officially revealed that Albert W. Dent, president of Dillard University in New Orleans, La., was offered the post of civilian aide but declined it last weekend.

FEB 6 1943

It was reported that a leave of absence was not available to Mr. Dent from the Rockefeller Foundation, the General Education Board, and the Julius Rosenwald Fund which contribute heavily to Negro education, and that this was a factor in his turning down the War Department offer to succeed Judge Hastie.

In addition, a report current here was that after Mr. Dent flew to the cap[illegible]r a conference with War Department officials and left for New York to get a release from his post at Dillard, a heavy barrage was laid down on the department to forestall his appointment.

Meanwhile, Secretary of War Stimson said at a press conference as late as January 28 that the vacancy had not been filled.

HASTY DECISION UNLIKELY

It is not likely that another hasty decision will be made on filling the position in view of the figurative bombardment of protests received by War Department officials as a result of the offer to Mr. Dent.

It was learned here Saturday that strong representations have also been made against selection of a successor to Mr. Hastie without consultation with representatives of colored organizations, newspapers, and a cross section of national leaders.

FEB 6

HASTIE'S PLANS

In some quarters the desire is being expressed to have the differences between Mr. Hastie and he War Department composed nd to have him return to his ormer post. Those who have ollowed Army expansion believe hat he has done an excellent job. Iis impasse with the Air Forces ;as his major obstacle and he esigned largely because of that.

Whether Mr. Hastie would reurn to the post is uncertain, but e indicated in a press interview ere Saturday that his sole purose in resigning was to be in a osition to bring the force of pubic opinion to bear on the condiions complained of and to have hem improved.

"My plans for the immediate future are not final," he declared. "I am going to rest for at least two weeks ."

'OULD HASTIE RETURN?

But it is not illogical to assume at, if the Air Forces modified policy and met other condins implicit in his resignation d subsequent statement, Mr. stie could and would return. h action would be a distinct ory for him and would give office greater usefulness than r before.

Asked if any Negro could ith self-respect accept the ffice now, Mr. Hastie unhesiatingly said "yes."

Ie explained: "Since my resigion the presence of shock, so speak, has been noticeable in right quarters. I am conined to believe that those in hority are in a mood to listen reason. Any successor in the ce would have this advantage start with."

HER BRANCHES BETTER

Ir. Hastie's statement giving reasons for resigning disclosed t only with the Army Air ces were there irreconcile differences, and not with er arms or branches of the itary establishment.

VE IGNORED DIRECTIVES

f the Army Air Forces will form to the directives of the retary of War and submit to questions of policy respecting red personnel, expand its ning program for colored ets, and abandon the idea of jim-crow officer candidate ool (for administrative offi-) at Jefferson Barracks, Misi, it is possible that he would consider returning to the War Department.

Moreover, it was pointed out by experience observers here, the two years of experience he gained as civilian aide to the Secretary of War are invaluable to the department and to colored people in particular.

HIGHLIGHTS OF STATEMENT

"The situation has become critical," Mr. Hastie pointed out in his five and one half page typewritten statement. He added that he was convinced "that further expression of my veiws in the form of recommendations within the department would be futile."

ADVICE TO SERVICE MEN

Mr. Hastie took particular pains to urge "the Negro soldier and those who influence his thinking . . . to grit his teeth, square his shoulders, and do his best as a soldier, confident that there are millions of Americans outside the armed services, and more persons than he knows in high places within the military establishment, who will never cease fighting to remove every racial barrier and every humiliating practice which now confront him."

He gave this forceful and sincere advice, he explained, because "only by being at all times a first class soldier can the man in uniform help in this battle which shall be fought and won."

SECY. OF WAR'S ORDER

Mr. Hastie recalled that "when I took office, the Secretary of War directed that all questions of policy and important proposals relating to Negroes should be referred to my office for comment or approval before final action."

He pointed out that he was from the beginning opposed to the separate training of Negro combat pilots, but "my views were disregarded."

OFFICER TRAINING

Then late in last December he learned of the proposed establishment of a segregated officer candidate school by the Air Command at Jefferson Barracks.

"Here was a proposal for a radical departure from present Army practice, since the officer candidate training program is the one large field where the Army is eliminating racial segregation," he said.

Reciting his efforts to confirm the plan and be given an opportunity to advise regarding it, Mr. Hastie says: "The conclusion is inescapable that the Air Command does not propose to inform, much less counsel with, this office about its plans for Negroes."

He charged that "from the beginning the Air Command did not want Negro personnel" and that "resistance bred of that attitude has been met ever since."

INADEQUATE GROUND CREWS

Mr. Hastie also scored the inadequate and, at present, the segregated training of ground crews and other non-flying units of the Air Forces, pointing out that "the characteristic assignment of the 'Aviation Squadron (Separate)' units has been the performance of odd jobs of common labor."

As a result, he stated, "the prospect is that in 1943, even with a tardy resumption of technical ground training, Negro pilots will be ready before and faster than adequate numbers of trained ground crews are available."

The air corps is rejecting applicants for weather officers or officers in other highly specialized fields, and as service (transport) pilots, he revealed.

SERVICE PILOTS REJECTED

"Two applicants were actually instructed to report for training. They did so but were sent home as soon as it was discovered that they were Negroes," he said.

Further, he pointed out, Negro medical officers in the Air Forces are getting only part of the special training in aviation medicine which is available and which they should have if they are to properly attend to men in the Air Forces.

"Demoralizing discrimination and segregation" is the way he described conditions at Tuskegee Army Flying School. He was particularly concerned because, he said, "men cannot be humiliated over a long period of time without a loss of combat efficiency."

RUINS MORALE

He explained: "Military men agree that a soldier should be made to feel that he is the best man, in the best unit in the best Army in the world. When the Air Command shall direct its policies and practices so as to help rather than hinder the development of such spirit among its Negro soldiers, it will be on the right road."

In his statement he said that at Tuskegee Flying School "a Negro soldier guarding a warehouse was disarmed and arrested by civilian authorities because he had challenged a white civilian in the line of duty.

"From then on friction continued. A new commander was appointed. He disarmed Negro military policemen assigned to patrol duty in the town of Tuskegee. A recent member of the Alabama state police force was assigned to Tuskegee as an Army office with duties related to his civilian experience. The Negro soldier was embittered, but the prejudiced community was somewhat mollified."

WLB Ends Negro Pay Differential

Order in Texas Case Puts Workers on Equal Basis With Whites

JUN 7 1943

The War Labor Board yesterday abolished pay differentials between white and Negro workers for a Texas company, saying in a broad opinion that "economic and political discrimination on account of race or creed is in line with the Nazi program."

The board directed the Southport Petroleum Co. of Texas City, Tex., to give pay increases to Negro employes which will "place them on a basis of economic parity with the white workers in the same classification." The board added that "to the credit of the company, this decision" was accepted by the management in good faith and spirit.

The board's opinion, written by Dr. Frank P. Graham, public member and president of the University of North Carolina, said that:

"In this small but significant case the National War Labor Board abolishes the classifications 'colored laborer' and 'white laborer' and reclassifies both simply as "laborers' with the same rates of pay for all that classification without discrimination on account of color.

"This wage increase is made without regard to the 'Little Steel' formula, but with regard simply for the democratic formula of equal pay for work equal in quantity and quality in the same classification. This equalization of economic opportunity is not a violation of the sound American provision of differentials in pay for differences in skills. It is rather a bit of realization of the no less sound American principle of equal pay for equal work as one of the equal rights in the promise of American democracy regardless of color, race, sex, religion or national origin."

The company was directed to institute a reclassification system and to grant in each classification a wage increase of either 5 per cent or 5 cents, whichever is higher, the increases, the board said, will not bring the rates for the Southport field above the minimum bracket prevailing for other fields in the area.

WMC Faces Problem of Smashing Jimcrow Bars

The Daily Worker
New York, N. Y.

Adam Lapin
(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

JUN 19 1943

WASHINGTON, June 18.—One of the biggest jobs facing Clinton S. Golden, one of the two labor vice chairmen appointed recently to the War Production Board, is to assure the greater utilization of Negroes in war industry.

Golden, who is on leave from his post as assistant to President Philip Murray of the United Steel Workers, is in charge of tying together the manpower and production programs. He will serve in a similar capacity as vice chairman of the War Manpower Commission.

A recent survey made by WMC's Bureau of Program Requirements shows that discrimination against Negroes is still a major bottleneck causing unnecessary manpower shortages.

At least 500,000 Negro workers who could be used in war industry are barred from employment by discriminatory practises, the WMC survey reveals.

EMPLOYMENT STILL LAGS

According to the report, Negro workers now constitute 6.7 per cent of the 14,673,000 workers in 16,000 plants reporting to the United States Employment Service on their March 1943 payrolls.

This shows something of an increase over a similar survey made in July, 1942 which revealed that only 5.8 per cent of the workers in the plants reporting were Negroes.

But the report also makes it clear that Negro employment in war industry is not in line with the proportion of Negroes to the population and to the total labor force.

Negroes are estimated at about 10 per cent of the total population in the United States, and are taken into the Army at about this rate.

But they constitute only 6.7 per cent of the workers in war industry. In other words, the number of Negroes in war industry to reach their proper proportion to the total labor force should be increased by at least 3.3 per cent or a minimum of 500,000 workers.

Geographical distribution is cited by WMC as one of the principal reasons for the relatively small number of Negroes in war industry. Two-thirds of the Negro labor force is in the South where only 13.5 per cent of war contracts have been placed.

But the WMC also cites discrimination against Negroes by employers and in some cases by workers as one of the principal factors involved.

Wide-spread discrimination was found not only in the hiring of Negroes but also in the menial nature of their work after being hired.

"In practically every section of the country," the WMC report said, "even where Negroes are freely employed, they are frequently engaged only in lower classifications and have relatively little opportunity for upgrading. This is especially true in the South."

One of the reasons for this is the discrimination against Negroes in all types of training and upgrading programs.

On March 31, 1943 there were only 14,000 Negroes in preemployment training courses and another 6,000 in supplementary training courses. This represents an increase over the year before, but the number is still pitifully low.

WMC found increases of Negroes spotty, with substantial progress in some industries and practically none in others.

The number of Negroes employed in tank factories more than doubled in the nine month period under survey, while the total number of workers increased only 31.3 per cent. in comparison with a total employment increase of only 35.4 per cent.

But the latest figures showed that Negroes still constitutes less than one per cent of the workers in the fireworks industry and less than two per cent in the electrical equipment and metal working industry.

AREAS OF PROGRESS

Industrial areas which WMC said had made greatest progress in hiring Negro workers were Los Angeles, Baltimore, Hampton Roads, Virginia, and Mobile, Alabama.

Observers here pointed out that part of the responsibility for underemployment of Negroes rests on WMC which has not had a functioning set-up to deal with this problem.

WMC chairman Paul McNutt passed the buck to the Fed. Fair Employment Practices Committee which he helped make practically defunct for many months until the President recently reconstituted the agency.

In any event, FEPC is set up to deal with cases of discrimination after they occur rather than with developing positive programs to assure employment of Negroes in manpower shortage areas.

WMC's Bureau of Program Requirements had been preparing to tackle the problem, but this bureau is now threatened with extinction as a result of cuts in WMC's appropriation funds by the House Appropriations Committee.

So both Negro and labor groups are looking to Clinton Golden as vice chairman of both WPB and WMC to give serious consideration to greater utilization of Negro workers as one of the biggest manpower problems.

Soldiers Strike In Mississippi

JUN 16 1943

FLORA, Miss. — (ANP) — Negro soldiers in training at the Mississipi Ordnance plant a few miles north of this town, according to authoritative reports reaching here, went on strike Thursday morning following disorders in Jackson, the state capital, Wednesday night.

The immediate cause of the strike is said to have been the alleged [illegible] beating of one of their number, and the alleged abuse of several of their wives and women companions, a number of whom were put in jail by civilian policemen in Jackson Wednesday night.

Rumors to the effect that the soldier who had been beaten in Jackson Wednesday night had died, which quickly spread through out the city, have since been proved false. It was learned from reliable sources that the soldier was being treated at the camp while suffering from one or two scalp wounds.

During the Thursday morning demonstrations at the camp, it was reported that three Negro military policemen from whom the wounded soldier was taken by civilian police and beaten, had to be rushed out of camp for safety because of threats made by the soldiers who held them at fault for giving the soldier over to the custody of white civilian officers.

FEB 20 1943

The Real Story of 99th Jim Crow

JUDGE HASTIE'S resignation from the War Department sets a new yardstick for courage and integrity whose repercussions will be felt for a long time.

Behind the scenes in official Washington, bewilderment is widespread at a Negro giving up a fat salary and the prestige which goes with a high War Department post solely as a matter of principle. Most of these officials have believed that the Negro was so pauperized that he would swallow anything to hold on to a juicy pay check.

Walter White

Unhappily, these officials have had numerous instances to justify their low opinion of Negro mentality and integrity. But Judge Hastie has demonstrated that the Negro of today is willing to make any sacrifice for the substance instead of the glitter of democracy.

Had not Tuskegee Institute asked that a Jim Crow air training base be established there, the Negro flier today might conceivably have been much farther along the road towards being a real flier. The blame for segregation does not, therefore, rest wholly on the shoulders of white people. As long as we have Negroes who ask to be segregated, just so long are we as a race going to face the intolerable conditions which are now being revealed by Judge Hastie.

Behind the Scenes Story

HERE IS a bit of the background. Long before the United States entered the war, Negro and interracial organizations, newspapers and individuals had been hammering away at the color line in the United States Army. This pressure was beginning to have its effect even on the reactionary Southerners in the War Department.

Consideration was being seriously given to the innovation of admitting a few Negroes to non-segregated Army flying schools. There was bitter resistance to this, of course, by the unreconstructed Southerners in the War Department. But pressure chiefly from Negroes themselves was having its effect.

But quietly, behind the scenes, Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee, was urging upon the War Department the establishment of a Jim Crow project at Tuskegee. On January 3, 1941, he telegraphed me asking that I arrange a "conference on aviation" for him with Under-Secretary of War Robert Patterson, Judge Hastie, and myself.

I wired in reply, "Before attempting to arrange conference, wish you understand I must oppose any proposal for segregated training of Negroes. Please advise."

To this Dr. Patterson telegraphed, "My interest in making available largest possible opportunity for participation of Negroes in all branches of service. Regard question of segregation as academic and unnecessary to be considered in conference. Tuskegee Institute interested in securing Army aviation unit in this area for Negroes. Your endorsement need not be given if same will jeopardize your position."

Sorry Experience At Tuskegee

I WIRED Dr. Patterson that I could not participate in any conference asking for a segregated flying school. However, he went forward with the enterprise on his own. War Department officials who were opposed to the breaking down of the color line by admitting Negroes to white Army schools eagerly embraced the proposal to set up a segregated flying school. Meanwhile, at the famous Maxwell Field a few miles from Tuskegee and at new fields being established throughout that area, training programs were developing into which the Negro could have been integrated.

Instead, there came into being the bottleneck at Tuskegee which gave the arrogant Air Corps justification for its policy of exclusion which has helped to create the sorry mess in the War Department which forced Judge Hastie to resign in disgust and protest and which, far more important, led to the vicious treatment Negro soldiers are undergoing in Southern camps.

FEB 20 1943

Dr. Patterson would be one of the last persons in the United States to want such results whatever the benefit to the school of which he is the head. But the pattern fixed by the laws and mores and prejudices of Alabama spread to the entire country through acts like his. They intensify the viciousness of Alabama.

Tuskegee's sorry experience which is the calamity of Negroes all over the country must and should be a warning to other heads of Southern Negro colleges who seek, as a means of preserving their schools, to have their schools designated by the government for war purposes.

Bureau, Staffed by Lehman Holdovers, Faces Drastic Appropriation Cut

By Leo J. Margolin

Gov. Dewey is ready to cut the appropriation of the State War Council's Committee on Discrimination from $58,000 to $10,000 when the Council meets today in Albany. The staff members are all Lehman holdovers.

JUN 1943

The Committee is the only agency in the state that has done anything tangible about discrimination in employment. It has placed thousands in war work who were previously barred because of race or religion.

One of the Committee's most important achievements was the integration of thousands of able-bodied Negroes into war industry.

Hundreds of industries throughout the U. S. A. are using the Committee's blueprint for integrating Negroes into plants where before they were used for menial, unskilled jobs exclusively.

What the Committee could do with $10,000 is probably very little, but this in part is what it did with $58,000:

¶ Investigated over 500 firms, defense training schools and employment agencies.

¶ Increased the number of Negroes working in Buffalo war plants from 3633 to 7823.

¶ Increased the number of Negroes working in New York City war industries from 422 to more than 1300.

¶ Issued a booklet, How Management Can Integrate Negroes in War Industry, a the first practical solution to the problem.

¶ Held hearings on discriminatory employment practices for the first time in the state and revealed widespread discrimination in employment agencies serving war industries. About 800 agencies are now being investigated.

¶ Helped to get members of minority groups like Jews, Negroes and Italians into firms where none had been employed before.

Although protests already have been made by organizations like the City-Wide Citizens' Committee on Harlem, the emasculation of the Committee will be quietly performed behind closed doors.

Since the Committee is part of the State War Council's budget, the pruning can be done in a closed Council meeting without too much trouble because it would never show up publicly.

Dewey is Chairman ex-officio of the Council. He will receive from Algernon D. Black, chairman of the City-Wide Citizens' Committee a detailed memorandum on the problem of racial discrimination, which, "war or no, continues," according to Black.

Treatment of Camp Stewart Negro Soldiers In Report

Washington Tribune
Washington, D. C.

JUL 10 1943

The deplorable conditions of Negro soldiers at Camp Stewart, Ga., as revealed by a recent NAACP investigation was reported this week to the War Department. Camp Stewart accommodates some 25,000 white soldiers and 15,000 colored soldiers.

The War Department was informed that an investigator from the national office of the NAACP who "has talked with large numbers of soldiers and civilians in Savannah and neighboring communities and at Camp Stewart itself, has found three principal causes of unrest and tension."

The first of the causes the report stated, has to do with the limited quantity and segregated pattern of recreational service facilities on the post. The second concerns the inadequacy of transportation facilities. The third is the attitude and policy of certain ranking white officers.

JUL 10 1943

The report pointed out that Negro soldiers have a service club covering a ground space of approximately 100 x 200 feet while the white service club covers a ground space of 350 x 500 feet.

For white officers, there is a club, but for Negro officers there are no recreational facilities at all.

IS U. S. IGNORING PRIVATE COLLEGES?

Pittsburgh, Pa Courier

Policy of U. S. in Choosing Negro Tax Supported Institutions for Army, Navy Specialized Training Is Criticized

Negro liberal arts colleges have been neglected by Government officials as sites for basic training in the specialized Army, Navy courses, according to an observation received by The Pittsburgh Courier this week.

MAR 13 1943

The War Manpower Committee, which includes representatives from the Army, the Navy and the War Manpower Commission, designated Prairie View, West Virginia State, Howard, Hampton. Tuskegee, Virginia State, A. and T. (Greensboro) and Wilberforce universities to participate in the training program.

All of these schools are ROTC centers and are, for the most part, either state or government supported institutions, with the exception of Hampton and Tuskegee, stated our informant.

CITIES' WHITE SCHOOLS CHOSEN

This is not the case with the white institutions, he said. Out of approximately 500 white institutions selected for specialized work, a great number are strictly liberal arts colleges.

"The basic training will consist of courses in mathematics, physics, chemistry, history, geography and English and all schools that are qualified to teach these subjects and that have the facilities for feeding and housing the men are eligible," he continued, "and although Negro liberal arts colleges meet these requirements they have been ignored."

It was pointed out to The Courier, that in addition to rendering a specialized service for the Government, the colleges selected also have a better chance to survive than those not selected. Government financial assistance and consideration are the factors involved here.

"If this is discrimination, it has far reaching results, and should be called to the attention of authorities," was the conclusion reached by our informant, who happens to be a highly rated American educator.

Downey Demands Probe Of Negro Soldiers' Status

~~Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.~~

APR 17 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 15—A full investigation of Army jim-crowism by the Senate Military Affairs committee was demanded last week by Senator Sheridan Downey (Democrat, Calif.) in a Senate resolution (S. Res. 132), introduced in the Senate by him last Thursday. Passage of the resolution — now under consideration by the Senate Military Affairs committee — would result in a sweeping inquiry into present Army practices of exclusion, segregation and discrimination affecting all Negro men and women in the Army or eligible for Army service.

Already this week, two important members of the Senate Military Affairs committee, Senator Edwin C. Johnson of Colorado and Senator Harry S. Truman of Missouri, have thrown their support to the Downey resolution.

Senator Johnson told the Courier this week, "I am in full agreement with the position of Senator Downey and will support his effort to get this resolution adopted." Senator Truman said: "I am for the resolution and feel certain that it will have the support of a majority of the members of the Senate Military Affairs committee."

HASTIE AIDED IN DRAFTING BILL

It is known also that Senator Warren Austin, ranking Republican member of the Senate Military Affairs committee is favorable to the passage of the resolution.

The Downey resolution, the first draft of which was prepared by Judge William H. Hastie, who resigned as civilian aide to the Secretary of War in protest against Army Jim-Crowism, provides that the Senate Military Affairs committee or a sub-committee consisting of five senators, shall investigate the extent to which the Army has complied with provisions of the draft act that selection and training for Army service be accomplished without discrimination.

APR 17 1943

A most important part of the proposed investigation calls for inquiry into the entire policy of separate, segregated Army units for Negro men and women. In addition the investigating committee is instructed to determine "the nature and extent of any practices in the organization and placement of personnel which accomplish the exclusion of persons because of race or color from the assignment to any type of unit or any type of service on land, at sea or in the air; the extent to which opportunities for training, appointment or advancement in the commissioned grades are restricted on the basis of race or color; the extent to which considerations of race or color are impeding the full utilization and development of professional and technical skills."

APR 17 1943

RECALLS DORIE MILLER'S FEAT

At the conclusion of its investigation the committee is directed by the terms of the resolution to report its findings to the Senate, together with such proposals for legislation as it considers necessary.

In announcing his introduction of the resolution, Senator Downey declared:

"By the end of this year there will be more than 1,000,000 Negro Americans serving their country in our armed forces. They will represent more than 10 per cent of all Americans under arms. Their heroism, their loyalty is unquestioned. The records of such Negro heroes as Dorie Miller at Pearl Harbor offer living testimony of the will of the Negro people to defend the heritage of freedom and democracy which is the birthright of all Americans.

WANTS FULL USE OF MANPOWER

"It becomes vital to the successful prosecution of America's war of survival that the morale of Negro Americans in our armed forces and of the 12,000,000 more who are working on the home front, be not impaired by the failure of any government agency to live up to the letter and the spirit of existing laws against discrimination. It is essential that there be full and unhindered use of all America's manpower in the conduct of the war."

Calling attention to the protest resignation of Judge Hastie, the California Senator stated: "It is important to note that specific complaints registered against the various branches of the armed forces indicate that members of the Negro race and of other minority groups find themselves practically excluded from certain branches of the armed service especially from the air forces of our country."

He pointed out that the intention of Congress and the President of the United States have been clearly set out in the draft act which provides that the selection and training of Army personnel be accomplished without discrimination.

URGE GROUPS TO SUPPORT BILL

Members of the Senate Military Affairs committee which will consider the Downey resolution are as follows: Robert R. Reynolds, N. C., chairman; Elbert D. Thomas, Utah; Edwin C. Johnson, Colo.; Lister Hill, Ala.; Sheridan Downey, Calif.; Albert B. Chandler, Ky.; Harry S. Truman, Mo.; Mon C. Wallgren, Wash.; Harley M. Kilgore, W. Va.; James E. Murray, Mont.; Joseph C. O'Mahoney, Wyo.; Warren R. Austin, Vt.; Styles Bridges, N. H.; Chan Gurney, S. Dak.; Rufus C. Holman, Ore.; Henry Cabot Lodge Jr., Mass.; Chapman Revercomb, W. Va., and George A. Wilson, Ia.

Individuals and organizations throughout the country were urged by Washington spokesmen of Negro organizations to flood the above-named Senators with telegrams, telephone calls, letters and postcards this week indicating their interest in and support of the Downey Resolution (S. Res. 132).

Chaplain Fuller Awaits His Fate

JUL 31 1943

NEW YORK, July 29—First Lt. Luther M. Fuller, chaplain in the United States Army, now awaits his fate after a 10-day trial July 13-22, inclusive, during which he was personally on the stand four days before a board of reclassification of the United States Army at the Military Center, 50 Broadway.

JUL 31 1943

Chaplain Fuller, allowed but one defense counsel, was represented by Judge W. C. Hueston, of Washington, D. C., who is also commissioner of education for the IBPO Elks of the World.

The reclassification board consisted of 10 colonels of the U. S. Army and First Lieut. Kenneth Williams, also a colored chaplain, with the 372nd Infantry, Aqueduct, L. I., N. Y.

DENIES CHARGES

It had been held that Chaplain Fuller brought to America from the South Sea Islands letters charging inhuman abuses Negro soldiers had incurred and it was also held that he incited soldiers under him to believe that white officers over them mistreated them. These charges the chaplain denied, but he did opine that this case is typical of what may befall any colored chaplain who refuses to be an Uncle Tom, who resents abusive and discriminatory treatment to himself and to the men he serves, and who preaches to Negro soldiers that God created all men equal.

In the hearing against Chaplain Fuller, The Courier has been reliably informed, the crux of the issue was not that the conditions or acts alleged by Chaplain Fuller were not true but that he was guilty of making an unauthorized statement. Efforts to establish the chaplain as a "radical" were unimpressive, according to information.

REFUSED TO RESIGN

Chaplain Fuller, some time ago, was given a chance to resign as a U. S. Army chaplain, but he declined to do so.

With no official decision announced to date, it is a complete enigma as to what will be the final fate of Chaplain Fuller as the board which tried him has the power to make many recommendations—that the case be thrown out, that Fuller be transferred to some other unit, that he be demoted, that he be ordered to Chaplains' school, that he be discharged from the chaplains' service, or that he be submitted to court-martial, in which case, he would be re-tried by the same 10 colonels and one chaplain, forming the reclassification board, which, this time, would become an official court-martial, treating the trial as a criminal hearing.

White Officer Wants Nothing To Do With Colored Soldiers

Washington D.C. Tribune

Danner Frazer, a young white Army officer, is not only unhappy because he is stationed with colored troops, but has written his major and commanding officer that being with Negro troops is bad enough, but these troops are from the North, Brooklyn, N.Y.

The letter which came into the possession of The Tribune is as follows:

238th Quartermaster Co.
Camp Sutton, N.C.
May 5, 143

Dear Major:

I am writing to ask a favor, something I don't like to do, but I am up against a situation that I can't handle. I don't know whether you will be able to help me or whether you will feel that you want to but if you can please do because I am desperate.

As you probably know I am with a colored outfit and unhappy as the devil over the situation. I have tried every way I know to get transferred but with no results. I have been reliably informed that the only way to get something like this accomplished is to have some one in authority requisition you or request a transfer for you. I thought that perhaps you might have some connections in Washington that might be able to help me. I am anxious to get out of Quartermaster, altogether but if this is not possible I will be perfectly satisfied with some white outfit. If you don't feel that you can do anything I will understand perfectly if you can please try for me, I am at the point of distraction, it isn't bad enough they had to be negroes, they had to be from Brooklyn.

I regret that my first letter to you had to be asking a favor but I am such a poor correspondent that I have put off writing until now, please forgive me. I still think of your visits to me at Camp Lee, I believe they made me feel better than anything that ever happened to me, I was really a homesick little boy.

JUN 14 1943

Clara joins me in sending regards to you and Marie

sincerely

Danner Frazer.

P. S. In regards to the above, I am not afraid to get into a fighting outfit in fact I would love it. I applied for the parachute troops but Army Ground Forces didn't favorably Consider it, reason being no facilities to train Quartermaster officers. You see, no one wants Q.M. officers not even themselves.

Chaplain Fuller's Trial Bares Evils Troops Endure

Peoples Voice

New York, N. Y.

The reclassification trial of Chaplain Luther M. Fuller, conducted by a board of five commissioned officers at 50 Broadway, continued into the eighth day with the outcome in doubt. The army chaplain is charged with preaching inflammatory sermons to Negro soldiers in war areas.

Information published in PV the day the trial opened, to the effect that the board should consist of at least one chaplain, caused Colonel George Chase Lewis, chairman of the board, to appoint two chaplains—one white and one colored. The colonel admitted that the "defendants" right to have at least one chaplain on the board had not occurred to him. There were five copies of PV on hand when the proceedings got under way last Wednesday.

Warrant Officer's Testimony Highlights Proceedings

Warrant Officer Brandon, who formerly was a first sergeant with Chaplain Fuller in the South Pacific, was the star witness for the defense. Brandon, in New York to attend Officer Candidates School, resigned from the army and sacrificed his commission to come to the aid of the beleaguered chaplain.

JUL 31 1943

Testimony by Brandon destroyed the secret report submitted by the prosecution with every reason to believe that it would incriminate Fuller. Statement had been secured from the personnel of Fuller's former regiment to prove the case against him, but when they were read Brandon branded them as atrocious lies that disgraced democracy and decency.

JUL 31 1943

Still Hopes for Vindication

Because the government does not appear to have proven its case against him, Chaplain Fuller is still hopeful of vindication. One thing is certain, no matter what the decision, the trial has done much to expose the brutality suffered by many Negroes in the armed services.

The brutal frankness,

HONORABLE WM. H. HASTIE LAYS HIS CARDS ON THE TABLE !

Reactionary policies and discriminatory practices of the Army Air Forces in matters affecting Negroes were the immedite cause of my resignation as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War.

The Army Air Forces are growing in importance and independence. In the post war period they may become the greatest single component of the armed services. Biased policies and harmful practices established in this branch of the Army an all too easily infect other branches as well. The situation had become critical. Yet, the whole course of my dealings with the Army Air Forces convinced me that further expression of my views in the form of recommendations within the Department would be futile. I therefore, took the only course which can, I believe, bring results. Public opinion is still the strongest force in American life.

To the Negro soldier and those who influence his thinking, I say with all the force and sincerity at my command that the man in uniform must grit his teeth, square his shoulders and do his best as a soldier, confident that there are millions of Americans outside of the armed services, and more persons than he knows in high places within the military establishment, who will never cease fighting to remove every racial barrier and every humiliating practice which now confront him. But only by being at all times a first class soldier can the man in uniform help in this battle which shall be fought and won.

When I took office, the Secretary of War directed that all questions of policy and important proposals relating to Negroes should be referred to my office for comment or approval before final action. In December, 1940, the Air Forces referred to me a plan for a segregated training center for Negro pursuit pilots at Tuskegee. I expressed my entire disagreement with the plan, giving my reasons in detail. My views were disregarded. Since then, the Air Command has never on its own initiative submitted any plan or project to me for comment or recommendation. What information I obtained, I had to seek out. where I made proposals or recommendations, I volunteered them.

This situation reached its climax in late December, 1942, when I learned through Army press releases sent out from St. Louis and from the War Department in Washington that the Air Command was about to establish a segregated officer candidate school at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, to train Negro officers for ground duty with the Army Air Forces. Here was a proposal for a radical departure from present Army practice, since the officer candidate training program is the one large field where the Army is eliminating racial segregation. Moreover, I had actually written to the Air Command several weeks earlier in an attempt to find out what was brewing at Jefferson Barracks. The Air Command replied as late as December 17, 1942, giving not even the slightest hint of any plan for a segregated officer candidate school. It is inconceivable to me that consideration of such a project had not then advanced far enough for my office to have been consulted, even if I had not made specific inquiry. The conclusion is inescapable that the Air Command does not propose to inform, much less counsel with, this office about its plans for Negroes.

JUDGE HASTIE'S STATEMENT

The People's Voice New York NY

FEB 6 1943

(The statement of Judge William Hastie, recently Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, discussing the motives prompting his resignation, is printed herewith—Ed.)

Reactionary policies and discriminatory practices of the Army Air Forces in matters affecting Negroes were the immediate cause of my resignation as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War.

The Army Air Forces are growing in importance and independence. In the post-war period they may become the greatest single component of the armed services. Biased policies and harmful practices established in this branch of the Army can all too easily infect other branches as well. The situation had become critical. Yet, the whole course of my dealings with the Army Air Forces convinced me that further expression of my views in the form of recommendations within the Department would be futile. I, therefore, took the only course which can, I believe, bring results. Public opinion is still the strongest force in American life.

AIR COMMAND INDIFFERENT

When I took office, the Secretary of War directed that all questions of policy and important proposals relating to Negroes should be referred to my office for comment or approval before final action. In December, 1940, the Air Forces referred to me a plan for a segregated training center for Negro pursuit pilots at Tuskegee. I expressed my entire disagreement with the plan, giving my reasons in detail. My views were disregarded. Since then, the Air Command has never on its own initiative submitted any plan or project to me for comment or recommendation. What information I obtained, I had to seek out. Where I made proposals or recommendations, I volunteered them.

This situation reached its climax in late December, 1942, when I learned through Army press releases sent out from St. Louis and from the War Department in Washington that the Air Command was about to establish a segregated officer candidate school at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, to train Negro officers for ground duty with the Army Air Forces. Here was a proposal for a radical departure from present Army practice, since the officer candidate training program is the one large field where the Army is eliminating racial segregation.

Moreover, I had actually written to the Air Command several weeks earlier in an attempt to find out what was brewing at Jefferson Barracks. The Air Command replied as late as December 17, 1942, giving not even the slightest hint of any plan for a segregated officer candidate school. It is inconceivable to me that consideration of such a project had not then advanced far enough for my office to have been consulted, even if I had not made specific inquiry. The conclusion is inescapable that the Air Command does not propose to inform, much less counsel with, this office about its plans for Negroes.

NEGROES NOT WANTED

But the reactionary policies and discriminatory practices of the Air Forces are much more serious than the matter of ignoring my office. It should be understood that from the beginning the Air Command did not want Negro personnel. Resistance bred of that attitude has been met ever since. Moreover, even now the Air Command views the use of the Negro as an "experiment" designed to determine whether he can do this or that in the field of aviation. This attitude is the result of wholly unscientific notions that race somehow controls a man's capacity and aptitudes. The tragedy is that by not wanting the Negro in the first place and by doubting his capacity, the Air Command has committed itself psychologically to courses of action which themselves become major obstacles to the success of Negroes in the Air Forces.

The Negro program of the Air Forces began some two years ago with the organization of several so-called "Aviation Squadrons (Separate)." These units, now greatly increased in number, were organized to serve no specific military need. They have never had a defined function. Except as individual commanders on their own initiative have found some military function for particular small groups of men, the characteristic assignment of the "Aviation Squadron (Separate)" has been the performance of odd jobs of common labor which arise from time to time at air fields.

There are no equivalent white organizations. "Aviation Squadrons (Separate)" would never have come into existence except for the necessity of making some provision for Negro enlisted men in the Air Forces. Reluctant to use Negroes at all, the Air Command started off on the wrong foot by organizing some Negro labor units, while every effort was being made to recruit white volunteers with mechanical ability for skilled service.

Somewhat later, in order to provide enlisted technicians for the new air base at Tuskegee, a few Negro soldiers were accepted for technical training at Chanute Field where a large school is maintained. The men were well received and did excellent work. I urged the importance of continuing such training of Negroes in this existing unsegregated school. But the program stopped with the first group. The Air Forces then made efforts to set up segregated technical training at Tuskegee or elsewhere. Difficulties were encountered.

NO GROUND CREWS

Meanwhile, successive classes of Negro pilots were being trained, but no technical schooling of supporting ground crew members was in progress. Thus, even the segregated program got badly out of balance in the effort to effect its extension. The prospect is that in 1943, even with a tardy resumption of technical ground training, Negro pilots will be ready before and faster than adequate numbers of trained ground crews are available.

The Air Forces also are rejecting Negro applicants who wish to become weather officers or officers in other highly specialized technical fields. A few such men were trained for Tuskegee. But for a period of more than six months, all qualified Negro candidates have had their completed applications returned to them with the information that the Air Forces need no more Negro weather officers.

The Air Forces, however, do need large numbers of additional weather officers so badly that white volunteers are being solicited and accepted, despite a general policy against voluntary enlistments in the Army. Yet, it is unthinkable to those in authority that a Negro officer can fill such a position except at Tuskegee. The same situation exists in armament and engineering, both ground specialties for which the Air Forces have been accepting cadets generally, but refusing Negroes.

To date, all Negro applicants, a number of them well and fully qualified for appointment as Army service pilots, have been rejected. Two applicants were actually instructed to report for training. They did so but were sent home as soon as it was discovered that they were Negroes. I am advised that this matter is receiving further study. The simple fact is that the Air Command does not want Negro pilots flying in and out of various fields, eating, sleeping and mingling with other personnel, as a service pilot must do in carrying out his various missions.

TRAINING INCOMPLETE

Negro medical officers in the Air Forces are getting only part of the special training in aviation medicine which is available. They are not admitted to the principal school of aviation medicine at Randolph Field. Even the branch school program in which it is represented that Negro officers share without discrimination is in fact discriminatory. Many white officers enrolled at branch schools of aviation medicine have the opportunity of full time resident study. The Negro officer is permitted to commute periodically from his home station at Tuskegee for work at the Maxwell Field branch school. Such grudging partial tender of makeshift schemes may be expected to continue unless a genuine change of racial attitude and policy occurs in the Air Command.

While Negro trainees and cadets at the Tuskegee Air Base have done well from a strictly technical point of view, they have suffered such demoralizing discrimination and segregation that, in my judgment, the entire future of the Negro in combat aviation is in danger. Men cannot be humiliated over a long period of time without a loss of combat efficiency.

Specifically, Negro and white officers serving at Tuskegee in the common enterprise of training Negroes for air combat have separate messes. They are not permitted to have quarters in the same building. Separate toilet facilities have been provided. If the group of white officers at Tuskegee insist upon this—and I have no evidence that they do—they are psychologically unsuited to train Negroes for combat. If they do not so insist, the racial attitude of the local commander or of higher authority is all the more apparent.

Despite original design to advance Negro officers and to place them in posts of administrative responsibility at Tuskegee as rapidly as they should qualify, that design is not being carried out in the post administration, except in the station hospital.

Fundamentally, it seems to me the Air Command has either failed to comprehend or failed to care that its policies and practices are tending to tear down rather than build up the pride, dignity and self respect which Negro soldiers, like all other soldiers, must possess if they are to achieve maximum combat efficiency. Military men agree that a soldier should be made to feel that he is the best man, in the best unit in the best Army in the world. When the Air Command shall direct its policies and practices so as to help rather than hinder the development of such spirit among its Negro soldiers, it will be on the right road.

Race Teachers For Whites In Dixie—But Not For Long

(Special to the Defender)

BILOXI, Miss. — Negro teachers at an all-white school in the heart of Mississippi! Sounds impossible?

Well, it happened here but not for long.

MAR 20 1943

A small group of Negro civilian instructors of Army Air Corps who have been teaching white students here and at Gulfport ground crew work for the past several weeks have been given their transfers . . .

way up north of the Mason and Dixon line.

"Insubordination" was the reason given at Keesler field here for the transfers but that's the way Negro-hating Southern officers described that instructors' protests against being kept idle for days at a time while important work remained undone.

MAR 20 1943

The instructors complained to the commanding officer at Keesler field that they had been given no assignments. The transfer came through shortly afterwards.

It was reported that the colonel in charge is a typical Negro-hating Southerner and friend of Senator (Back to Africa) Bilbo. The officer, it is said, opposed the Negro instructors from the very day of their arrival, and soon thereafter, the only Negro who had been giving instruction to the whites stationed there, was relieved of his duties.

MAR 20 1943

Later, after repeated protests to their immediate superior, one of the instructors was given a job painting a fence!

The Negro civilian instructors, who had all completed a six-months rigid training period at Chanute Field, were assigned to Keesler Field to train white enlisted men of the Army Air corps as members of ground crews assigned to the maintenance and repair of Army airplanes.

These colored men were experts in carburetion work, in the upkeep and repair of planes and in the technical inspection of aircraft. As civilian instructors they were to impart this knowledge to student enlisted men so that the latter in turn would be qualified to serve as crew chiefs of ground crews at various Army Air fields, wherever located.

MAR 20 1943

According to reports from Biloxi, when these skilled civilians arrived at Keesler Field, there was only one Negro serving as instructor in aircraft maintenance. After weeks of inactivity, with nothing to do but while away the time, the instructors are said to have counselled together and decided to write a letter of protest to the colonel, in command at the flying field.

MAR 20 1943

The men stationed at Keesler field were the following: John P. Davies, Jr., Cleveland J. Franks, Herbert P. Hibler, William G. Isaam, Lennie Lyons, Grover C. Nash (pilot) and the only colored pilot at the field: Millard C. Williams, James V. Cheeks, and Miss Ada Harney, only woman instructor at the field.

In marked contrast to the treatment accorded the men at Keesler Field was the friendly and cordial manner in which the Negro instructors at Gulfport Field were welcomed by both officers and civilians.

MAR 20 1943

Treated Well At Gulfport

The men at Gulfport Field, only six miles from Biloxi, declare they were extended every courtesy by Colonel Jewett, commanding officer. They received full cooperation from both officers and men and they couldn't have been better treated in any city in the North.

The mayor of Gulfport, citizens there say, assured the colored instructors soon after their arrival that they would be treated as gentlemen befitting their rank and training. This was done by all concerned and the instructors at Gulfport gave such a good account of themselves and did their job so well that they were thanked personally by the commanding officer.

But the repercussion of the Jim Crow attitude of the commanding officer at Keesler Field in Biloxi, somehow found lodgement at Gulfport, the result being that when the removal order came through for the Negro instructors, those at Gulfport were also transferred.

The men at Keesler Field, it is reported, have been transferred back to Chanute Field, those at Gulfport, to Lincoln Field, Nebraska. The instructors at Gulfport were headed by Col. John Robinson, an expert in aerodynamics and a noted flyer, who reportedly had 1,000 hours of combat duty while with the air force of Emperor Haile Selassie in Ethiopia.

Others of Colonel Robinson's crew at Gulfport, were: Lloyd A. Williams, Jr., Charles F. Bailey, Simon N. Davis, Jr., William L. Evans, Jr., L. Goudea, Alvin Harrison, Alfred Kelker, Robert Lucas, Walter F. Murray Samuel E. Watson, Radcliffe Woolford and Ware Pendleton.

WHY TRAINED NEGRO UNITS REMAIN AT DES MOINES?

New York, N. Y.—Colonel Oveta Culp Hobby was asked this week by the NAACP to verify reports of discrimination against Negro WACS at Des Moines.

JUL 22 1943

A telegram from the Chicago NAACP, stating that all Negro recruiting officers in the WAC have been relieved from all recruiting duties in the United States and ordered back to camp was referred to Colonel Hobby. This is not true of white WAC officers who are recruiting.

The complaint from the Chicago NAACP stated that though many of the Negro personnel at Des Moines completed all required training weeks ago they are kept at Des Moines doing almost nothing. On the other hand, the Chicago branch charges, the white personnel is sent out immediately upon completion of training. It was pointed out that the situation, if it exists—is destructive to the morale of Negro WAC and will breed confusion and discontent.

Negro Glider Pilot Grounded

New York

According to an article by P. J. Andrews in the San Antonio Register the prevailing pampering of the South by the Army lost the glider forces a qualified pilot when First Lieut. James W. Redden was returned to the infantry because of some apparently mysterious "trouble" that took place in the small Texas town of Hamilton where Redden was being trained for glider service.

The Andrews article states that Lt. Redden was graduated from Wilberforce University in 1936 with a reserve officer commission. Before being called to active duty in March of 1941 when he was assigned to the 372nd Infantry in New York, he had been an instructor of German at Virginia State College.

MAR 6 1943

Last fall he qualified as a glider pilot student officer and was assigned to Hondo, Texas, for training. He was later sent to the small town of Hamilton where he was to get further training. Soon after he arrived in Hamilton his commanding officer told him "some town-person" had remarked "the sun has never set on a Negro in Hamilton, and we don't want it to start now." The C. O. told Redden to report any unusual incidents.

NO APPARENT TROUBLE

MAR 6 1943

Redden encountered no trouble getting lodging in a white tourist court, the Brown House, where accommodations were excellent, and the townspeople he came into contact with seemed friendly and to all indications, voiced no objections to his presence.

MAR 6 1943

Nevertheless, on the fourth day of his stay, the proprietress of the tourist court told him she was "very, very sorry" but she would have to ask him to move, as some "objections" were being raised about his living in the house.

When the young lieutenant ported this to his commanding officer, he was told he'd better go to San Antonio while an adjustment was being made of the situation. He received these orders on October 27, but the fact remains that he got orders from the War Department, dated October 26, directing him to rejoin his regiment in New York apparently because of the "trouble" in Hamilton on October 27.

The article states further that after "much palaver with bigwigs at Randolph Field, the conclusion was reached that Lieut. Redden would be confronted everywhere with the same difficulty he'd experienced in Hamilton, as all glider training stations were in little Dixie towns of under 2500 population, and all would object to a Negro's presence.

Draftee Arrives In Camp With Bloody Head Caused By Policeman's Blackjack

MAY 8 1943

AUGUSTA, Ga., (ANP) — When 75 young men, two bus loads, left here this month for induction at Fort Benning preparatory to fight a way for democracy, they never dreamed that one of their leaders would land in camp with a bloody wound on his head, inflicted by a Columbus policeman.

The drives of one of the bus- s became angered when the en requested him to stop so ten. Instead of going direct- to camp he drove to Colum- s and summoned the aid of policeman.

MAY 8 1943

The driver accused one of the leaders of drawing a knife on him but upon search no such instrument was found.

Someone had to suffer for angering the driver so it was Isaac Eubanks, one of the leaders, who was driven to the police station. The cop demanded the boy take off his hat; he looked at it and said, "I ain't to wear a hat like this," and proceeded to strike him on the head with his club.

The boy went on to camp, still wondering what they'll have to fight for.

Stimson's Negro Civilian Aide Quits in Protest of Policy

WASHINGTON, (AP)—William H. Hastie, Negro civilian aide to Secretary of War Stimson, said yesterday he had resigned in protest against "discriminatory practices of the Army Air Forces in matters affecting Negroes."

He recalled in a statement that a training center for Negro pilots had been established at Tuskegee University in Alabama over his protests against segregation. Since then, he said, adequate provisions have not been made for ground troops to work with qualified Negro pilots.

"The simple fact," he commented, "is that the air command does not want Negro pilots flying in and out of various fields, eating, sleeping and mingling with other personnel, as a service pilot must do in carrying out his various missions."

Was Law Dean

Hastie, dean of law at Howard University here, said that when he took office "the Secretary of War directed that all questions of policy and important proposals relating to Negroes should be referred to my office for comment or approval before final action.

"In December, 1940, the air forces referred to me a plan for a segregated training center for Negro pursuit pilots at Tuskegee," he said. "I expressed my entire disagreement with the plan, giving my reasons in detail. My views were disregarded. Since then, the air command has never on its own initiative submitted any plan or project to me for comment or recommendation. Whatever information I obtained, I had to seek out. Where I made proposals or recommendations, I volunteered them. . . .

"But the reactionary policies and discriminatory practices of the air forces are much more serious than the matter of ignoring my office. It should be understood that from the beginning the air command did not want Negro personnel. Resistance bred of that attitude has been met ever since."

Do Labor Jobs

He described Negro ground troops assigned to aviation as "so-called 'aviation squadrons (separate)'" and said they "have never had a defined function." They are assigned, he reported, to "odd jobs of common labor which arise from time to time at air fields. The units," he continued, "would never have come into existence except for the necessity of making some provision for Negro enlisted men in the air forces."

Hastie said that "a few" Negroes were accepted for ground force technical training at Chanute Field, Ill., and "did excellent work," but that training stopped with the first group.

"The air forces," he continued, "then made efforts to set up segregated technical training at Tuskegee or elsewhere. Difficulties were encountered. Meanwhile, successive classes of Negro pilots were being trained, but no technical schooling of supporting ground crew members was in progress. Thus, even the segregated program got badly out of balance in the effort to effect its extension. The prospect is that in 1943, even with a tardy resumption of technical ground training, Negro pilots will be ready before and faster than adequate numbers of trained ground crews are available."

He asserted also that Negro applicants for assignment as weather officers or officers in other highly specialized technical fields were rejected, although the air forces needs "large numbers of additional weather officers so badly that white volunteers are being solicited and accepted, despite a general policy against voluntary enlistments in the army."

Skilled Men Are Used As Stevedores

JAN 9 - 1943

1500 At Pearl Harbor Are Given Choice As Labor Or Messman

SAN FRANCISCO—Crude racial prejudice by high-ranking U. S. Naval officials is sabotaging the U. S. Navy's program at Pearl Harbor more effectively than any group of Axis agents could.

That startling accusation was made here this week by a Negro sailor just back from Pearl Harbor, where the skill of hundreds of technically trained Negroes is being discarded because of discrimination.

All are being forced to work as stevedores or messmen!

What is happening, the sailor said, amounts to open defiance of Secretary of Navy Frank Knox, who early last year announced a new policy of training of Negro seamen for skilled work in the Navy.

Abused by Southerners

While the Navy has been going through with its new program by training Negroes for skilled assignments at Camp Robert Smalls, in Illinois, and at Hampton Institute, in Virginia, southern white officers in Hawaii are restricting them to stevedore and messmen's jobs.

Further, the sailor disclosed, Negro seamen are being subjected to all types of abuse by southern white sailors. Appeals made to officers for protection from this abuse fall on deaf ears.

JAN 9 - 1943

The resident population of the islands, he said, was at first inclined to accord to Negro sailors the same courtesy, hospitality and privileges granted white sailors.

However, to offset this, the informant said the southern white sailors who resent this display of racial democracy are actively propagandizing the residents by threatening to boycott establishments where Negroes are served.

Minor Clashes

There have been several minor clashes between white and Negro sailors. One, he said, occurred at a movie and while it could not be shown that Negroes were responsible, they were restricted to quarters for three weeks.

Some 1,500 trained Negro sailors, enlisted under the new policy, were sent to Hawaii, it was disclosed.

No effort was made to place them in the jobs for which they were trained. All were assigned as stevedores. When they complained, they were offered the alternative of becoming messmen. Seventy-five, the Defender informant said, accepted.

Friends of his in Hawaii, when they learned he was coming here, urged him to contact the Chicago Defender and air the situation so that it might become known to high naval officials in Washington.

JAN 9 - 1943

See Dangers

Because the majority of the navy officers in Hawaii are southerners, especially the higher ranking ones, they see no injustice because the treatment of the Negro sailors is in conformity with either navy tradition or in the provincial southern pattern with which they are familiar.

The seaman said he knew he was violating regulations but he felt himself justified since telling the story to the press seemed the only way to bring the matter to the attention of responsible persons.

Because of the unrest, and low morale of the Negro sailors, he predicted a serious racial crisis unless steps are taken to immediately remedy the situation.

"The boys," he said, referring to the Negro sailors, "would be very susceptible to the propaganda of any person offering them relief from all the Hell they're going through. I look forward with dread to the day when I'll have to return, and if I can I'm going to try to stay right here."

Time for Action By War Dep't

The worker New York, N.Y

By Ben Davis, Jr.

Public attention was turned upon the system of discrimination in our armed forces by the dramatic resignation last week of William H. Hastie, Negro, former Federal Judge and Dean of the Howard University Law School, from the post of Civilian Aide to Secretary of War Stimson.

According to newspaper reports, Hastie gave as his reason for withdrawing, the "reactionary policies and discriminatory practices" against Negroes in the Army Air Forces. "This attitude" (of discrimination.—B. D.), Hastie went on to say, "is the result of wholly unscientific notions that race somehow controls a man's capacity and aptitudes. . . . The Air Command has committed itself psychologically to courses of action which themselves become major obstacles to the success of Negroes in the Air forces."

FEB 7 - 1943

According to the newspaper account, when Hastie was first appointed, all plans relating to Negro troops were to be referred to his office for approval; but that when he opposed one segregated project, nothing else was referred to him. And finally, the straw that broke the camel's back was the proposal of another jim-crow officer-candidate school in Missouri, which culminated a whole series of discriminatory pin-pricks and sledge-hammer blows against the principle of equality in the armed forces.

No one can deny that discrimination still exists to a stupid and dangerous degree in the armed forces, and that this discrimination impairs the national morale and the fighting spirit of our heroic armed forces. The evil stands out all the more because the trend in the country is the other way. Labor and the people are learning—in the course of a total people's war—that jim-crow helps Hitler and hurts them.

President Roosevelt's executive order against discrimination in industry establishes the principle of a progressive policy on Negro rights, although that policy is not being applied with vigor and impartiality.

The hitherto lily-whie air service now has Negro members, the 99th Pursuit Squadron. The bars against Negroes in the Marines have been broken down and the ban against Negroes in the Navy in any except mess service was cracked by the sentiment of the people, the patriotic generosity of Joe Louis, and the "disobedient" heroism of Dorie Miller at Pearl Harbor, who manned a machine gun when he was supposed to confine his services to waiting tables. Negroes and whites are trained for officers commission in even one Southern camp, and the world has not come to an end.

These new opportunities for colored citizens to serve their country and to bring their talents into play have been opened up although they are still marred by discrimination, segregation, and "token" acceptance of Negroes in the newly opened fields.

MORE ATROCITIES

FEB 7 - 1943

The fundamental reason why atrocities take place in our armed forces against Negroes and why needless antagonism and frayed tempers occasionally arise among Negro and white troops, is because of the system of segregation, which is but another form of discrimination. For wherever there's segregation, the Negro comes out on the little end of the horn.

This has been particularly true on public carriers, where a Negro army nurse recently was beaten because she refused to vacate the rear seat of a bus in Alabama. Similar occurrences have taken place against Negro soldiers. An able discussion of this issue in the Lawyers Guild Review of November, 1942, correctly points out that the Office of Defense Transportation should assure Negro soldiers equality in public carriers.

In Louisiana, last November, a Negro military policeman, Raymond Carr, was killed while on duty by a state policeman because the Negro MP refused to disobey his military orders. And the state policeman was given the harsh punishment of suspension for a day! White soldiers are killed in these fracases all because the segregated system sets the stage for all sorts of white supremacy—fifth column propaganda—which mocks the very ideals and objectives for which the war is being fought.

FEB 7 - 194

WAR DEPARTMENT MUST ACT

Appeasement of the poll tax—defeatist forces, is dangerous to our victory effort, whether it's in reference to the anti-poll tax bill or to our armed forces. Any lynch attack upon a Negro who wears the uniform of our country, should be considered as a direct insult upon the government—and upon the government of our nation fighting for its life!

The recent defeat of the poll tax in Tennessee, the indictment of five lynchers for the first time in Mississippi, the recent AFL convention in Atlanta, Ga., show the progressive trends for national unity in the deep South. The fact that there are mixed Negro and white regiments in the Coast Guard, shows that it works. The fact that the Navy Department reversed its policy of not permitting Negroes in naval combat service, shows that it can be done.

In respect to our armed forces, it is necessary for the Commander-in-Chief and the War Department to establish an anti-jim crow policy and then consistently fight for it, as a necessity for hastening victory.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt will meet Friday with leaders of Negro organizations to discuss plans for a new Government anti-discrimination commission to replace the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

Feb 16, 1943

McNutt disclosed yesterday that "a number of proposals" were being weighed and that he wanted to obtain the views of outside leaders before reaching any final decision.

Tentative plans formulated by Administration officials, it is reported, call for establishment of a full-time anti-discrimination commission, patterned after the National Labor Relations Board.

'LILY WHITE' WAVES OUST HUNTER STUDENTS

Sweeping New York and spreading throughout the nation, a wave of protest at use of tax-supported Hunter College buildings by the WAVES (women's auxiliary of the navy) crystallized into definite action this week. Negro women are not accepted into the WAVES nor into the SPARS (women's auxiliary to the Coast Guard The Bronx buildings of Hunter College are to be taken over by the two female service groups as of Feb. 1, present students being transferred elsewhere.

The move of the NYC Board of Higher Education (BHE) in approving the arrangement whereby taxpayers children are to be turned out to make way for discriminatory organization has been branded as a violation of the spirit and intent of the NY State civil rights law and the NY City Council's ordinance prohibiting such contracts.

The NAACP, through Executive Secretary Walter White, expressed national attitude when it declared the act to be..."the introduction of a pattern of segregation and discrimination of the deep South into Northern and border states where up to this time there has been no such segregation or discrimination."

Jan 23 1943

Immediately upon hearing of this move a protest group was formed by white and Negro members of Hunter College alumnae who wrote Ordway Tead, president of the BHE, "...We ask you to use your influence to persuade the BHE to refuse the use of Hunter to the WAVES until its policy of discrimination is abandoned."

Councilman Adam Powell jr, Tuesday, presented a resolution to the City Council reading in part: "WHEREAS the City of New York has leased to those two discriminatory services (WAVES and SPARS) the property of Hunter College, Bronx; and whereas this property with an assessed valuation of five million five hundred thousanddollars was bought, paid for, and used, by all races; and whereas such an agreement between the City of New York, the laws of the State of New York, the philosophy of our Democracy and the announced purposes of this war: BE IT RESOLVED THat the Council ask the US Navy to reconsider its policy as it affects the WAVES and the SPARS."

The Council further resolved that the Mayor, the Board of Estimate and the BHE "shall consult with the proper Naval authorities with a view of urging the changing of these policies;"

National leaders endorsing this resolution were Walter White, NAACP; Lester Granger, Executive Secretary of the National Urban League and Elmer Catter, former editor of "Opportunity". Other organizations working toward this same end are the Alpha Kapa Alpha Sorority, and the National Association of Negro Business and Professional Women's Clubs.

Ruth Handy, President of the NANBPWC, informed PV that she had sent a telegram to the Navy Department vigorously protesting the action of the Navy in permitting the WAVES to bar Negro women and that she received an answer saying that the WAVES are taking the place of officers in the Navy and since Negro men have no such status there is no place at present for Negro women. They said: "Rest assured the problem is being worked on."

PV could not get a statement from local WAVE authorities nor could President George M. Shuster be contacted. His office, however, said he would answer a written inquiry.

Judge Hastie Resigns

We learned with regret that Judge William H. Hastie has resigned as civilian aide to the Secretary of War. He had a difficult job and he performed it well.

JAN 29 194

As the Negro's "friend at court," Judge Hastie helped solve many of the problems involving Negro service men. Negro people had a feeling of confidence when the war department sent him to investigate situations in which it appeared Negroes were being treated unfairly.

Hastie fought relentlessly for the inclusion of Negroes in every branch of the army and he leaves office with this accomplished. The Army's policy o real democracy in the Officer Candidate Schools are a tribute to Hastie, whether or not he directly is responsible for it.

As he enters private life again, Hastie has the respect of Negro citizens for his forthright stand for democratic principles.

JAN 29 1943

The man who succeeds Hastie will have a solid foundation upon which to build. His task should be easier because of the sound program begun by the former federal judge.

Judge W. H. Hastie Gives Address At Meeting Here Of State's Colored Teachers

Youthful, serious-minded Judge William H. Hastie, who resigned last January as Negro civilian aide to Secretary of War Stimson, believes that "if we are to win this war Americans will have to become more tolerant."

Here yesterday to address members of the Kentucky Negro Education Association, he disclosed in an interview that he will receive the Spingran Medal as the "Negro of 1943" from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People some time in June.

It was on January 31 that Judge Hastie protested against "discriminatory practices of the Army Air Forces in matters affecting the Negroes."

Opposes Segregation.

He is against a segregated training center for Negro pursuit pilots. Hastie said that "a few" Negroes were accepted for ground force technical training and proved excellent pilots at Chanute Field, Ill., but after the first group no more were taken.

In spite of the restrictions against training Negro pilots, Hastie predicts that they will be ready faster than adequate numbers of trained ground crews are available.

Served As District Judge.

Believing that intolerance is a byproduct of ignorance, the judge is cheered by the fact that as our horizons become broader, so also will our viewpoint. The Army found that soldiers were woefully ignorant of the foreign lands and people where they are sent, he pointed out. The soldiers overseas are getting new interests which should be capitalized while the time is ripe, he believes.

At present dean of Howard University's Law School, Judge Hestie served from 1937 to 1939 as judge of the District Court of the Virgin Islands, the only Negro appointed to such a position. He says there is a great similarity between the island communities and smaller towns in the United States. One difference, however, commented the judge, is that people on the islands are more lawabiding than are people here and they try to settle their civil controversies without going to court.

Speaking last night to Negro teachers and school administrators on the subject "Lessons to Educators From the War," Judge Hastie said that one of the foremost shortcomings of education lies in our ignorance of other peoples.

He said that present Army records show an alarming difference between the stated educational level of young people and the actual level found. Now is the time, the judge remarked in concluding, to add to our concept of education, the real education of people, both domestic and foreign.

Report Is Approved.

Delegates to the K.N.E.A. meeting at Beecher Terrace yesterday heard Marshall J. Murphree, former resident of Rhodesia, Africa, speak concerning the customs of that country, after an address of welcome by Blyden Jackson, president of the Louisville Association of Teachers at Colored Schools.

Approved at the afternoon session was the report of the legislative committee, which recommended that the Anderson-Mayer Act be so amended that the maximum sum for any individual Negro student be increased to $300 for each school year. The committee favored a follow-up on the Thomas-Hill bill, which proposed federal aid to reduce inequality in education. Proposed also was a wartime measure for the removal of inequality in the training of Negro boys and girls for skilled and technical war work.

JUDGE W. H. HASTIE

All officers of the association for 1942-1943 were re-elected to serve throughout 1944. They are H. E. Goodloe, principal of Bate High School, Danville, president; Mrs. Grace Sullivan Morton, Frankfort, first vice president; T. J. Long, Louisville, second vice president, and W. H. "Democratic" Segregation

Dear Sirs: The army has brought Jim Crow not only to this camp but also to the local community. The colored troops have to keep out of "white" places and we have also been given instructions not to associate with Negro soldiers or to frequent particular bars and cafes set aside for Negroes. This was military "democratic" segregation, for both groups had their places. Segregation was practically unheard of in the town before the army established this camp.

The Negro barracks are at an extreme end of the post. And strangely enough, the only democratic barracks are the guardhouse. Here the military does not differentiate—all poor soldiers. But why not all good soldiers? My two-day visit was my first opportunity to fraternize with a colored soldier. He was unable to understand "how I'm good enough to die for this democracy and freedom talk but not good enough to die alongside a white American."

My total fury in regard to racial hatred arose when I was advised during my basic training in the South to "tie my shoestring" when a colored officer appeared. If you did meet one face to face, you would just have to salute him. I wanted to fight alongside "Bigger"!

Hastie Blasts Segregated Training For Colored Soldiers

By WILLIAM H. HASTIE

The Army Air Forces have just announced a new program of five months academic training in selected colleges to be given to soldiers before they begin army flying training. The men will be taught by the college faculties and will live on the campus. Over a hundred schools all over the country have been selected to provide this preliminary college training. But eligible colored soldiers are to be segregated and all of them sent to Tuskegee Institute to study physics, mathematics, history, English and Geography. Men from all parts of the country, men with varying education background, a large number of them already graduates of first rate liberal arts colleges, must be sent to Tuskegee Institute for five months of undergraduate training, just because they happen to be colored.

Even if Tuskegee were an outstanding liberal arts college, which it is not, this newest and wholly unnecessary Jim Crow scheme would be inexcusable. In all the circumstances the plan is outrageous. The time has come when the unholy alliance between Tuskegee Institute and the Army Air Forces must be publicly denounced and condemned. Let there be no mistake. Tuskegee is rendering no valuable service to the war effort in this latest step in its effort to concentrate a black aviation program on and around the Tuskegee campus. With calious indifference to the best interests of colored Americans and to the importance of democracy in the war effort, Tuskegee Institute is looking out for Tuskegee. The school gets its mess of pottage and the Air Forces have a willing and valuable accomplice in their design of keeping colored soldiers out of unsegregated colleges.

Several hundred colored may be affected by this scheme almost immediately. Early in March the Air Forces called to active duty the entire waiting list of several hunlred qualified colored aviation cadet applicants. I am sure of this because of my personal acquaintance with several of the men who were near the bottom of the list and have been called to duty. These are the men who, after the usual preliminary processing, face the prospect of fiv emonths undergraduate study at Tuskegee before they begin aviation trainig.

It still remians to be seen what will be done with these men after they finish five months of college study at Tuskegee Institute. A report was sent from Tuskegee to a leading newspaper that some of these men are to become bomgardiers and navigators. There is no apparent truth to this report. I can find no evidence from any source of any plan to train colored for bombardment aviation. It seems to me that someone has tried to take the curse off of this latest Tuskegee outrage by circulating the false report that new opportunity is being provided for colored in the field of bombardment aviation. The whole thing smells very bad.

There is one further question which we must ask and continue to ask until an answer is given. What about new colored applicants for aviation cadet training now that the waiting list is exhausted? I do not know of any plan of the Air Forces for accepting or using additional colored applicants. Will they be accepted? If so will they go on a waiting list to remain there until 1944? I know from experience that the Air Command makes piecemeal special plans for colored to meet the emergency at hand and then lets the matter drop until another emergency arises. There is grave danger, unless the public keeps the issue constantly alive, that after the group called to duty in March, no additional colored aviation cadets will be trained for a long time to come.

Committee to Investigate Status of Negro in WAACs, WAVES, SPARS, Marines

APR 15 1943

APR 15 1943

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

Washington (ANP)—The senate committee on military affairs will hold preliminary hearings into the charges of racial discrimination in the armed forces preparatory to the appointment of a five-man subcommittee to undertake a full-dress investigation into the matter.

This is the procedure which will be followed as a result of a resolution introduced in the senate last Thursday by Sen. Sheridan V. Downey (D) of California calling upon that committee to conduct a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the status of he Negro and other minority groups in the armed services as well as the WAACs, WAVES, SPARS, and marines, women's auxiliaries.

APR 15 1943

Complaints

Introducing his resolution Sen. Downey declared on the floor that complaints of violations of the non-discrimination provisions of the Selective Training and Service act of 1940 had been made by responsible persons, notably William H. H tie, the civilian aide to Secy. of War Henry L. Stimson who resigned in protest, which complaints have created "anxious concern among large segments of our people."

APR 15 1943

The senator made it clear in his remarks that he is not now attempting to judge the veracity of the charges but rather to point out the intent of the President and the legislation establish selective service that the objective be attained without racial discrimination. He pointed out that Negroes are greatly restricted in the armed forces, particularly in the air corps.

"By the end of this year there will be more than one million Negro Americans serving their country in uor armed forces," he told the senate. "They will represent more than 10 per cent of all Americans under arcs. Their heroism, their loyalty is unquestioned. The records of such Negro heroes as Dorie Miller at Pearl Harbor offer living testimony of the will of the Negro people to defend the heritage of freedom and democracy which is the birthright of all Americans.

APR 15 1943

To Protect Morale

"It becomes vital to the successful prosecution of American's war of survival that the morale of the Negro Americans in our armed forces and of the 12,000,000 more who are working on the home front, be not impaired by failure of any government agency to live up to the letter and spirit of existing laws against discrimination. It is essential that there be full and unhindered use of all America's manpofer in the conduct of the war."

APR 15 1943

Informed of the senator's resolution, Judge Hastie commented that "public hearings of the facts is in the best tradition of the American wav of doing things."

Jim Crow in the Camps

MAR 20 1943

Dear Sirs: I just read the article The Novel Case of Winfred Lynn in your issue of February 20. The facts complained of are generally prevalent throughout military training camps in the Southern area. Take our own camp here. We have separate colored training detachments. These detachments are located at the extreme ends of the camp. Mingling of white and colored troops is distinctly frowned upon. The USO shows visiting camp always stage an extra performance "for colored only" at one of the post theaters. It is considered something of a misdemeanor for a white private to fraternize with his colored comrades in arms.

Thousands of Northern boys undergoing training here unconsciously acquire the habit of Jim Crow—a habit it may be hard to break down at the end of the war. Nothing is being done by the army to help break down the barriers of racial misunderstanding in order to pave the way for interracial harmony in the post-war future.

Air Force Jim Crow Is Cited

Atlanta Daily World
FEB 1 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(SNS)— Reactionary policies and discriminatory practices of the Army Air Forces were given Sunday by Judge William H. Hastie as the motive behind his resignation as civilan aide to Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson.

FEB 1 1943

As proof of his charges Judge Hastie in the statement handed newsmen cited the following eight points:

(1) The setting up of a segregated officer candidate school at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., to train Negro officers for ground duty, the first of its kind in the whole United States Army. The school was established without his knowledge although all matters pertaining to Negro personnel were under the orders of the Secretary of War supposed to have been cleared through his office.

(2) The organization of so-called "Aviation Squadrons (Separate)" to make some provision for Negro enlisted men in the air forces. The Negro squadrons are nothing more than labor battalions. There are no equivalent white organizations.

(3) The failure to provide training facilities for Negro ground crew has stymied the use of Negro pilots being trained at Tuskegee.

(4) The Air Force is rejecting Negro applicants who wish to become weather officers or officers in other highly specialized technical fields, although this type of personnel is badly needed.

(5) The refusal of the Air Command to consider Negroes' for positions as Army service pilots for the simple reason that it does not want "Negro pilots flying in and out of various fields, eating, sleeping, and mingling with other personnel, as a service pilot must do in carrying out his various missions.

(6) Negro medical officers in the Air Forces are getting only a part of the special training in aviation medicine which is available. They are denied admission to the principal school of aviation medicine at Randolph Field.

(7) The establishment of wholesale segregation at the Tuskegee Army Flying School which Negro and white officers are forced to have separate quarters, separate toilets, separate mess.

FEB 1 1943

(8) The failure to do anything about the hostile attitude of white civilians toward Negro personnel stationed at the Tuskegee field, including the disarming of Negro military police and the appointment at Tuskegee of a former member of the Alabama State Police as an army officer with duties related to his civilian experience.

"No Negro Nurses Wanted In Navy" N. Y. Woman Finds

FEB 13 1943

Pittsburgh Courier
Pittsburgh Pa.

By EVELYN SHERRER

NEW YORK CITY, Feb. 11—The story of a young Negro nurse who was among the first to answer that organization's call for nurses for the Army and Navy last week was but a reiteration of the policy that would place Negroes distinct and apart from persons of other races.

FEB 13 1943

Mrs Margaret Behagan, of Brooklyn, and now employed in the New York City House of Detention for Women, was perhaps the first Negro to make application at the new recruiting center for nurses for the Army and Navy at 139 East 36th street, established under the New York Chapter of the American Red Cross. Mrs. Behagan was particularly under the New York Chapter of the American Red Cross. Mrs. Behagan was particularly interested in serving in the Navy because of the various Naval branches that have been open to Negroes in recent months. Upon expressing her preference she was told by the interviewer that "the Navy is not accepting Negro nurses."

Mrs. Behagan, a persistent young woman who knows what she wants, insisted upon learning exactly why she could not be admitted into the Navy.

FEB 13 1943

"Nurses in the Navy," she was told, "serve in a supervisory capacity. They act as instructors to the seamen and on few occasions are they called upon to administer directly to the sick. In the Army it is just the opposite. The responsibiilties of a nurse are more akin to the work they have been in the habit of performing; that is, they tend and nurse the sick; they feed, wash and aid the patient directly. So you see there is really no necessity of having Negro nurses in the Navy."

Mrs. Behagan, because of her experience and abiilty, was assured that the "Army needs her very badly." Despite that fact she pointed out that the presence of Negroes in the Naval forces would warrant the appointment of at least a few Negro nurses to the Navy, she had to be content with a statement that "there aren't enough Negroes in the Navy."

Other "facts" gathered at the interview were that Negro nurses will "absolutely" work exclusively with Negro outfits; that in most cases the chief nurse will be colored, although there are at present groups of Negro nurses under the supervision of white chiefs; that the number of Negroes serving overseas, "if there are any," was not known at the recruiting office because "application and papers of Red Cross nurses do not mention race or color."

Negro Leader Urges Segregation Proclamation

A. Phillip Randolph, the negro who heads the all-negro union of sleeping car porters, wants President Roosevelt to emulate Abraham Lincoln by issuing a proclamation in behalf of his race. Pointing out that Lincoln issued the Emancipation Proclamation, Randolph (also head of the March-On-Washington Movement) wants President Roosevelt to issue some sort of proclamation ending all segregation in the armed forces.

"The fight for the abolition of segregation in the armed forces has become the central and dominating issue in the life of the negro people in America today," Randolph said. "In view of the world struggle against the Axis tyranny of Germany and Japan for the salvation of democracy and freedom, there can be no compromise on the question of the fight to destroy the spirit of Fascism and Naziism in America."

Levy Allowed To See Sister

Alton Levy's sister has been granted permission to visit him in the guardhouse at the Army Lincoln (Neb.) Air Base, it was learned today.

Notification that she would be admitted was contained in a telegram received from the Commanding officer at the Base late Monday night. The permission was extended after publication of charges that Levy was being held incommunicado, with visitors barred and mail withheld as a result of protests over his court-martial.

His sister—Harriet Levy—plans to leave Sunday night for Lincoln, a Workers Defense League spokesman said.

National Campaign Begins To End Jim Crow in Armed Services After White Soldier is Court-Martialed For Protesting Treatment Accorded Negro Soldiers

NEW YORK, Sept. 16—A nationwide campaign "to end jim crow in the United States Army," and "to secure a full and impartial investigation of the case of Pvt. Alton Levy, Bronx, N. Y.," was inaugurated here today by the Workers Defense league, a national non-partisan labor defense agency.

Because of his protests that Negro soldiers at the Lincoln Air Base, Lincoln, Neb., "are treated like dogs," Pvt. Levy was recently charged with conduct unbecoming a soldier, court-martialed, reduced from the rank of staff sergeant and sentenced to four months in the guard house at hard labor with an $18 a month reduction of pay.

APPEAL TO FDR

Convinced by the growing mass of evidence that Levy was convicted simply for his questioning the treatment of colored troops at the base, a group of nationally known civic and labor leaders last week appealed to President Roosevelt to re-open Levy's case. Their communication follows in part:

"In vew of the fact that the major charges against Levy seem to have been his criticism of the treatment of Negroes in the camp, we feel that it is extremely important that you conduct a full review of this case and a thorough investigation of the circumstances surrounding it.

"This is needed to prevent a miscarriage of justice which would not only hurt a single individual, but also would re-act unfavorably upon democratic morale within the Army and the civilian population. The existing racial tensions in this nation are so great that we must be extremely careful not to penalize those who seek to establish better relationships between the races."

Among the signatories of the plea were:

Irving Abramson, president, New Jersey State CIO; William M. Agar, director, Freedom House; Roger N. Baldwin, director, American Civil Liberties union; Rev. William C. Kernan, Lester Granger, secretary, National Urban league; A. Philip Randolph, international president, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters; Charles S. Zimmerman, chairman, Trade Union council, American Labor Party, New York State; Layle Lane, columnist, The New York Age; Morris Milgram, national secretary, Workers Defense league; John Chamberlain, author; Daniel Bell, managing editor, New Leader; Harry Lorin Binsse, editor, Commonweal; Julius Hochman, vice president, International Ladies Garment Workers union, and many others.

Levy is a former organizer of the latter union.

ASKS ORGANIZATIONS

TO BACK FIGHT

Copies of the plea were sent to Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, General George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff, and other high Army officials.

Nathaniel M. Minkoff, director of the WDL Committee on Discrimination, announced today that his organization has scheduled widespread appeals to labor unions, interracial and civic groups for support of the campaign to democratize the jim crow aspect of the military services and to endeavor to secure a reversal of Private Levy's conviction.

Levy's own description of the conditions under which Negro soldiers at the Lincoln Air Base are serving their country, is contained in a series of letters written to a New York friend.

News Service Finds "Brass Hats" Of Army Practising Discrimination Against Soldiers of 92nd Infantry Division

Nashville, Tenn.

Tuscon, Ariz., Sept. 9—(ANP)—Confidential information has been obtained by the Associated Negro Press of startling and sensational discriminatory practices imposed upon soldiers of the 92nd Infantry Division stationed at Fort Huachuca. Sources cannot be revealed for fear of reprisals upon the informants.

The shameful situation threatens to develop into a national scandal, and more important, according to observers, unless the federal government and the army high command takes immediate, forthright action to correct the disgraceful conditions, it is believed that all the fury of an overseas battlefield will explode in this desert community.

Black American soldiers who a few months before had entered the U. S. Army filled with patriotic determination to help win the war for democracy, even to the point of sacrificing their lives, are now reported to be enmeshed in the doldrums of frustration and despair as a direct result of the heartbreaking, inhuman treatment meted out to them by commanding general and white officers alike.

Specifically the shocking charges made by army personnel attached to the fort are:

1. That the commanding general, E. M. Almond, of Anniston, Ala., refers to his Negro charges both in and out of their presence as "niggers."

2. That the commanding general is formulating plans to convince the war department to ship the division overseas for combat duty, although the division is miserably unprepared for such service.

3. That Gen. Almond is not a top flight commander and was not assigned to a white unit because he lacked necessary qualifications. The war department foisted him upon the Negro group it is charged because it was necessary to place him somewhere.

4. That the commanding general orders the post Gestapo to hold a "shakedown" of enlisted personnel after each live ammunition practice to detect possible bullets secreted away for an allegedly planned "insurrection."

5. That a quota system operates in making a promotion of Negro officers with few ever reaching the rank of first lieutenant. Most of the Negro officers are "frozen" at the second lieutenant level.

Information has trickled out of the camp that several white officers including one colonel have been severely beaten up or killed in altercation with enlisted personnel. The officers are also said to stand far behind the lines during firing practice with live ammunition, because they fear a sharpshooter might train his sight upon them and revenge mistreatment.

6. That enlisted personnel is trained with obsolete combat weapons and not given instructions in modern methods of warfare. Instead, training consists almost exclusively of marches and drills around the confines of the army post.

7. That the food served in mess halls at Fort Huachuca is the "worst in the army."

8. That although present conditions on the military reservation have existed ever since the division moved into Arizona last May, Atty. Truman K. Gibson, Jr., acting civilain aide to the secretary of war, and Brig. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis, inspecting general from the inspector general's office, Washington, on a recent inspection here found conditions to be "in excellent shape," morale "high," training "goid," and the overal picture "gratifying."

Personnel of the army post are said to be greatly puzzled over how they can reconcile the [illegible]ous dictums of Gen. Almond and his staff of white officers to preachments of a nation pledged in a war to carry the four freedoms and democracy to the far corners of the world.

Rumors are being circulated in Tuscon that the soldiers are so restive under the "slaveocracy" rule at the camp that a flareup of serious proportions is expected almost momentarily. Only positive intervention of the federal government with drastic punishment delivered upon the heads of responsible authorities is seen as a possible preventative.

Soldiers complain that at a recent meeting of mess officers and mess sergeants, Gen. Almond deplored the alleged waste of food and declared before the mixed group:

"There is too much waste in these mess halls. These niggers eat too damn much meat and bread and not enough vegetables."

Added to this stinging insult are the alleged plans of Gen. Almond to heighten his stature in the army by [illegible] unprepared men overseas as a fighting unit. One army private said "If the Japs or Germans saw us coming they would laugh themselves to death."

"Instead of training for combat through the techniques of handling issued weapons, the men are trained to walk miles upon miles over the rocky mountainous terrain," charged a disgusted soldier.

Morale of the men is exceeding low, according to an informant, because it is popularly believed at the post tha tGen. Almond was not considered capable of handling a white unit and was assigned to the 92nd division where he spews his spleen of disappointment on the helpless Negro soldiers. Further evidence of the contempt the commander holds for his charges was found in the allegation that he sends his post Gestapo to uncover suspected hidden bullets used in live ammunition practice because he fears an uprising of protest.

Reports are current in Tuscon that several officers, one of whom was a colonel have been severely baten or killed by the non-commissioned victims of their race hate and venom. These sinister raids usually occurring in the middle of the night have revealed that some of the soldiers are concealing arms to protect themselves from further indignities and in many instances to save their lives.

Another extremely sore spot with the men is the restriction in rank of colored officers. It was pointed out that when the organization was formed in World War I, the articles of war stated that "All officers above the ranks of 1st lieutenant will be white." There has been but slight deviation from that order, it is charged.

"All of the white officers, who joined the division about 19 days earlier than the Negroes after the division was reactivated in Oct., 1942 have been made 1st lieutenants and captains," informed a camp soldier. "In the 365th Infantry Regiment particularly three Negroes have made the 1st lieutenant grade. When we arrived here the general started a development school for backward officers. In a class of 50 officers whom it was felt needed some "policing up on" all were Negroes.

"This does not represent a situation of inability as it affects one group," continued the servicemen, "it is out and out discrimination. Those 50 men can never expect to get beyond their present grade."

It was pointed out that the educational background of the Negro officers was generally higher than that of white officers, yet the Negroes have been persistently passed over in promotions.

Post officials apparently don't think that Negro s oldiers need regulation field ration sto maintain their maximum health, it was charged, and as a result the food served in mess is a constant source of nausea to the men. Negro officers, it was stated, are so browbeaten and coerced that they dare not object to any of the varied discriminations and irregularities for fear of being "broken."

Particularly bitter are the men over the statements accredited to Atty. Truman K. Gibson and Gen. Benjamin O. Davis that conditions are "in excellent shape" training "good," morale "high' and the listed men who said the two high officials were at Fort Huachuca recently to investigate the post must have known that the reservation is a 'key of dynamite" if they had their eyes open.

Vanguard Of The Disillusioned

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.

AUG

SEVERAL factors, some definitely encouraging, and others foreboding disaster, are immediately evident to an observant newspaperman while talking to wounded American Negro soldiers who have been returned from the North African Theatre of Operations for treatment at the War Department's new Fletcher General hospital at Cambridge, Ohio.

The sympathetic attention and the policy of non-segregation at Fletcher are encouraging. The men appreciate them.

But, the poignant memories of the men speak ill for the American future. These soldiers are disillusioned soldiers. They have seen their comrades in arms killed. By the Axis enemy? . . . Yes . . . but also by fellow Americans attempting to forcibly perpetuate the vicious American custom of discrimination and segregation in housing . . . in recreation . . . in transportation . . . and, in general social intercourse, even in far-off North Africa. And in some instances, they allege, the persons to whom they looked for protection, namely, the white commissioned officers, failed them in the crisis.

PERHAPS, violent incidents, such as the killing of an American soldier by another American soldier, are to be expected in the course of a great upheaval. But what of the day by day insults, about which we have heard so much from time to time, and concerning which, these men at Fletcher hospital, and those who are arriving with increasing frequency, will continue to bring to their parents, friends, and other newspapermen?

The story of the treatment of the Negro soldier abroad cannot be hushed. These men form the VANGUARD OF THE DISILLUSIONED. And therein lies danger for the future.

What will happen upon the mass return of the victorious American Army? What will happen, when men, white and colored, are thrown into the keen, post-war, economic competition for jobs, and, perhaps, these jobs will not exist? What will happen in the great cities of the North and South, still tense from the trials and tribulations of a recent war?

We know the answer to these questions. Detroit was a dress rehearsal. But MUST it happen? Would it not be logical for the War department to realize that the stereotype response to inquiries of this kind . . . "The Army is not a sociological laboratory" . . . is ridiculously inadequate. The truth is, that the United States Army is the greatest sociological laboratory ever organized!

THE MEN in it are still human beings. Regardless of military discipline they are not robots. And even if they were, we must anticipate that some day soon, they will return to a civilian society in which we hope the civilian processes of law will continue to function. With present attitudes, which seem prevalent abroad, there is a possibility that civilian law agencies will be powerless to cope with lawlessness, which has been, and still is being, ignored by the United States Army.

We are again referring to the laxity in the protection of the American Negro soldier from insults while stationed abroad.

It was our impression at Fletcher General hospital that the news of race riots, strikes, and production lags at home had very little effect on the Negro soldier in the foreign theatre. He was too preoccupied in coping with race riots, disdain for human courtesies, and halts in the war effort due to racial conflicts, abroad. — Stanley Roberts.

Boston USO's Policy Is No Interracial Dancing

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. NOV 20 1943

BOSTON — The policy of refusing to permit colored junior hostesses to dance with white service men at the Buddies' Bay State Clubs on Boston Common was attacked this week by Ray W. Guild, local attorney.

Mr. Guild, who is president of the Co-ordinating Council of Colored Organizations for National Defense, pointed out that colored Bostonians were not concerned over mixed dancing, but that such restrictions on the hostesses were in contradiction to any democratic principles.

Leaders O.K. Plan

He said that the policy was approved unanimously by the board of directors of the Greater Boston USO Committee of which Matthew Bullock, attorney, is a member, and apparently was sanctioned by one of Boston's leading matrons, Mrs. John B. Hall.

Instructions that colored junior hostesses were not to dance with white service men under any circumstances were given by a white senior hostess to five girls at a meeting last week at the Hotel Touraine.

The girls had been selected from a group of eighteen who were certified as junior hostesses in August as result of a fight led by Mr. Guild when the Buddies' Bay State Club refused to admit colored hostesses in July.

W. Duncan Russell, white, executive director of the Boston USO Committee is reported as saying that Mrs. Hall agreed to the jim-crow arrangement.

H. D. Hodgkinson, white, head of the USO board of directors, told Mr. Guild that his motion in July for coolred hostesses would never have been approved if the committee had thought that mixed dancing was involved.

Army 'Scottsboro Case Is Uncovered

Daily World Atlanta, Georgia

NOV 4 1943

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Declaring that there appears to be a "Scottsboro case in the army," Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP) of New York has asked the war department to set a time when he might file an appeal in behalf of two Negro soldiers now serving life terms in prison allegedly for raping a white woman in the Southwest Pacific.

The men are Pvts. Ernest R. Loury, inducted at Fort Custer, Mich., and Frank Fisher, Jr., of Little Rock, Ark.

According to the New York congressman, the boys had landed with their units on New Caledonia island, a French possession. While there, they were accused of raping a French woman of "questionable character", and having done so in front of a white officer who they said had told them "it was okay." The imprisoned soldiers also said they gave the woman $3.00, which she accepted.

Later when the rape charge was made against Loury and Fisher, the first investigating officer is reported to have recommended that the charges be dropped. Nevertheless, they were tried before a court martial, found guilty and were dishonorably discharged from the army. In addition, they were sentenced to life imprisonment and sent to McNeil island, state of Washington.

On Oct. 2, they wrote Congressman Marcantonio and asked him to take their case. Marcantonio said he examined the record, considered that the boys had been "framed" and so on Saturday wrote Under Secretary William Patterson asking for a date when the case might be appealed.

Coast Guard Unit Turns Down 3 More Volunteers

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

NOV 20 1943

Men Answered Radio Appeals; National Head Asked for Statement of Policy

BALTIMORE

Three more colored volunteers for the Coast Guard Port Security Regiment were turned down this week when they applied at the recruiting headquarters, 17 South Street, they told the AFRO Wednesday.

NOV 20 1943

The three, who said they were informed by an officer that col-colored applicants are barred from enrolling in the regiment, are:

Rufus Nimmons, post office employee of 1018 N. Carrollton Avenue; Francis Kent, shipyard worker of 1011 N. Arlington Avenue, and James Webster, of 1214 Riggs Avenue, employed at Western Electric.

Heard Radio Appeals

According to their account, they went to the recruiting headquarters after hearing appeals on the radio for applicants.

After waiting several minutes they were referred to an officer who told them that the outfit already formed was for white only, they said. The officer, according to the trio, requested that they leave their names so that in the event a colored unit is organized they may be assigned to it.

The three said they refused, because such a unit would be only a labor battalion.

AFRO Exposed Policy

The policy of barring colored volunteers from enrolling in the regiment was exposed by the AFRO in August.

Commander Howard A. Kelly, Jr., commanding officer of the unit, said at that time that they were unacceptable, because the only duties assigned to the outfit were guarding harbor piers and that colored members would have to give orders to white stevedores. This "wouldn't work in Baltimore," he declared.

Later, Commander Kelly reiterated his stand, adding that he would not change it unless ordered to do so.

Meanwhile, the AFRO has written Capt. A. C. Marts, national commander of the Volunteer Coast Guard Port Security Regiment, in Philadelphia, requesting him to issue a statement of policy on the matter.

Liberal Leaders Appe[illegible] His Case to Roosevelt

PM New York, N. Y
SEP 8 1943

By Gordon H. Cole
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8.—Alton Levy of the Bronx is in the guardhouse today at Lincoln, Neb.

Pvt. Levy didn't like the discrimination against Negroes at the Lincoln Air Base, and because he had been an organizer for the International Ladies Garment Workers, AFL, he said so—in staff meetings and out. He was a staff sergeant then.

Levy was recently charged with conduct unbecoming a soldier, court-martialed, reduced to the rank of private, and sentenced to four months [illegible] guardhouse at hard labor with an $18-a-month forfeiture of pay.

A group of 20 liberal leaders headed by William M. Agar, director of Freedom House, and Roger N. Baldwin, director of the American Civil Liberties Union, and Morris Midgram, of the Workers' Defense League, appealed Levy's case to President Roosevelt today.

Investigation Asked

In a letter to the Chief Executive, these men reported:

"In view of the fact that the major charges against Levy seem to have been his criticism of the treatment of Negroes in the camp, we feel that it is extremely important that you conduct a full review of this case and a thorough investigation of the circumstances surrounding it."

The Army's side of the case can't be told today. Capt. Carroll West, public relations offi[illegible] at Lincoln Air Base, explain[illegible] that the findings o[illegible] court-martial have not yet been published and until they are, Army regulations forbid comment.

The other side, Pvt. Levy's, can be told now from letters he wrote his girl friend before and during the court-martial.

Tells of Conditions

Levy, who is 29, attended De Witt Clinton High School and night classes at City College of New York. He is an amateur writer of songs and skits some of which have toured Army posts. His biggest hit is G I Love You.

Here is his story:

"July 28, 1943.

"I told you, I [illegible] that we have about [illegible] Negro illiterates we are training. Well—they finally segregated them in barracks about two miles from where we stay.

"Most of the whites in charge of them are Southerners. Naturally, as a result, they are treated like dogs. They are kept in camp while the others are allowed out. They sleep on old canvas cots while the others sleep on the new Army cots with mattresses and 'all the trimmin's.' And they are hounded and harassed and yelled at and cursed and insulted and generally treated abominably.

"They're afraid to move. They get no sympathy and no help. It's unbelievable. I have had ever so many fights about it. I've argued and protested but all in vain. Today, the commanding officer asked me if I wanted to take charge of the office th[illegible] set up in the Negro are[illegible] I immediately said yes and was assigned there.

"I have moved down here and am, so far, the only white living in the area. I don't know how much good I'll be able to do for them. I may be able to get them more passes and a recreation hall for themselves. Treatment is usually a reflection of the officer in charge so changes will depend upon his attitude.

"I have been protesting against the treatment they have been getting ever since I arrived here. At staff meetings and in sessions with the officers I have made my criticism clear. In fact, while I have not been the only one to feel this way, I have been the only one to make my feelings public to officers and enlisted men.

"Already I am called 'nigger lover,' etc."

Groups Battle

"Aug. 5, 1943.

"As I feared, a blow-up finally did take place. The other night a group of our boys tangled with a group of Mexican illiterates in the latrine. Knives were used and when they proved insufficient they broke toilet seats in half and beat each other's brains out.

"Four men were seriously hurt—in the hospital. Scores more have bumps, bruises, black eyes and sundry marks of battle. At 2:30 in the morning they found a staff sergeant unconscious on the road, his face and body slashed and his head battered. He's not expected to live.

"It was quite a row! It took a major, two captains, three lieutenants and 15 MPs with machine guns to break it up finally. This time, it just so happens that it was a fight between the Negroes and Mexicans. The next time the whites will be involved. It must be. The treatment they get has so aroused them that some slight incident [illegible] off the sparks . . ."

Quizzed by Army

Early in August, shortly after the riot, Levy wrote that he had been examined by Intelligence officers about objections he was supposed to have made to the treatment of Negroes.

Levy admitted that he had made the statements about the Negroes, but denied other charges which included an allegation that he had termed the general a "drunkard." On Aug. 13, Levy was tried. Chief testimony against him was given by Cpl. Helen Perkins of the WAC, and another girl, whom Levy and other soldiers had met socially. Cpl. Perkins also gave evidence against four other soldiers she had "dated." The others turned in were named Rothman, Greenbaum, Josephson and Bolton.

Cpl. Perkins testified that she had been shocked at the "unpatriotic" and "reprehensible" statements of Levy about the treatment of Negroes.

Levy denied all the charges except the statements about mistreatment of Negroes. As to them, Levy said: "I wouldn't deny them if I could. I said them and I still say them."

The court-martial found Levy guilty on all charges.

WDL Wats Rank Restored to Levy

NEW [illegible] DEC 4 1943 —The Workers' Defense League recently asked liberals to sign a letter to the President seeking his aid in the restoration of a sergeant's rank to Pvt. Alton Levy, Jewish soldier, who allegedly condemned army discrimination.

The War Department contends that Private Levy was court martialed for making slanderous remarks concerning his commanding officer. But it is popularly believed that he [illegible] prosecuted because he decried racial bias at his air base.

The letter charged that since the commanding officer allegedly involved had himself appointed to the court martial, any rulings made by the body are therefore invalid.

Deeply concerned over letters he has received from all over the country in protest to the decision of the War Department to put Chaplain [illegible] on inactive status, Chief of Chaplains Arnold called a meeting this week to answer critics.

He denied having asked for Chaplain Fuller's discharge without a trial, and said that he was sending a letter to a minister to that effect.

AUG 3 1943

"On Clipped Wings," a pamphlet by Judge William H. Hastie, dealing with Jim Crow in the U. S. Army Air Corps, has just been published by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Hastie, who resigned early this year as Civilian Aide to Secretary of War Stimson, served for more than a year in the War Department, and in this pamphlet brings into remarkably sharp focus conditions as he found them there. The pamphlet is, as he explains in an introductory passage, a rearrangement and supplementation of the several public statements he had previously issued on the subject of discriminatory practices in the Army Air Corps, and is replete with incident after incident of the nature which he acknowledges frankly were "the immediate cause of my resignation."

Protests Bias Shown Negroes; Court-Martialled

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa
1943

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9—Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, Chief of Staff George Marshall and Judge Advocate General Cramer were asked, by letter last week, to conduct a full review of the court-martial and conviction of Sgt. Alton Levy at Lincoln Air Base, Lincoln, Neb., who allegedly has been convicted on the testimony of a white WAC that he protested the mistreatment of Negro soldiers at the base.

The letter was signed by a number of Negro and labor leaders, including Walter White of the NAACP; Lester B. Granger of the National Urban League, and others.

SAID WAC BETRAYED HIM

Letters from Levy, a Jewish soldier from New York, to a friend give a vivid description of his side of the case. He charged that the WAC, whom he dated socially "turned him in"—with three other Jewish soldiers—for protesting the mistreatment of Negro soldiers.

The court-marital found Levy guilty, sentenced him to four months in the guardhouse at hard labor and reduced him to the rank of private with an $18 forfeiture of pay for four months.

The letter to the U.S. War department officials said in part, "In view of the fact that the major charges against Levy seem to have been his criticism of the treatment of Negroes in camp, we feel that it is extremely important that you conduct a full review of this case and a thorough investigation of the circumstances surrounding it."

Civic leaders here reported that many coolred sailors and Marines are stationed at nearby Parris Island and at the Army Air Base. None of these participated.

What proved most heart-breaking to loyal colored citizens was the fact that they closed down their business houses and hung out fresh and new flags for the occasion. Levy Not Demoted for Liberal Fight, Says War Dept.

Baltimore, Md GTON.

Pvt. Alton Levy, white, was convicted of making false statements with intent to bring discredit upon the military service and not as a reprisal for his alleged concern over the treatment of colored troops, according to official War Department sources.

The Workers' Defense League is asking President Roosevelt to set aside Levy's conviction on the ground that his imprisonment was the result of his expressed disapproval of the treatment of colored troops at the Lincoln (Neb.) Air Base. Afro-American

Four Months at Hard Labor

A special court martial on August 16, found Levy guilty of three offenses charged against him under the Ninety-sixth Article of War and sentenced him to four months at hard labor at the Lincoln Air Base.

He also was demoted from sergeant to private and ordered to forfeit $18 of his pay monthly for the period of his imprisonment.

Records in the case disclose that only one of the offenses with which Levy was charged concerned colored troops. Two of the specifications charged Levy with making derogatory statements about the commanding general and his wife.

The Case of Alton Levy

New Republic New York. N. Y

SIR: As the president of a trade union, as a member of the Negro race and, above all, as an American, the Constitution of the United States has always seemed to me to provide a lasting hope for a better world. All of us know how unceasingly we must fight to preserve that constitution with all of its promise. Our men are dying abroad for the spirit of democracy embodied in that constitution; we must, living at home, preserve not only the spirit but the body of democracy so that those who return will find a living, not a moribund being.

It is because of my concern for democracy—a democracy which works for all, regardless of race, color, religion or national origin—that I write now to urge your readers to write the President, requesting him to order a review of the case of Alton Levy, formerly a sergeant in the United States Army stationed at the Lincoln, Nebraska, Air Base. Pvt. Alton Levy, demoted in rank and deprived of $18 a month's pay for four months, is now in the guardhouse at Lincoln serving a sentence of four months at hard labor. Because he exercised, within army discipline, the democratic right to speak frequently and openly at staff meetings against the discriminatory treatment of the Negro troops stationed about a mile and a half from the main army base, Alton Levy was charged with "conduct unbecoming a soldier."

We feel strongly that any other conduct but the one employed by Pvt. Levy would have been "conduct unbecoming a soldier."

Private Levy, as I know the details of the case, had at no time employed any unsoldierly methods whatsoever, but openly expressed his opposition to the discrimination against Negro American citizens in the army. Until the hearings of the trial, Alton Levy had a meritorious record of service in the army and had been steadily advanced since his enlistment. A man of his caliber constitutes, in the army and outside of it, the forces we need to fight for and build a better world.

All those who share my concern for democracy should write at once to the President requesting a full and immediate review of the case of Pvt. Alton Levy, citizen and soldier of democracy.

Negro Soldiers v. White Civilians

New Republic

SIR: Your readers may be interested in the enclosed copy of a letter I have just sent to the editor of my home-town paper, The Richmond, Virginia, Times-Dispatch.

Camp Polk, La. LT. HENRY I. TRAGLE

The attitude of the civilian population toward the Negro soldiers in Louisiana and Texas was a surprise and a disappointment to me. There are thousands of men who wear the uniform of the Army of the United States, and perform their duties as soldiers faithfully and well, but who are treated in their civilian contacts as outcasts and as untouchables. I have talked with many of them in recent months, and almost to a man they agree that the army's treatment of them is fair and just and that they get along very well on the whole with the white soldiers. The treatment they receive from the people of the towns near which they are quartered is another story.

I have seen Negro troops unable to buy cigarettes, razor blades or newspapers in a town of several thousand people where there were half a dozen stores. I have seen Negro troops, after a week or more of maneuvers in the field, denied a few hours' pass to go into town because the authorities indicated that they did not want them on the street. I have seen what could easily have developed into a bloody riot stemmed because a Negro non-commissioned officer was man enough and soldier enough to call his men to attention and march them out of a store after they had been cursed and insulted because one of their number had taken a drink of water from a public drinking fountain. These are not isolated occurrences, they are day-to-day happenings, and as such have become a festering sore that time has done nothing to heal.

I do not pretend to know the answer to the problem, but I am very conscious of its existence and of the extreme need for intelligent coöperative action in combating it. I do know that such action cannot be fostered by hush-hush methods, that we must cease being tolerant of such gross intolerance, and that such bigoted prejudice must be fought by every educational means available. These men are doing their job and serving their country and they deserve to fare better at the hands of those among whom they must temporarily live. I look forward to the day when I may ask, as I did recently of a volunteer woman worker at a recreational center in a small Louisiana town, "What facilities are there for the colored troops?" and receive, in reply, more than a stare of blank incredulity.

Maritime Union Charges Auxiliary with Prejudice

Afro-American Baltimore. Md

NEW YORK—Mrs. Terry Riggs Penman, national director of the Women's Auxiliary of the National Maritime Union, warned in a statement issued today that the recently chartered Women's Auxiliary of the American Merchant Marine, Inc., is a "thoroughly undemocratic, unrepresentative and mysterious body which should be shunned by the wives of all seamen."

Mrs. Penman's statement follows:

"The newspapers last Sunday carried news of the chartering in New York State of a Women's Auxiliary of the American Merchant Marine, Inc., dedicated to the aid of merchant marine men and their families. Mrs. Ida M. Roll is described as the founder of the 'Waamms' and the designer of a uniform for its members.

Prejudice Charged

"There has been no statement issued as to who is eligible for membership in the Waamms. The auxiliary was informed by one person who had been connected with the Waamms that there were to be separate officers for branches that includes wives of officers, wives of unlicensed men and wives of port captains and shoreside people.

"Does this mean that there are to be different grades of aid for the different classes of membership? The NMU openly declares that this is evidence of the undemocratic and unrepresentative nature of this alleged organization to aid seamen.

"The Women's Auxiliary of the NMU has been told that there might be some prejudice against colored people. Colored seamen comprise about 20 per cent of the seamen today. Are their wives and families to be denied aid by Mrs. Roll and her elect group of uniformed members?

Should Be Avoided

"The formation of the Waamms has led to confusion in the minds of the wives and families of NMU members. From what the Women's Auxiliary has been able to learn of the Waamms through attendance at two meetings and a conference with one of its sponsors, Lieut. Charles Hopkins, it impresses us as a thoroughly undemocratic, unrepresentative, and mysterious body, which should be shunned by the wives of all seamen."

PHILLY IN UPROAR OVER CANTEEN FOR NEGROES

"New York age" N.Y.

New York, N.Y.

JAN 1 6 1943

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—The Negro colony of this Quaker City these days represents an armed camp, divided into two distinct and hostile sections.

One section is in favor of the newly-opened "Victory Canteen" for Negro soldiers, backed by prominent Negroes of the city.

The other is 'agin" the idea, violently declaring that it represents the very segregation which Negroes in America are fighting during the course of a people's war.

The recreation center's creation was prompted by the contention of some of Philly's Negro leaders that although there are no restrictions against Negroes going to the city's Stage Door Canteen in the Academy of Music, "colored boys don't feel at home there."

Leader in the movement for the spot for Negro servicemen is Thomas (Duke) Morgan, a porter in the model agency operated by Gwen Schoch, and member of the Committee of the American Theatre Wing's Stage Door Canteen.

Defending his position in the matter, Morgan says: •

"I feel that someone ought to be doing something for our own boys. That's why I opened the Negro canteen. As soon as the USO does something, I'll close my place up."

A large group of Philadelphians are incensed at Morgan's move, arguing that it will "encourage segregation."

JAN 1 6 1943

Another development in the much-debated affair has been the failure of prominent whites to cooperate as Morgan had expected. In broadcasting plans for the "Negro canteen," Morgan had advertised that the entire committee of the "white canteen" had pledged its support and would attend the opening ceremonies held last Sunday, in a body.

When the ceremonies came off, however, there was no one present from the Theatre Wing setup. Negro entertainers from the local night spots attended and did their bit, but not one white entertainer showed up to perform.

Incensed at this snub, Morgan said that officials of the Negro union of musicians in Philadelphia are contemplating boycotting requests for donating their services at the Theatre Wing Canteen in retaliation. Authentic sources said, however, that whites had snubbed the "jim-crow" canteen because they had been warned by influential Negroes who oppose it "not to have anything to do with the place."

JAN 1 6 1943

A Negro USO project is slated to open in South Philadelphia this month. The controversial "Victory Canteen" is located in the "Elates Club," South Philadelphia.

Jim Crow Signs Are Removed

Committee Gets Quick Action From Officer

By LAWRENCE F. LaMAR

PORT HUENEME, California.—Signs designating separation of Negro and white sailors in training here were ordered taken down last Monday by the commander of the base, Captain R. N. Needham, when apprised of the conditions by a committee representing the press, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Los Angeles Ministerial Alliance.

Commander Needham, who is new at the Port Hueneme base, was very cooperative toward the committee in hearing the reports and endeavoring to get rapidly at the facts and a solution of the reported problem.

The committee consisted of this writer, Herman Hill, newspaperman, and the Rev. A. Wendell Ross, pastor of Pleasant Hill Baptist church, and president of the Los Angeles Ministerial Alliance.

The report carried charges of a "systematic employment of southern practices against the Negro sailors by segregative and discriminatory methods designed to insure white supremacy, at the camp."

JAN 1 - 1943

Officers Used Insulting Names

These charges heard from the lips of Negro sailors who filtered into Los Angeles on leave, included those that officers and petty officers "freely used the term 'nigger' in referring to them,"; that signs designating races to use only "various camp facilities and convenience were displayed"; that white petty officers assumed a "domineering attitude toward them, and, that men had been thrown into the brig because they expressed their resentment against these policies."

Lt. Com. J. P. McBean Jr., commander of the 34th battalion of the construction battalion, known as the Seebees, of which all 1,200 of the Negro sailors here are members, expressed surprise at most of the charges, and questioned the committee as to the identity of the men making the charges.

JAN 1 - 1943

The committee refused to do this, explaining that some time ago when a few Negro sailors aboard a ship had complained of treatment at the hands of their superiors, their names were published in a paper. After the identity of the men was learned, they were all subsequently disciplined.

The commander denied ever hearing any officer use other than courteous language toward any enlisted man. He did admit, however, that signs segregating the men by race had been tacked in a number of places about the camp.

JAN 1 - 1943

He explained the reason for their presence, by saying that 80 percent of the Negro sailors came from the deep South, and that a large percentage of the whites also came from the same section of the nation. He said the men from the South understood the separated status of the races in the South and preferred its maintenance.

JAN 1 - 1943

At this point these remarks were challenged by the Rev. Mr. Ross, who denied the Negro favored segregation. He countered the officer's claim by stating: "I couldn't attempt to break the law or the custom of the South, but I do, and every other sensible thinking Negro in this state does also, resent and challenge men of the South who come here to bring their southern system to prevail on California."

The minister cautioned against any further stifling of the rights of American citizens merely because of their race and color during the perilous times of the present global war.

The minister went on to point out the tremendous task that has befallen the Negro press and the pulpit to keep up the morale of the Negro in face of such attitudes toward them, which appear to be increasing rather than decreasing.

Signs Must Come Down

The committee closely questioned Commander McBean, on charges that Negro Sea Bees had been restricted to limited areas of a few block in the nearby city of Oxnard, and were being declared "out of bounds" by members of the short patrol when found anywhere else. The officer denied any knowledge of this.

At the conclusion of the 2-hour interview, Commander Needham addressed Commander McBean on the segregative signs, and reminded him that the signs must come down. To this the officer assented.

The base commander also informed Commander McBean to address the officer and petty officers to refrain from addressing men under them other than by their name or as "sailor". It is generally believed by the committee, that conditions in the camp now that Commander Needham has taken a hand, will greatly improve in the near future.

The Negro See Bee's here are declared by Commanding Officer McBean to be of the highest type of men in the navy. They are improving during the short period of their base training at a very comfortable rate.

Aluminum Company of America Agrees To End Its Discrimination Against Negro Workers

"New York age" N.Y.

JAN 1 6 1943

New York, N.Y.

Fairfield, Conn.—An agreement to end immediately [illegible] of discrimination against Negro workers was reached here Friday, between representatives of the Aluminum Company of America and the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice of the War Manpower Commission, following a conference in which the executive board of Local 24, Aluminum Workers of America, participated.

The company, which is one of the largest employers of Negro labor in the Connecticut area, has been charged on numerous occasions with biased practices in its hiring and promotional practices. It is alleged have refused (1) to employ qualified Negro workers for open jobs in many departments, (2) to promote eligible Negro employees to openings in certain departments where colored workers were not ordinarily used, and (3) to employ Negro women.

The company was asked to correct these practices immediately, by an FEPC representative who arranged the conference. Through its general superintendent, Alfred Hinton, it agreed to do so. Instructions were issued to the personnel department to hire colored men to work in departments from which they previously had been barred, and to hire colored women whose qualifications are equal to those of white women now being employed. Details of the procedure to be used in promoting and transferring present Negro employees into departments hitherto closed to them will be worked out in a labor-mangement conference scheduled for early next week.

JERSEY PLANT ON STRIKE

'Jim Crow' Conditions Blamed by Negro Workers

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

JAN 2 6 1943

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Jan. 25—A strike of 500 Negro workers protesting against alleged "Jim Crow" conditions at the cigarette manufacturing plant of P. Lorillard Company at 111 First Street, this city, suspended all operations this morning when 1,200 white employes were forced to quit work as a result of the stoppage of certain key machinery operated by the Negroes.

Later in the afternoon, both groups, members of Local 218, Tobacco Workers International Union, A. F. of L., held a mass meeting in the Polish Home nearby and voted to "stand together" but to return to work tomorrow morning pending the outcome of negotiations in Washington among representatives of the company, the union and the War Labor Board.

The strikers charged that they were being paid less than white workers and were forced to eat in one of two cafeterias, segregated from the whites. They said they were further angered when they learned that the union had been negotiating in Washington over certain grievances without their knowledge.

A conference will be held in Washington on Feb. 2, it was reported, and the Negroes' complaints will be discussed then.

Capital Transit Reneges

"Washington Tribune"
Sat. Jan. 16, 1943

Several weeks ago, the Fair Employment Practice Committee directed the Capital Transit Company to hire Negroes as bus and street car operators. To date, the company has not complied.

Capital Transit had frequently boasted that it would never hire Negro operators, and we believe it intends to make good that boast. While announcing that it would comply with the FEPC directive, the company sent out an appeal for women applicants, and to date has hired 18 white women as bus and street car operators.

In a further effort to evade the FEPC order, the transit company has announced that preference will be given to relatives and friends of present company employees, all of whom are white, and to top it all, the company announced that future jobs applicants would have to submit to blood tests.

While it laughs in the face of the FEPC, the transit company continues to advertise in the daily papers, street cars and buses, and out of town, for bus and street car operators. In the meantime, hundreds of street cars and buses are in the barns because they have no operators.

The FEPC should be tired of fooling with the Capital Transit Company. It should compel them to begin hiring Negroes right away, or recommend to the President that the Government take the company and operate it as an emergency measure.

With the gas shortage, and pleasure driving eliminated, the street cars and buses are becoming more crowded than ever, and service is at its worse.

Officials of the transit company would rather everyone walk than to give in to Negro groups who have demanded that Negroes be hired to operate street cars here.

If the FEPC permits the Capital Transit Company to get away with this contempt, it may expect other corporations to thumb noses when ordered to hire Negroes.

MAY COMPANY WILL SELL US WAR STAMPS BUT NO SOLDIERS' GIFTS

DEC 26 1942

A young woman entered the May Company's store on Howard Street this week and purchased a quantity of defense stamps, but because she is colored, white clerks refused to wait on her when she expressed a desire to buy for her friend, now serving in the U.S. Army, an article displayed as a suggested gift for men in military service.

E. H. Pierce, white, manager of the store, told the young woman in answer to her protests that it was the policy of his store not to serve colored persons. She reminded him that she had just been served in the war bonds and defense stamps department and asked whether this alone was the only one open to members of her race.

Mr. Pierce said he did not know.

He said he did know, though, that his sales staff had been instructed to serve colored men wearing the uniform of the country's armed forces.

The young woman asked whether the management of his store did not consider a colored American citizen holding a vital job in a war industry as essential to the defense of this country as a colored soldier.

DEC 26 1942

Mr. Pierce repeated that it was the policy of his store not to serve colored people.

'Reopen Hearing,' Negro Editors Say

"Daily Worker," N. York, N.Y.

JAN 25 1943

The Negro people and their newspapers "are 100 per cent behind the war effort," in their protest to Manpower Commissioner McNutt against postponement of hearings by the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

This was made clear in a statement issued this morning preceding a meeting of Negro editors and publishers here. They will plan a campaign for the continuation of the Fair Employment Practice Committee as an independent government agency to investigate discrimination against American citizens in war industries.

The conference of editors and publishers will be held this afternoon in the office of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, 69 Fifth Ave.

The statement read in part:

"We request the President to direct the Fair Employment Practice Committee to rescheduled the public hearings which Chairman McNutt cancelled. Wiping out the color line in war industries is not only necessary for the full use of the nation's man power, but is also equally important as a pledge to our non-white allies of the good faith of the American government in its proclamation of freedom and democracy as the objectives of the war.

JAN 25 1943

"The attempts of reactionary forces in Congress and certain high-placed government officers to preserve the color line in war industries furnish fuel for Nazi and Japanese propaganda in Africa and Asia that the four freedoms do not apply to the colored races. The Negro people and the Negro press are one hundred per cent behind the war effort but are determined that democracy shall function at home as well as be a policy laid down for foreign consumption."

Among those attending the conference were Ira F. Lewis, Pittsburgh; Chester A. Franklin, Kansas City, Mo.; Thomas W. Young, Jr., Norfolk, Va.; Roscoe Dunjee, Oklahoma City; C. B. Powell, A. C. Stimson's Aide Urges Assistants To Remain on Job

WASHINGTON, D. C. — William H. Hastie has resigned as civilian aide to the Secretary of War effective at the end of January, 1943.

In announcing his resignation in a statement to the press Saturday, January 16, Hastie said: "I shall have no further or amplifying statement to make until after my official duties shall have terminated."

The entire text of Hastie's statement:

JAN 22 1943

Asks Lautier to Stay

"In the past, replying to inquiries prompted by rumors and speculation, I have stated that, if and when I should leave the War department, the press would receive direct and authoritative information.

"Accordingly, the press is now advised that I have submitted my resignation as civilian aide to the Secretary of War, effective at the end of January, 1943.

"I have asked Mr. Louis Lautier, administrative assistant in this office, who has been dealing effectively with matters involving civilian personnel, to remain at his post. It is my belief that he can continue to contribute substantially to gains already represented by the placement and advancement of thousands of Negroes and the satisfactory adjustment of many employe grievances.

JAN 22 1943

Wants Work to Continue

"I have also asked Mr. Truman K. Gibson Jr., assistant civilian aide, to remain at his post, at least through such transitional period as may be necessary to prevent any discontinuity of effort in matters which have been undertaken by this office.

"I wish to state my sincere appreciation for the measure of support and cooperation which my office has received from the press.

JAN 22

"I shall have no further or amplifying statement to make until after my official duties shall have terminated."

Hastie was appointed civilian aide to Secretary of War Stimson in October, 1940, at the same time that Bejamin O. Davis, then colonel, was made brigadier general, becoming the first Negro general in the U. S. army.

Before his appointment to the war department, Hastie was dean of the law school of Howard university, a position to which he returned when he resigned as federal judge in the Virgin Islands.

He was appointed to the federal bench by President Roosevelt, the first Negro to serve as a U. S. judge.

UNDER THE MICROSCOPE

By E. WASHINGTON RHODES

RACIAL SEGREGATION STUPID, COSTLY

I AM unable to prove with scientific accuracy just how much money and how many lives racial segregation has cost the United States during the present war, but I risk the guess that millions of dollars and thousands of lives have been squandered by this nonsense. It might be an excellent idea for Mr. Elmer Davis, Director of War Information, to dig up the exact figures. If they were properly presented, America might be shocked into action to destroy the policy.

RHODES

Here is how it adds up in dollars and cents: America needs an Army with millions of fighting men. The officials "must" always keep separate lists for colored and white soldiers. "There "must" be separate training camps; and if there are not absolutely separate camps, then there "must" be separate reservations in the same camps. Instead of one theatre, there are two—one for white and one for colored; two sets of drinking fountains; two sets of toilets and mess halls. That is just the beginning of the extra expense. Officials "must" plan in advance ,so that "never the twain" shall meet on transportation and at induction centers. If colored trainees are fit for aviation, the Navy or the Marine Corps, there "must" be special places for them to receive their training. That costs money.

Now a colored man who has plenty of brains, courage and ability may be fit for an officer's rating in the Navy but, he "must" be a mess attendant. There is manpower wasted. During a battle lives must be sacrificed because of the refusal to train a man properly on account of his color. In assigning men for duty, officers "must" use great care to see that colored and white men do no get mixed up. Imagine the time and energy lost in the process. Soldiers are to be sent to North Africa, the ship is all ready to sail, the officer gets his orders mixed and white and colored soldiers are in the same quarters. The whole convoy would have to be stopped until this "horrible" situation could be straightened out. Perhaps the whole timetable has been upset because of the custom of segregation. Perhaps a battle which could have been won has been lost while we worried about segregation.

Believe it or not, industrialists engaged in filling war contracts have refused to employ colored women needed to speed up production until they could build extra special toilets for colored workers. Money squandered, time lost, lives placed in jeopardy, all because of a stupid policy. War plants crying for skilled workers keep well trained colored workers on unskilled jobs. Separate housing facilities must be erected, separate schools "must" be built. In Philadelphia there is a Stage Door Canteen in the 200 block on south Broad street for white soldiers and sailors and three blocks away on the same street another for colored. It does not make sense, but it exists and it is costing every American citizen plenty of hard earned dollars to maintain two classes of citizens in America.

The cost of this war is stupendous. No decent patriotic citizen will object to paying his rightful share of the price of victory. But to place the extra cost of segregation upon the shoulders of all taxpayers, simply to satisfy the yelps of bigots who still think the Civil War is going on, is contrary to the democratic way of life. Make no mistake about it, the dual system which operates in America is costing every man, woman and child, of every class, of every color, and of every creed, plenty of money, blood and sweat. And aside from being wrong it is so unnecessary.

"Cooling Off" Period Slated For Committee

Rumor Says White House Sent Down Going Over Order

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (ANP) —The War Manpower commission's Fair Employment Practice committee is slated for a thorough overhauling and until this is perfected, its functions are to be subjected to a "cooling off" period, it was reported around Washington early this week.

A decision to reorganize the committee, which has been investigating war industries believed practicing discriminatory methods, is said to have emanated from the White House.

It is said the committee's recent adamant stand against the Capital Transit company and its extensive and thorough preparations for the now defunct railroad hearings caused the White House considerable concern.

Jan. 17, 1943

TO BE CHANGED

Considerable speculation has arisen over the action of the committee when it meets next. The complexion of the committee is due for a change because of the attitudes of certain members. However, to date, none has tendered his resignation.

Jan. 17, 1943

At the next meeting, the members will be told that their functions will be shelved pending a reorganization.

Paul McNutt has made no additional statements as to the future of the commitee, nor has he implemented his initial statement on the calling off of the railroad hearings.

The shock of the announcement has not fully subsided in Washington yet and there are those who are hopeful of reviving the issue later.

What the governor meant when he said the manpower commission would have the opportunity to test its power to the fullest now and that the problem would be solved in a normal manner leaves plenty to the imagination as to what transpired behind the scenes.

The full committee is expected to meet on January 25 at which time action will be taken as to what it intends doing and how it expects to function in the future.

NAACP Again Hits Jim Crow In Services

Daily Worker
New York, N.Y.
JAN 7 - 194

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Repeated attempts on the part of southern Army and Navy personnel to enforce Southern race patterns on non-Southern areas were assailed again this week by Walter White, executive secretary to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. In a letter to the Secretary of War Stimson, White said:

"We submit again that the War Department needs to speed up the formulation of a more clearly defined program in accordance with the highest standards of democracy to avert further trouble and to serve notice upon bigots that the decent thoughtful people of the United States, who constitute the overwhelming majority, are going to determine the patterns of action of the country as a whole and not the bigots themselves."

JAN 7 - 19

The NAACP called Stimson's attention to a memorandum issued by order of Major Ralph S. Hardiman through A. J. Brown, 1st Lt. QMC, Adjutant of Headquarters, Second Battalion, 47th Quartermaster Regiment at Fort Sill, Okla., in which were quoted sections 201, 204, 207, and 209, of the Oklahoma Statute providing for segregation in federal carriers with penalty for violation thereof and to which was added the further note that "the following is published for the information and guidance of all concerned."

The NAACP inquired if Secretary Stimson believed it to be a proper function of the War Department to assist states in the enforcement of laws enacted to discriminate against citizens on account of race or color.

Race Craftsmen Wanted For Work

JAN 24 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(SNS)—The War Manpower Commission Saturday invited Negroes possessing any of 25 critically needed skills to join their fellow-craftsmen in war production with WMC's promise that every one will be put to work at the exact spot where his talents are best fitted to help to win the war.

To make good its promise, the Manpower Commission has arranged for "national clearance." This means that every local office of WMC's contact agency, the United States Employment Service, will have complete knowledge of needs all over the country. Through such information every person with one of the 25 skills who offers at a local office will be shown where he can best apply his abilities. WMC already has asked employers to supply the USES with the latest cataloguing of the needs.

JAN 24 1943

The commission emphasized that war plants lack many types of skilled workers.. WMC wants all of them to continue offering their services through USES but several factors, including both need of workers and likelihood of successful search, convinced officials the present hunt should be concentrated on thes 25:

Airplane skin man airplane subassembler, ammunition inspector, bus driver, cord wood cutter, crane rigger, cylindrical grinder operator explosives mixer operator, flanging press operator, internal precision grinder, licensed marine engineer, outside machinist, metal chipper, metal work bench hand, milling machine operator, all-round milling machine operator, plate hanger, radio chassis assembler, ship assembler, ship carpenter, ship driller, ship electrician, ship painter (rough or finish), screw machine operator (automatic or semi-automatic), tack welder.

Skilled men and women of the types WMC is seeking in the present intensive campaign represent only a tiny fraction of the total workers in any factory—sometimes one in 100. But they are so important that lack of them can prevent the hiring of thousands of persons in a single plant or the production of huge quantities of weapons.

Large numbers of these skilled people already have shifted to war work, but reinforcements are critically needed. WMC believes 50,000 or more with the needed training are now in occupations which do not use their skills, employed in nonessential work, or retired from active duty. The need for their services is so pressing that the Government is asking anyone who knows of a person who can do on the jobs listed or a closely related job, to spread the work and persuade the friend to consult a USES office.

No Advancement For Negroes At Ala. Shipyard

By REV. H. E. CARTER

MOBILE, Ala.—(ANP) —Unfortunately in the Mobile area, Negro labor is not being utilized where it can be the greatest asset to America's war effort. This rule applies wherever "defense" or war work is being done, including Brookley field, the army air port.

At the Alabama ship yards, Negroes are not even promised to be up-graded. There are a few helpers in some shops. They are men who have been there some years, before war work began, and in order not to demote them, they are retained as helpers. In almost every case of this kind the Negro is not a helper in fact but in name and pay only; and actually he is the blacksmith or tinner as the case may be. In these particular shops, (blacksmith and tinner) there are men with 25 to 30 years experience. From these men the heads of the shops seek and get information regarding the work to be done.

Fifteen years ago, Negroes did work as pipefitters. Today Negroes are not used, even as pipefitters' helpers. In the electrical department, no Negro helpers are used.

Negro Electricians

There is one licensed Negro electrician in Mobile; and there are five others who are qualified as such. The matter of their being employed in war industries in Mobile is out of the question. They are not even considered for employment as such. In this case, as in many others, the labor union is responsible for the Negro being shut out.

There is one "test case" of a Negro whose application has been on file in the electricians' union for quite a few years. So far as he knows, no action has ever been taken. The only licensed Negro electrician in Mobile has qualified, by civil service examination, to become an instructor in electricity at the United States Navy yard, Mare Island, Cal. He also has very lucrative offers from Puget Sound, Bromerton, Washington, and Chanute filed.

In the boiler makers' department no Negro helpers are used. Men of years of experience are working as laborers.

In the machine shop there are four Negroes whose experience averages 20 years who can do any type of work in their line. Other Negroes, along with them, who have been there for several years remain there as helpers and laborers, having absolutely no chance for promotion or up-grading. Other men who have come in recently, having a few short weeks of experience, are promoted or up-graded all around and over these well-trained and experienced Negroes. This applies in all shops where Negroes are employed.

There are no Negroes employed as ship-carpenters. Only a few Negroes are used in this work, some of whom could easily qualify as carpenters. In caulking and riveting, the Negroes are employed as laborers with no chance for upgrading.

Painters

Negro painters are hired as dockmen at 80 cents per hour, and assigned to painters' jobs even as spray-gun painters. The regular painters' scale is $1.20 per hour. Other painters on the same job, painting behind these Negroes are getting the regular painters' scale.

Training Within Industry

In spite of the elaborate T. W. I. setup, Negroes are systematically and consistently excluded. At least 500 women are being trained as welders, sheet-metal workers, burners and lay-out crews, but no Negroes. These trainees are paid a nominal wage while in training. There are at least 70 trained welders in Mobile; men who were trained at the expense of the federal government. These men have applied at the shipyards for employment as welders but have been either hired as laborers or left unemployed. This, in spite of the fact that sometime ago there was a statement published to the effect that there were no more male welders available. Therefore the shipyards had to resort to training women welders.

Brookley Field

There is as much discrimination at Brookley field, the army air port, as can be found anywhere else in the area. There Negroes are employed as classfiied laborers and assigned to skilled labor jobs, with classified labor pay. This is especially applicable in the packing department. Negro applicants are not admitted to the examination for storekeepers. There are instances where Negroes were sent, by their foremen, to certain places to work and the subforeman refused to accept them, saying they could not work with him or that he would not have them. In every instance of this kind, the foreman had acquiesced to common labor. Others would not accept the compromise. Several girls who qualified as typists by civil service examination, two rating very highly were turned away with the statement, "we have no place for colored typists."

The expressed desire of the general supervisor of depot supply is to keep Negroes out of jobs where the pay is above $1500 per year.

Carpenters

There about about 200 Negro carpenters in Mobile. On jobs where they are employed, they do not work on the same building with white carpenters. Approximately 3,000 carpenters are working on various jobs that are financed by the federal government, but less than 100 colored carpenters are employed.

Brick Masons

Negro brick-masons work harmoniously along with white brickmasons; not only on the same job, but on the same building, the same wall. They are together in the same local union. Their business manager is fair and sees that no discrimination is practiced on any job where brickmasons are employed. White and colored plasterers and cement finishers are not only in the same local union, but have a colored business manager. They all work together, thus destroying the idea that white craftsmen will not work with Negro craftsmen.

Three N. Y. Defense Plants Delete Race References On Application Blank

JAN 9 - 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 7—Three war industries in the New York area, each holding government contracts, have agreed to delete references to race and religion from their application blanks, the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice made known this week.

The three firms are executing contracts for both the Navy Department and the War Department. At the request of the committee, the Navy and War Departments issued directions to the companies to modify their application forms in keeping with the national policy of fair employment as stated in Executive Order 8802

The Pollak Manufacturing Company, 541 Devon street, Arlington, N. J., dropped the reference to race in its application forms. It had no reference to religion.

The Tung-Sol Radio Tubes Division, 95 Eighth avenue, Newark, N. J., agreed to drop its question on religion. It had no reference to race on its forms.

The Thomas A. Edison Inc., West Orange, N. J., deleted references to both race and religion.

In carrying out its duties to correct grievances growing out of discrimination against war workers because of their race, creed, color, national origin, or alienage, the Committee on Fair Employment Practice has sought to eliminate references to race and religion on application forms as one step in overcoming arbitrary rejection of workers of certain racial and religious affiliations solely because of their race and creed.

Asks Assistants To Remain In Present Jobs

JAN 2 3 1943

WASHINGTON D. C.—Judge William H. Hastie, civilian aide to the Secretary of War, has submitted his resignation to the War Department to become effective on January 31, according to a statement released on Saturday to the press by Judge Hastie.

"In the past, replying to inquiries prompted by rumors and speculation, I have stated that, if and when I should leave the War Department, the press would receive direct and authoritative information," read the statement.

"Accordingly, the press is now advised that I have submitted by resignation as civilian aide to the Secretary of War, effective at the end of January, 1943.

"I have asked Louis Lautier, administrative assistant in this office, who has been dealing effectively with matters involving civilian personnel to remain at his post. It is my belief that he can continue to contribute substantially to gains already represented by the placement and advancement of thousands of Negroes and the satisfactory adjustment of many employee grievances.

JAN 2 3 1943

ASKS GIBSON TO REMAIN

"I have also asked Truman K. Gibson Jr., assistant civilian aide, to remain at his post, at least through such transitional period as may be necessary to prevent any discontinuity of effort in matters which have been undertaken by this office.

'I wish to state my sincere appreciation for the measure of friendly support and cooperation which my office has received from the press.

"I shall have no further or amplifying statement to make until after my official duties shall have terminated," the statement concluded weapons.

UP TO THE FRONT

Pittsburgh Courier
Pittsburgh Pa.

BY NEIL SCOTT

MAY 15 1943

Col. Arthur V. McDermott, head of the New York State Selective Service system, informed me during an interview, that there are 5,000 Negroes in New York City still walking the streets who have been served with 1-A cards from six months to a year ago. The colonel stated, though he didn't have to, that these citizens are kept from serving their country because of the Army's jim-crow policy in accepting certain numbers of men according to their [illegible] color. Colonel McDermott affirmed the fact that if there is such a thing as a crime wave in New York among colored people, the United States Army is largely responsible for it. It is a tribute to Colonel McDermott's sense of fairplay that he was willing to release these facts surrounding the plight of 5,000 workers in New York City.

Neil Scott

Take the case of Webster Smith Jones who worked in a defense plant in Jersey, but lived in New York. He was employed only after considerable agitation by labor, religious and social organizations. He was finally hired when FEPC invoked the President's executive order 8802. The plant had never hired a Negro before and its owners were greatly angered that they should be forced to do so now. Jones was a marked man from the very beginning but he did his work far better than average and as a result of his work record, the plant hired several more Negroes.

Webster Smith Jones is within the draft limits and because his government doesn't discriminate in the passing out of I-A cards, Jones received his as did thousands of other young Americans. Jones notified the plant managers of his reclassification as his draft officials instructed him to do. The plant directors informed Jones that since he was soon to go into the Army, the plant would discontinue his employment as soon as a new man could be broken in on his job.

That was a year ago. Webster Smith Jones is not in the army and he is still unemployed. He has camped on the doorstep of a score of employment agencies and answered "Help Wanted" ads so many times he has forgotten the exact number. Always he is asked that damning question, "What is your draft classification, Mr. Jones?" "Oh, I'm in I-A," he states reluctantly. "I'm sorry," he is always informed, "but we can't use you because of your draft classification." Jones has met this rebuff from all sources, including the U. S. Employment service which finds it difficult to get employers to accept [illegible] classified in I-A.

Webster Smith Jones possesses a goodly amount of moral stability and intestinal fortitude, but hundreds of other young men who are unemployed, are lacking in these necessary fundamentals. They are determined by the natural laws of self preservation, to have adequate food, drink and clothes, regardless of any consequences. If it means stealing, mugging, or some other brash method to live, they are willing to pay the price that has been forced upon them by the U. S. Army's jim-crow quota system.

CIVIC SOCIETIES INVEIGH AGAINST DISCRIMINATION

APR 27 1943

Appomattox day, anniversary of Gen. Robert E. Lee's surrender to Gen. U. S. Grant, was celebrated yesterday by representatives of white and Negro civic organizations at an anti-discrimination luncheon arranged at the La Salle hotel by the Chicago civic liberties committee.

Earl B. Dickerson, president of the Chicago Urban league, the principal speaker, said discriminatory practices in industry must be abolished in accordance with the principle established at Appomattox that all Americans are a united people. He said the state legislature should appoint a commission to investigate reports of discrimination in [illegible] industries, and that the Chicago city council will be asked to set up a committee of this nature for operating in the city.

Dr. James M. Yard, executive director of the Chicago Round Table of Jews, warned that "racial antagonism is a tool of the axis."

Job-Seekers Often Spoil Own Chances

Peoples Voice
New York N.Y.

Even with all the chatter these days of equal opportunity, Negro workers are faced with the necessity for having to grin and bear up under an awful lot of discouragement.

JAN 30 1943

You can take this information first-hand from a gentleman who ought to know. He's Lorenzo F. Davis, Industrial Secretary of The Brooklyn Urban League, 105 Fleet place, that borough.

Hard as it is to maintain a pleasant disposition in face of being refused right and left merely because they are Negroes, that is just what our job-seekers must do if they are to take advantage of the opportunities opening under the pressure of war, Mr. Davis testifies.

Thousands of workers come to him daily at the League and he has noted an "alarmingly" large number of persons who tend to show an ugly and embittered attitude even toward those who are trying to help them.

Employers, he finds, see in such an attitude a possible discontented worker who might easily become a trouble-maker. The average employer is not aware of the trials Negro job-seekers must endure in order to be given a decent chance to earn a living, and is therefore unsympathetic.

This negative attitude on the part of applicants, Davis says, is often the real reason for their rejection. The applicant is often prone to interpret a legitimate demand for a birth certificate or reference as "discrimination." Some even go so far as to try to force the employer to hire them.

In other cases job seekers have been known to vent their anger on the agency which is aiding them. In dealing with some of the Negro agencies, they fail to realize that ofttimes a long wait is necessary, simply due to the fact that so many of these agencies lack the funds to employ sufficient interviewers.

Davis' advice to job-seekers is simply this:

"Grin and bear it. If you've been turned down by three places advertising for help in one day, don't hold it against the fourth one—go in smiling, for he may be one of those who feels that black hands are as good as white to win the war—and the smile will get the job."

Union Bares Bias in OPA Printing Office

JAN 30 1943

Serious charges of discrimination against Negro employees in its Printing and Distribution Branch have been laid at the door of the Office of Price Administration by members of the United Federal Workers of America (CIO). The charges stemmed from the OPA Branch of the Union's War Agencies, Local 203, indicated that the man behind the prejudice is Walter Jacobson, Chief of OPA's Printing and Distribution Branch.

Investigations by the union resulted in the following allegations:

- Qualified Negroes have been denied promotions, whites being brought in to fill better-paying vacancies. Many of the latter have been taught by Negroes, an administrative officer told a Negro employee his only bar to promotion was his color.
- Working conditions for Negro employees were intolerable, white supervisors peremptory.
- Responsible officials combined Negro-baiting with attempted union-busting, discriminating particularly against Negro union members.
- Widespread segregation.

Immediate action is expected by the union.

WASHINGTON, May 6—(ANP)—The second issue of "Victory," the Office of War Information publication intended to tell peoples overseas of America's war effort, is just off the press, and true to form, is almost completely lacking in anything that would indicate the Negro's contribution to the winning of the war.

More than a half million copies of the beautifully colored magazine, about the size of "Life," 40 per cent of the press run of which is in French, Spanish, Portuguese, Arabic and Afrikaans, is going out to Europe, Asia, Africa and outlying lands.

NO COLORED SHIPWORKERS

MAY 8 1943

The first issue, released in early February, carried a total of one picture, that of a classroom in which the children saluted the American flag, in which a Negro face was evident. The latest issue falls completely below par and carries none.

In word and picture, "Victory" tells the story for the edification and enlightenment of our allies, neutrals and occupied countries, where parcticable. Currently it has a spread on America's shipbuilding program. The shipbuilding industry employed the second largest number of Negroes than any other industry in the country, estimated in January to be about 100,000, but not one black face is evident in the color plate or mentioned in the copy.

The nearest approach to a "break" is a half-page color plate showing a company of the 10th cavalry. The white face of the captain is plain, but the brightness of the sun might easily lead one to think the men behind him are also white.

The conclusion is readily reached that, judging from what goes into "Victory," Negroes are just a segment of the population in America somewhere subordinate to the native whites and, as Mayor LaGuardia of New York would put it, the "hyphenated Americans," who have since arrived.

PHILADELPHIA. — Arthur Huff Fauset has been discharged from the Army. This news, which has shocked Philadelphia progressives and is featured in the Negro press, has brought an appeal from Dr. Fauset for still greater efforts for victory, particularly by the Negro people.

Dr. Fauset, principal of the largest elementary school in Philadelphia, noted author and progressive was about to be commissioned at the Army Administration Officer Training School at Grinnel, La., when he was informed that he would not be allowed to graduate with his class on May 12.

Back in Philadelphia, Dr. Fauset has issued the following statement:

"Naturally I was surprised when the commanding officer of the Army Administration Officer Training School advised me, on the eve of graduat[illegible] that I would not be permitted to graduate. But when he advised me further that I would not be permitted to [illegible] why I could not graduate, it became clear to me that it was nothing I had done or failed to do at school which had brought this about.

"I am certain that if fair-minded people are willing to search for the real facts, they will find that the same sinister influences in Washington which have been attempting to smear leading characters in our group, like William Hastie, Mrs. Mary Bethune, William Pickens, and Walter White, caused a last minute order to be sent to Grinell, Iowa, that I must not be graduated, and that I must not know the reason why.

"These same forces, have been successful in having students dismissed from various officer training schools throughout the country who fought for the Loyalist cause in the Spanish Revolution.

Dr. Fauset will resume his duties as principal of the Singerly-Douglas Public School in Philadelphia which he had given up last September when he was accepted as a volunteer officer candidate.

Col. Arthur V. McDermott, head of the New York State Selective Service system, informed me during an interview, that there are 5,000 Negroes in New York City still walking the streets who have been served with 1-A cards from six months to a year ago. The colonel stated, though he didn't have to, that these citizens are kept from serving their country because of the Army's jim-crow policy in accepting certain numbers of men according to their color. Colonel McDermott affirmed the fact that if there is such a thing as a crime wave in New York among colored people, the United States Army is largely responsible for it. It is a tribute to Colonel McDermott's sense of fairplay that he was willing to release these facts surrounding the plight of 5,000 workers in New York City.

Take the case of Webster Smith Jones who worked in a defense plant in Jersey, but lived in New York. He was employed only after considerable agitation by labor, religious and social organizations. He was finally hired when FEPC invoked the President's executive order 8802. The plant had never hired a Negro before and its owners were greatly angered that they should be forced to do so now. Jones was a marked man from the very beginning but he did his work far better than average and as a result of his work record, the plant hired several more Negroes.

Webster Smith Jones is within the draft limits and because his government doesn't discriminate in the passing out of 1-A cards, Jones received his as did thousands of other young Americans. Jones notified the plant managers of his reclassification as his draft officials instructed him to do. The plant directors informed Jones that since he was soon to go into the Army, the plant would discontinue his employment as soon as a new man could be broken in on his job.

MAY 15 1943

That was a year ago. Webster Smith Jones is not in the army and he is still unemployed. He has camped on the doorstep of a score of employment agencies and answered "Help Wanted" ads so many times he has forgotten the exact number. Always he is asked that damning question, "What is your draft classification, Mr. Jones?" "Oh, I'm in I-A," he states reluctantly. "I'm sorry," he is always informed, "but we can't use you because of your draft classification." Jones has met this rebuff from all sources, including the U. S. Employment service which finds it difficult to get employers to accept men classified in I-A.

Webster Smith Jones possesses a goodly amount of moral stability and intestinal fortitude, but hundreds of other young men who are unemployed, are lacking in these necessary fundamentals. They are determined by the natural laws of self preservation, to have adequate food, drink and clothes, regardless of any consequences. If it means stealing, mugging, or some other brash method to live, they are willing to pay the price that has been forced upon them by the U. S. Army's jim-crow quota system.

CIVIC SOCIETIES INVEIGH AGAINST DISCRIMINATION

Appomattox day, anniversary of Gen. Robert E. Lee's surrender to Gen. U. S. Grant, was celebrated yesterday by representatives of white and Negro civic organizations at an anti-discrimination luncheon arranged at the La Salle hotel by the Chicago civic liberties committee.

Earl B. Dickerson, president of the Chicago Urban league, the principal speaker, said discriminatory practices in industry must be abolished in accordance with the principle established at Appomattox that all Americans are a united people. He said the state legislature should appoint a commission to investigate reports of discrimination in war industries, and that the Chicago city council will be asked to set up a committee of this nature for operating in the city.

Job-Seekers Often Spoil Own Chances

People's Voice
New York N.Y.

Even with all the chatter these days of equal opportunity, Negro workers are faced with the necessity for having to grin and bear up under an awful lot of discouragement.

JAN 30 1943

You can take this information first-hand from a gentleman who ought to know. He's Lorenzo F. Davis, Industrial Secretary of The Brooklyn Urban League, 105 Fleet place, that borough.

Hard as it is to maintain a pleasant disposition in face of being refused right and left merely because they are Negroes, that is just what our job-seekers must do if they are to take advantage of the opportunities opening under the pressure of war, Mr. Davis testifies.

Thousands of workers come to him daily at the League and he has noted an "alarmingly" large number of persons who tend to show an ugly and embittered attitude even toward those who are trying to help them.

JAN 30 1943

Employers, he finds, see in such an attitude a possible discontented worker who might easily become a trouble-maker. The average employer is not aware of the trials Negro job-seekers must endure in order to be given a decent chance to earn a living, and is therefore unsympathetic.

This negative attitude on the part of applicants, Davis says, is often the real reason for their rejection. The applicant is often prone to interpret a legitimate demand for a birth certificate or reference as "discrimination." Some even go so far as to try to force the employer to hire them.

In other cases job seekers have been known to vent their anger on the agency which is aiding them. In dealing with some of the Negro agencies, they fail to realize that ofttimes a long wait is necessary, simply due to the fact that so many of these agencies lack the funds to employ sufficient interviewers.

Davis' advice to job-seekers is simply this:

JAN 30 1943

"Grin and bear it. If you've been turned down by three places advertising for help in one day, don't hold it against the fourth one—go in smiling, for he may be one of those who feels that black hands are as good as white to win the war—and the smile will get the job."

Is Jim Crow Ban In Army Possible? Civil War A Lesson For Today

Serie,

Chicago Defender

"No person of African descent shall be admitted as a private or officer of any regiment in which white men are in the ranks, nor shall any person of African descent, in any case, be placed in command of white soldiers."
— U. S. Congress, 1863

This is the first of a series on New Orleans, termed by Chicago Defender reporter Enoc P. Waters "mixing bowl of America." Waters has penetrated deep into the heart of the historic city to show how race relations here may be a future pattern for coming changes in Dixie.

By ENOC P. WATERS
(Defender Staff Correspondent)

NEW ORLEANS, La. — What would happen should President Roosevelt, exercising his authority as commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the United States, issue an order abolishing all jim crow units in our armed forces and opening to the Negro every branch of the service with the stipulation that his advancement should not be conditioned by his color?

In other words what would happen should President Roosevelt order the immediate democratization of our armed forces?

Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, and Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox both agree such an order would wreck the nation's fighting machine.

Negro leaders have been told repeatedly by the highest ranking military men in the country, that such an order would be tantamount to withdrawing our forces from the conflict.

Lincoln's Precedent

However in September of 1862, President Abraham Lincoln in the middle of the Civil War issued an order much more drastic than any Roosevelt can issue today regarding the Negro in our armed forces.

The great Civil War President in that year issued the emancipation proclamation and specifically stated that Negroes were to be accepted into the armed forces of the nation.

As much of a blow as it was to the South, Lincoln's proclamation was received with great misgivings on the part of many congressmen and leaders of the Union's military force.

The thrilling story of how these doubting Thomases were converted and how that action by the President was in a large measure responsible for the victory of the north over the South, is told in a documented, objective "History of the Negro in the Civil War," written by James La Fourche, well known New Orleans newspaperman.

Timely Today

The book, as yet unpublished, is especially pertinent at the times when there is great agitation on the part of the Negro for full integration into our armed forces.

This article is based upon several chapters of Mr. La Fourche's book, from which he has permitted me to quote freely.

When the United States Congress convened in 1863, the paramount question before the body was Lincoln's emancipation proclamation which had been issued the previous September, and the most heated debate raged over that section having to do with the acceptance of Negroes for military service.

Many members of the body were opposed to the clause, and so great was the opposition that Congress in passing a resolution endorsing the President's edict, circumscribed the Negro's role in the military. It was clearly a compromise but it established a precedent by which the army and navy, even today, guide their policy in reference to the Negro.

Limited to Labor

A section of that historic resolution referring to Negroes read as follows: "That the President be, and is hereby authorized to receive into the service of the United States for the purpose of constructing intrenchments, performing camp service, or any other labor in the military or naval service for which they may be found competent."

Further on, the resolution declared that "no person of African descent shall be admitted as a private or officer of any regiment in which white men are in the ranks, nor shall any person of African descent, in any case be placed in command of white soldiers."

With but slight changes this is the policy of the army and navy today, 79 years later. Some of the speeches made by congressmen during the debate upon this resolution sound very much like the rantings heard today on the floors of the House and Senate when questions involving the Negro come to the fore.

Said one senator "It can never be expedient in this country to raise an army of Negroes so long as we remain of the proud free race to which we belong. Instead of being a source of power, the Negro in our army would be a source of weakness and discontent, and his presence would drive from the field men a thousand times more capable of defending the country than he himself can be made."

Insists on Color Line

In concluding he said, "A Negro army is a weakness to your country. It unnerves the white man's hand. It unnerves the white man's heart. White men will not fight by the side of Negroes."

The irony of the charges by this senator and many others that Negroes could not fight and that their acceptance into the army would ruin the union cause, lies in the fact that at that very time Negroes were serving in the army and doing heroic work.

The same paradoxical situation exists today, for in the face of mixed Civil Air Patrol squadrons, mixed boy scout troops and ROTC units, military authorities are insisting that mixed units are impractical, impossible and make the darkest predictions as to what would happen should by some miracle the color line in the army be abolished.

The first Negroes to enter the army during the Civil War came from New Orleans and were mustered into service August 28, 1862, just before President Lincoln published his emancipation proclamation which he had written sometime before but had withheld pending a Union victory.

Revokes Combat Order

After the capture of New Orleans in April, 1862, Gen. Benjamin F. Butler was placed in command of the city. At that time, of course, Negroes were not being accepted into the army, but many of them as personal slaves to the Union soldiers and as escaped slaves anxious to help the cause of the armies from the North, were performing many of the tasks of drudgery about the Union encampments in the South.

At first by practice and later by law, a slave who volunteered to work for the Union army was regarded as a freed man and the army, sometimes by force, prevented his recapture by his master.

In South Carolina, General Hunter felt that the slaves would make good soldiers, so he issued an order liberating all slaves in the state and then developed several combat companies made up of the men he had freed.

President Lincoln, upon hearing of it, revoked General Hunter's proclamation, and ordered him to disband his Negro units pointing out that the equipment he was using was "especially reserved for the white troops only."

Dispute on Issue

General Butler, however, had no such faith in Negroes as combat troops, and was opposed to their being taken into the army at all. He favored, however, using them to do heavy laboring work about the camp.

As a result of his attitude on the Negro, one of his aides, General Phelps resigned his commission and returned home. The issue that caused the break arose over an order given by Butler for Phelps to use Negroes to clear a section of timberland and build an encampment. Phelps contended that soldiers should be used for the purpose because the Negroes were not a part of the army.

In a sharp letter to General Butler in which he surrendered his commission, General Phelps said in part: "I am not willing to become the mere slave-driver which you propose, having no qualifications in that way. I am therefore under the necessity of tendering the resignation of my commission."

Six months later, General Butler began to find his position precarious with the Rebel Army at Port Hudson, 22 miles away, becoming more and more menacing.

Turns to Negroes

He wired Washington for reinforcements, but there weren't any to be had. "Hold New Orleans by all means and at all hazards," he was instructed.

At first he didn't know what to do, then he remembered the Native Guards, a company of free Negroes organized and equipped at their own expense in 1861. Governor Moore of Louisiana, had appealed to this finely equipped and trained unit to join the Confederate cause, so Butler now—the man who didn't want Negroes in the army even as labor troops—turned in desperation to the Native Guards. He promised them equal pay, equal rations and equal equipment with other volunteer troops. He promised they could even retain their own officers if they qualified for the posts.

"General," the leader asked, "shall we be officers as we were before?"

Colored Officers

"Yes, every one of you who is fit to be an officer shall be, and all the line officers shall be colored men," Butler replied.

"How soon do you want us to be ready," the leader asked.

"How soon can you give me two regiments of 1,000 men each?" the general inquired anxiously.

"In ten days," was the reply.

Satisfied on that point, General Butler then asked the leader of the Native Guards why Negroes in the South had not risen up in rebellion against their masters and fought to free themselves when the southern white men had gone to fight the Union armies in the North.

MAR 20 1943

Cagily, the leader sought permission to question the general and when it was granted, he proceeded as follows:

"If we colored men had risen to make war on our masters, would not it have been our duty to ourselves, they being our enemies, to kill the enemy wherever we could find them, and the white men would have been our enemies to be killed?"

Good Fighters

"I don't know but what you are right," said the general, "I think that would be a logical necessity of insurrection."

"If the colored men had begun such a war as that, general, which general of the United States army should we have called on to help us fight our battles?"

MAR 20 1943

The general evading that question, then sought information along another line. He then asked the leader why he thought Negroes could make good soldiers.

In reply the spokesman said: "General, we come of a fighting race. Our fathers were brought here slaves because they were captured in war and in hand to hand fight Pardon me, General, but the only cowardly blood we have in our veins is the white blood."

True to his promise, the leader had two thousand men ready for service within the 10-day limit he had set for himself. On August 28, 1862, they were mustered into the army.

High Praise

In a very short space of time the colored troops not only distinguished themselves in battle, but brought their numbers up to 5,000 infantry and artillery troops.

General Butler was converted. "Better soldiers never shouldered a musket," he said.

The senator who reviled the Negro as a soldier on the floor of congress was evidently unaware of this or chose to ignore these and other military exploits of the Negro.

From the extreme of being bitterly prejudiced against Negroes as soldiers, General Butler went to the other extreme of considering them the best soldiers he had ever seen. So concerned did he become over the welfare of Negro troops that he relieved General Weitzel of his command when he spoke disparagingly of Negro troops placed under his command.

Blasts General

Later he wrote a report excoriating Gen. Nathaniel P. Banks, who succeeded him in charge of New Orleans. In one section of the blistering report, he declared:

"After I left New Orleans, Gen. Banks enlisted many more of them (colored soldiers), but was weak enough to take away from them the great object of their ambition, under the spur of which they were ready to fight to the death, namely, equality with the white soldiers. He was also unmanly enough to add injustices to that folly by taking the commissions from their line officers, which I had given them and to brand their organization with the stigma of a designation as the Corps De Afrique. Yet in spite of this unwisdom, they did equal service and laid down their lives at Port Hudson in equal numbers comparatively with their white brothers in arms."

This story is a remarkable illustration of what could happen were President Roosevelt to issue a proclamation abolishing the color line and discrimination in the armed forces. Certainly such an order could not be more unpopular than was Lincoln's decision to admit Negroes to the army.

ASKS ROOSEVELT END CAMP DISCRIMINATION

Chicago Meeting Urges He Name Negro Clergy for an Inquiry

JUN 21 1943

CHICAGO, June 20—A resolution asking that President Roosevelt put an end to discrimination against Negroes at Army camps in the South was unanimously adopted at a mass meeting of the National Negro Council and the Chicago Citizens Committee of 1,000 today in the Metropolitan Community Center.

The group asked that the President authorize five leading Negro clergymen to visit Camp Van Dorn, Miss., and Camp Stewart, Ga., as his personal representatives and "investigate conditions which have caused the segregation, humiliation and unlawful killings of several Negro soldiers." Those named by the group were Bishop David Henry Sims of Philadelphia, Dr. D. V. Jemison, president of the National Baptist Convention, Selma, Ala.; the Rev. W. S. Braddon of Chicago, an ex-Army chaplain; the Rev. Harold Kingsley and the Rev. Joseph Evans, also of Chicago.

Edgar G. Brown, director of the National Negro Council, told the meeting that strikes and war work stoppages in the North and South, accompanied by racial strife, wanton and destructive rioting, the annihilation of Negro business, property and homes were the result of the circulation of a baseless rumor of an attack by a Negro on a white woman in Beaumont, Tex.

Army Bigotry Protested By White Officer In The South

MAY 12 1943

NEW YORK CITY—(SNS)—In a letter from an intelligent young white officer stationed in a southern camp, the NAACP was urged this week to continue its fight on all fronts for the realization of democracy in America.

MAY 12 1943

"Your fight is our fight—that a man has right as a man, whether he be a Jew, Negro, Irish-Catholic or a southern demagouge," writes this officer.

"I have found very little reason for encouragement in the application of democratic thoughts to race relations since entering the army. I know that I am in a bad section of the country to find any great emphasis on tolerance and justice in this matter but what has been especially discouraging is the number of men from the supposedly more liberal northern states whose eyes are just as blind as Rankin's."

THE AIR FORCE'S CONUNDRUM

Courier Pittsburgh Pa.

APR 10 1943

With the whole tempo of battle on every front increasing day by day, and with the ultimate decision resting with the side which can bring to bear the best equipped and operated aircraft in the largest numbers, a man from Mars would be puzzled by the policy of the Army Air Force which neglects to use scores of qualified aviators.

The 99th Pursuit squadron, located at the Tuskegee Army Air base, was organized and began training on July 19, 1941, and since that time numerous pilots have graduated and have been commissioned.

The 99th Pursuit squadron is ready to go into active service and has been ready for several months, but the Army Air Force is apparently not ready to have it go.

Here is a real conundrum that would puzzle a man from Mars or any other planet, just as it puzzles a lot of us on this one.

We feel sure that an intelligent explanation from the Army Air Force could not be construed as information of value to Dr. Goebbels or the German General Staff—or would it be?

COTTON PICKERS

MAR 6 1943

ARMY SHOWS LITTLE REGARD FOR SENSIBILITIES OF RACE IN ASSIGNING SOLDIERS TO COTTON PATCH

Courier BY HORACE R. CAYTON Pittsburgh PA

IT was purely by accident that Negro soldiers happened to be closer to the cotton fields of Arizona than white soldiers. Because of this fortunate geographic proximity, when the Army decided to use troops to help farmers it was perfectly natural to plan for the nearby Negro soldiers to be used as cotton pickers. What could be more simple? It is no discrimination. It just happened that way. PM described the process in this unique fashion: "No attempt will be made," said Lieutenant General Joseph T. McNarney, deputy chief of staff, before the Senate Agricultural Committee, "to select farm workers for this duty. The units closest to the field will be sent as units, regardless of whether the men ever picked cotton. The unit closest to the Arizona cotton fields happens to be a Negro unit," he said. You see, it just happened that way, purely coincidental.

Mr. Cayton

AN UNPLEASANT ASSIGNMENT

I have no argument to make at the moment as to whether soldiers, white or black, should or should not help farmers whether it is picking cotton or sowing wheat. In total warfare a person works where his services are most needed. That is the way the Russians do it. But having just seen a film on the siege of Leningrad, it occurred to me that Russians usually used their soldiers for fighting and their farmers for farming. But I guess if they needed some cotton picked and they had some extra soldiers lying around doing nothing they would send them out to pick the cotton.

THE unfortunate thing in this instance is that they are starting this program of soldiers working for farmers with Negro troops and of all agricultural pursuits—picking cotton. I do not know much about the mentality of army officers or of the War Department but it seems unfortunate that some regard for the sensibilities of Negro soldiers and the Negro population is not being observed. I think that Negro soldiers should be treated exactly the same as the white soldiers, given pleasant or unpleasant assignments as the need for such arises. What I am kicking about is to start a program such as this with Negroes. Even before this present announcement the NAACP complained about the use of Negro soldiers for removing snow in Seattle.

CONSIDERED SLAP IN THE FACE

With the morale of the Negro soldiers certainly not very high, with the complaints of the Negro public opinion over the fact that there are few Negro combat troops abroad reaching a crescendo and with the resignation of William Hastie as a protest over the segregation in the air corps, the latest plan to use Negro soldiers as laobrers is certainly an unnecessary slap on the face.

AGAIN it is not that Negroes should not do what any soldier should do in an emergency or that soldiers should not assist farmers. However, anyone who had an insight into the problem of the race and the treatment of Negroes in the armed forces should have bent over backwards to see that Negro soldiers were not the first soldiers to have been used as farmers and that of all things they should not have been required to pick cotton, which epitomizes to many a return to slavery status.

MUST CONSIDER

NEGRO'S MORALE

Is it that these army officials of the high command have no conception as to how to treat problems involving race? Is it that they don't care? Is it that they think Negroes should pick cotton; that that is the proper place for them whether they like it or not? The army complains about the lack of Negro morale and that they cannot change the segregated pattern of society, but common sense, it seems, could have avoided this additional blow to the pride of the Negro.

IT isn't settled yet. This controversy started with last year's cotton crop. Friday's paper of last week rescinded the original order given Wednesday by Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson but did not rule out the possibility of the order being renewed by saying "what happened to be an emergency may not be a sufficient emergency." Some one should tell the Army if they need Negro troops to farm or fight or do anything else along with white troops they will be glad to do it. But if the War Department wishes to press even lower the state of morale of both the Negro troops and Negro civilians the best possible way to do it would be to make cotton pickers of them because they happened, purely by coincidence to be located near a cotton field.

By WILLIAM H. HASTIE
Recent Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War

James L. H. Peck writes books and magazine articles on military and civilian aviation. He is one of America's best known authors in this field. Some of his writings have been translated into other languages. He knows his subject, for he has been a skillful flier and a close student of aviation for years. He was a fighter pilot in the Spanish civil war. A veteran in his field, he is still a young man in his early thirties. Peck is a Negro.

The Army air people are go getters. The Air Forces are growing fast. So the Air Command has been eagerly gathering in men who know something about aviation, as well as large numbers who know little in this field, but can learn. Yet, there was no rush to get Peck. So last year he volunteered his services.

The army hasn't yet decided whether to use him. Probably something will be found for Peck to do in the long run. He is too outstanding to be passed over indefinitely. Of course, if he had been white, the only question would have been whether the army or the navy could have grabbed him first. But, being colored, he doesn't have to worry about the navy at all. And the army has been more than deliberate in considering his application.

Canada Ace

FRED HUTCHERSON, JR.

Ranking American flyer who enlisted as a Canadian ferry pilot when the U.S. air corps wouldn't have him.

Canadian Pilot

Fred H. Hutcherson is also an American Negro pilot, young in years but old in flying experience. When I met him last spring he was working for Canada, flying American-made planes to England. Of course, as a senior pilot he crossed the Atlantic in command of a white crew, but that did not seem important to people who were interested in getting as many bombers as possible to England as fast as possible.

I saw Hutcherson just after he returned from delivering his sixth bomber. Like most Americans he had felt that he ought to be flying for Uncle Sam. But somehow there seemed to be a lot of red tape in the handling of his application for a commission in the Army Air Forces. So he came to Washington and spent several days going from office to office trying to get action. He felt that he was getting nowhere, so he went back to Canada.

I don't know where Fred Hutcherson is now. Let us hope that he is still taking the bombers across. If it is any consolation to him, he can remember that in the last war there was a whole Negro regiment which the American Army did not want. But the 369th Infantry went on and did its fighting with the French, who were glad to have it. And it came back with battle honors such as few regiments of any army could match.

Turned Back

One day last December a Negro civilian pilot received the following telegram from the Army Air Forces:

"You are authorized to report to Maxwell Field for service pilot training. You must have clear release from present employment."

There was nothing unusual about this message. The Air Forces are recruiting large numbers of civilian pilots, many of them over age for combat flying or lacking the physical perfection required of the combat pilot. These men become army fliers and perform the many essential flying missions, other than combat, which the army requires.

But two of the men who received such directions to report for training were Negroes. Gilbert Cargill and Charles Ashe reported to Maxwell Field, ready to go to work. But they never got any further than the front office. They were told bluntly that no provision was made for training Negroes. It is still not clear what special provision is necessary. They did not even get a refund of their train fare. They just got a ride.

Probably Cargill and Ashe did not know that Robert Terry, a Negro commercial pilot, had been rejected as an army service pilot months before.

Jim-Crow Mentality

Certainly, they did not know that the Air Command is handicapped by that type of mentality which cannot picture a Negro pilot flying a plane into a strange field, sitting down to dinner with other flyers, taking temporary quarters with them, and then flying off on another mission. Of course, it just isn't possible to segregate a man who is working as a service pilot. So, we have no black pilots.

Negro specialists of various kinds have received similar treatment. The few Negro air units do not require many specialists. And the Negro specialist, in military contemplation, can exercise his skill only for other Negroes. One Negro applicant is told in November, 1942, that "at the present time there are not further vacancies available for the training of colored aviation cadets for service as ground officers as the quota for the coming year has been filled."

To another applicant the Air Command explains in greater detail:

"Reference is made to your letter of October 20, 1942, requesting information relative to training facilities, with the Army Air Forces for Negro Meteorologists.

"There are at present no Negro Air Force Weather Groups, nor are any contemplated in the near future. However, there is now one Negro meteorologist attached to a Negro Air Force Fighter Group, and six others in training who will be attached to Negro Fighter Groups upon graduation. It is believed by the Army Air Forces that the above mentioned seven Negro Meteorologists will take care of their needs for quite some time."

A Shortage

Yet, on January 8, 1943, the War Department published the following announcement:

"To fill the urgent need for more than 1,000 meteorologists in the Air Forces, men between the ages of 18 and 30, inclusive qualified for meteorological training, will be certified for voluntary induction into the army as Aviation Cadets in meteorology."

This may not make sense, but it is understandable. Weather may be black, or it may be fair, but the skin of the man who makes the weather calculation has to match the skin of the flier who uses the information.

At a press conference on November 19, 1942, the Secretary of War explained that relatively less Negroes would be in the Air Forces than in some other branches of the army because of the particular skills required in aviation. "There are some branches," he said, "which require specialists and for which the number of men has to be determined by the number and capacity of the recruits who are available for it." Unquestionably, the secretary spoke in good faith. But on the record the Air Command does not want all the Negro specialists who are available.

Until we abandon this stupid notion that Negro specialists can work only for and with other Negroes, James Peck and Fred Hutcherson, and potential Negro service pilots and meteorologists will continue to be wasted. And, so long as we tolerate such vicious nonsense, we can be respected neither by the forces of fascism which we condemn nor by the forces of democracy which we assume to lead.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WAACs

It has been difficult to determine just who is responsible for excluding Negro WAACs from Riverview park last week. Some blame it on the park officials, some on the Negro WAAC commissioned officers.

The Bystander would not be surprised about the park officials, but if the officers were responsible then we have a most serious problem to face. We complain when white officers allow the members of their unit to be mistreated. That criticism is even worse when Negro officers are guilty of the same. It is true that those higher up fix policies—and the army policy as to the Negro is definitely rotten—yet the officer actually in charge of troops or WAACs can do much to alleviate the hardships and prejudices these people face. And we go further and say that any officer who condones or encourages injustices to their troops or WAACs in order to "stand in" with higher officers for the purpose of seeking advancement in rank is a traitor to his race and in the long run is not a proper officer in the U. S. Army.

Flying Squadron Left Tuskegee on April 2

Kansas City Call
Kansas City, Mo.
JUN 1943

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — Allied headquarters in North Africa announced officially Wednesday what readers of Negro newspapers already knew: that a Negro pursuit squadron, commanded by Lt. Col. Benjamin O. Davis Jr., was in North Africa to fight against the Axis.

Several weeks ago Congressman Frances Bolton of Ohio announced in congress that "the 99th has departed for combat duty." Immediately the war department took steps to prevent Negro newspapers from printing her statement, although the Office of Censorship authorized publication of Mrs. Bolton's exact words spoken from the house floor.

A Stewart "Scoop"

That the squadron had arrived at its destination was revealed in a dispatch from North Africa by Ollie Stewart, war correspondent for the Afro-American and affiliated newspapers. Later Stewart stated that Lt. Col. Davis was living in a town where he was stationed. Both articles passed the censor.

It was at first stated that the squadron had seen actual combat duty in the closing days of the North African campaign, but this was denied by the war department.

The announcement of Wednesday said the flyers, who use P-40 Warhawks, were being given advanced instruction in new fighter tactics by veteran pilots of the Tunisian battles, and that upon completion of this advanced training, the squadron will be sent into action.

No news of the actual departure of the squadron was allowed to be printed because of censorship regulations. Mention of embarkation of any unit is explicitly prohibited since such publication would give valuable information to the enemy.

It can be revealed now, however, that the squadron left Tuskegee at midnight April 2. The squadron had no idea where it was going. The train was completely blacked out.

The group, composed of a full complement of ground and maintenance crew and medical contingent, had the run of the special train which zig-zagged across the country to its destination.

When the train stopped it was on the docks at a southeastern port and alongside the transport to which the squadron was immediately transferred.

Farewells were said as the men swung aboard at Tuskegee. Many of their families were at the school and in the community nearby. All were forbidden to speak of their departure. Families of those living in other parts of the nation knew of their boys' departure because personal belongings were sent home to them.

The night the squadron left Tuskegee the 96th Service squadron was transferred to Selfridge Field, Mich. The 332nd Fighter group, composed of several pursuit squadrons and first all-Negro fighter group in army history, was also moved to Selfridge.

Transfer of army pilots from Tuskegee is part of the regular air corps plan. There is no room at Tuskegee for squadrons after they complete their training because at present new flyers are reporting at the rate of 52 every five weeks. Classes are graduating frequently with from 25 to 30 men instead of five or six as was formerly the number.

NAACP Says

Air Corps Still Discriminating

JUL 31 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.—Specific cases in which skilled Negroes are being denied opportunity for training and technical service in the Army Air Force are cited by Roy Wilkins, assistant secretary, in the most recent protest of the NAACP against racial discrimination in the armed services.

In one case, it is pointed out that four Negro enlisted men of the air corps, one the top man and all ranking students in their class in photography, were rejected for advanced training leading to higher ratings and commissions in this field, while white classmates whom they had out-ranked were selected. The pretext for this discrimination was the charge by one of their officers that Yale University, where the advanced training is offered, "is not ready to accept Negroes."

Mr. Wilkins also cited the case of a Negro soldier, a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of a leading university, with advanced study in biology and bio-chemistry, who was first denied assignment to laboratory work in an army hospital, then especially trained as an air corps armourer and finally sent to an air filed to work as a laborer.

In presenting the matter to Assistant Secretary of War, John J. McCloy, Mr. Wilkins thus summarized the position of the NAACP by stating: "While the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People asks for remedial action in the cases above cited, we are even more concerned that by more careful and frequent checks and inspections, and by disciplinary action against particular commanders as may be merited, the War Department actually enforce a policy of assigning, training and advancing the skilled Negro soldier on the basis of his merit and potential usefulness, rather than wasting and demoralizing him, as is all too often the case at present."

Halt Killing of Soldiers

Judge Hastie's Report to Lawyers' Guild Accuses Police

ARMY UNABLE TO GET CONVICTIONS

More Killings Are Predicted for 1943

JUL 24 1943

WASHINGTON

President Roosevelt was asked this week to make an appropriate appeal to the nation directing attention to the continuing forces of unrestrained violence against colored soldiers.

This is the recommendation submitted to the executive board of the National Lawyers' Guild by William H. Hastie, vice president, who recommends that the guild call also upon the Secretaries of War and Navy, the Attorney General and committees of the Senate and House alike to take appropriate steps.

Judge Hastie's report states that civilian violence, particularly by police officials, against colored soldiers in uniform continues. Among his other contentions are these:

Failures Cited

Federal authorities have failed miserably to build up any sentiment against the mistreatment of the colored soldier;

The President has made no direct attempt to influence public opinion in this field;

The army is engaged in teaching our soldiers how to treat people abroad but not their own fellow American soldiers;

We do not often hear about the small towns in which the colored soldier is forced to step from the narrow sidewalk whenever a white person passes;

Bitterness Justified

To address a colored soldier as "n---r" is common-place in the South;

The soldier may not express his feelings when he must wait until all the white passengers are accommodated or before he can get transportation. He may even hold his tongue when he is forced to leave a bus to make room for white passengers; but it is of such stuff that bitterness and hatred are made. In such a climate resentments grow until they burst forth in violent and unreasoning reprisal.

Abuses Reviewed

Specific cases of violations listed by Mr. Hastie are:

1. Alexandria, La., January, 1943, a policeman shot up a street full of peaceful soldiers. Thirty were injured by buckshot. No one was punished;
2. In March, Sgt. Thomas Foster was shot and killed while lying unconscious on the street in Little Rock, Ark., by a city policeman who escaped punishment by volunteering for the army;
3. Beaumont, Tex., July, police fired several shots into the back of Pvt. Charles Reco while they were taking him to the station in a police car; U.S. Department of Justice prosecution was dropped because there was "no prospect of a conviction";
4. In El Paso, Tex., Pvt. Willie Jullis was shot and killed by city policemen;

Nurse's Beating Recalled

5. Montgomery, Ala., September 14, Lieut. Norma Greene, a colored nurse, was beaten by two policemen; her nose broken, eyes blacked and her body bruised, but no action was taken by military authorities because Lieut. Greene was not in uniform. (Her conduct in wearing civilian clothes at the time was lawful and proper);
7. In October, Pvt. Henry Williams was shot and killed by a bus driver in Mobile, where drivers are authorized to carry guns and act as police; there was not even a grand jury hearing;
7. In November, Pvt. Larry Stroud, while drunk, was shot in the back and killed by a Columbia, S.C., policeman who was quickly acquitted by a jury.

Angry Cop Killed MP

The worst case of all, Dr. Hastie says, was in November when Pvt. Raymond Carr, a colored MP, was shot and killed by civilian policemen in Alexandria, La.

Carr, who had only a club, made some comment to the white civilian policeman who was making an arrest. The latter became angry and, without any legal justification, sought to arrest Carr who, quite properly, refused to be arrested because civilian police had no jurisdiction over him while he was on military duty and obligated to remain at his post. The civilian policeman went away and came back with reenforcements and when Carr ran he was shot to death.

No State Nor U.S. Prosecution

The State of Louisiana refused to prosecute and the U.S. Department of Justice refused to prosecute when a grand jury failed to indict.

There is no reason to believe that 1943 will be any better, Hastie says. He suggests that:

1. A military commander might properly declare a community to be off limits for all soldiers — white and black — until such a time as local authorities have taken all reasonable steps to protect all men in uniform against violence and abuse;
2. Congress should amend Section 252, Title 18, of the U.S. Code which would give district courts jurisdiction over killing of members of the armed forces, as well as immigration inspectors, grazing service inspectors and coast guards.

Letter Tells of Soldiers' Plight

JUN 17 1943

On May 7, 1943, I left the City for the South. My main object was to study the prison conditions of the South, see how the prisoners are treated, and also how our Colored boys in the armed forces are being treated in the South.

What I saw and what was told to me made me forget all about the defeat of the Axis. It convinced me more than ever that the Colored man fight is not somewhere in a foreign land, but right here on the home front in the South.

My trip took me through Virginia, North Carolina, South Caroline and Georgia, stopping over at the principal cities. As I stood silently gazing upon the old Capitol in Columbus, S. C. my thoughts ran back to the days when the law-making bodies of that state were dotted with Negro faces when some of the most contructive laws of South Carolina were enacted. The Army training base, Camp Jackson is located on the outskirt of Columbia, and at Spartansburg, S. C. is located Camp Croft, I met two of my former roomers and other New York boys. The stories they had to tell me of their treatment in the South made my blood boil.

There is no wonder that so many of the young generation leave the beautiful south and never return.

Until these conditions are rightened, President Roosevelt, Vice President Wallace and Secretary of War Stimson should stop preaching about World Democracy; freedom from want, freedom from fear and freedom from this and that.

Lincoln's Civil War Laws Show Mixed Regiments Feasible Today

"It is the duty of every government to give protection to its citizens, of whatever class, color or conditions and especially to those who are duly organized as soldiers in the public service."

— President Abraham Lincoln

By ENOC P. WATERS
(Defender Staff Correspondent)

Second of Two Articles

NEW ORLEANS, La. — How a forthright military man could carry out a policy of admitting Negroes into the army without discrimination is found in the story of General Thomas of Civil War fame.

It was he who was designated to the first Negro troops under the authority of a proclamation by President Abraham Lincoln and a weak-kneed endorsement by Congress.

Enlisting Negro troops was no easy task. The Negro men were willing enough to fight but opposition to the move was strong in the army. Furthermore the Confederate congress passed an act providing for the enslavement of all armed Negro soldiers captured in battle.

The same Confederate congress also provided that white officers in charge of armed Negro troops, if captured, would be treated as insurrectionists.

Abused in Streets

Negro soldiers on the streets were often attacked by whites and the abuse of Negro troops became such a problem that President Lincoln was forced to take action.

In a speech, which he wanted especially the Confederacy to note he spoke these words which are as appropriate today as they were more than three-quarters of a century ago.

"It is the duty of every government to give protection to its citizens, of whatever class, color or condition, and especially to those who are duly organized as soldiers in the public service. The law of nations and the usages and customs of war as carried on by civilized powers permit no distinction as to color in the treatment of prisoners of war as public enemies. To sell or enslave any captured person on account of his color, and for no offense against the laws of war, is a relapse into barbarism and a crime against the civilization of the age.

Threat of Retaliation

"The government of the United States will give the same protection to all of its soldiers, and if the enemy shall sell or enslave anyone because of his color, the offense shall be punished by retaliation upon the enemy's prisoners in our possession. It is therefore ordered that for every soldier of the United States killed in violation of the laws of war, a rebel soldier shall be executed, and for every one enslaved by the enemy or sold into slavery, a rebel soldier shall be placed at hard labor on the public works and continued at such labor until the other shall be released, and receive the treatment due to a prisoner of war."

No less determined than the President himself to see that the enlistment of Negro troops moved on without hitch was General Thomas, who boldly laid down the law in his initial speech after taking command of the Department of the Gulf.

FEB 27 1943

Lays Down Law

The order to begin recruiting Negro troops was issued January 20, 1863, and in March General Thomas came to New Orleans determined to build an army of 20,000 Uegroes. Said he in his speech at Providence, La.:

"I came from Washington with the fullest power in this matter. With this power I can act as if the President of the United States were himself present. I am directed to refer nothing to Washington, but to act promptly — what I have to do, to do at once — to strike down the unworthy and to elevate the deserving. You know full well — for you have been over this country — that the rebels have sent into the field all their available men — every man capable of bearing arms, and you know they have kept at home all their slaves for the raising of subsistence for their armies in the field. In this way they can bring to bear against us all the strength of their so-called Confederate states while we at the North can only send a portion of our fighting force, being compelled to leave behind another portion to cultivate our fields and to supply the wants of an immense army.

"The administration has determined to take from the rebels this source of supply — to take their Negroes and to compel them to send back a portion of the whites to cultivate their deserted plantations; and very poor persons they would be to fill the place of the dark hued laborer. They must do this or their armies will starve."

Swiftly Recruited

Continuing, General Thomas said, "While I am authorized thus, in the name of the Secretary of War, I have the fullest authority to dismiss from the army any man, be his rank what it may, whom I find maltreating the freedman. This part of my duty I will most assuredly perform if any case comes before me. I would rather do that than give commissions because such men are unworthy of the word of soldiers."

General Thomas had little difficulty in recruiting the desired 20,000 Negro troops, and as long as he remained on the scene the Negro troops had but little to complain about.

FEB 27 1943

But opposition as strong as that existing to the presence of Negroes in the Union army was not to be overcome by one man or several in a year or two in spite of the perilous situation in which the North found itself.

There were numerous instances of subordinate officers deliberately humiliating the Negro troops under their command. Gradually whole companies and regiments of men were so demoralized as to be almost useless as soldiers. They were given inferior and insufficient equipment, less pay, different rations, and no respect at all.

Abuses Aired

When the army appropriation bill was brought up in congress in 1864, many of these abuses were aired. The Secretary of War and many other high ranking government officials were distressed by reports of the unfair treatment of the Negro troops and moved speedily to wipe out existing inequities.

Others, however, charged that the experiment had not been a success. Negro troops were accused of loafing. They were described as "time wasters" and "slothful."

General Thomas was likewise disturbed about the abuse of the Negro troops he had enlisted. Many had been changed from combat to labor troops and as such handled no arms, but sweated and toiled at the most difficult and disagreeable tasks. In an effort to change this situation General Thomas issued the following order:

"The incorporation into the army of the United States of colored troops renders it necessary that they should be brought, as speedily as possible, to the highest state of discipline. Accordingly, the practice which has hitherto prevailed, no doubt from necessity, of requiring these troops to perform most of the labor on fortifications, and the labor and fatigue duties of permanent stations and camps, will cease and they will be only required to take their fair share of fatigue duty with white troops. This is necessary to prepare them for the higher duties of conflict with the enemy."

By the end of the war the country had reconciled itself to Negroes in uniform, and today one does not regard as unusual the appearance on the street of a Negro in uniform. Even a Negro colonel does not create excitement.

FEB 27 1943

A mixed army, a really democratic navy — a real American fighting force in every sense — will at first face bitter opposition, but if the government is insistent upon the execution of its orders, if it designates the right men to carry out the program, opposition will fall before the proven wisdom of such a policy, just as it did 75 years ago — and tomorrow mixed regiments and mixed officers will be no novelty. The United States fighting forces then will be truly a symbol of a great democracy.

SOUTH AWAKES

APR 17 1943

Congressman Rankin, whose political stock in trade is chiefly race hatred, now directs his venom to the Japanese. Apparently he has little or no faith in the loyalty of American-born Japanese. In a characteristic harangue in the House he warned that the Japanese who are being sent into the South constitute a grave menace to the country's safety. "It was these same American-born Japanese who formed the fifth column in Hawaii which made Pearl Harbor possible," he said, as he reiterated his conviction that the South would surely be the first-chosen site for an Axis invasion if the Axis attempts to invade the country. "The Gulf States would be invaded first because they are the most vulnerable, the least protected, and the site of vital materials," Rankin said.

In uttering his "warning" the representative from Mississippi did not say anything which Hitler and his gang do not already know, or which is not well known also by anyone who has weighed the possibilities of Axis boldness. But what is important is that Rankin's expressed fears indicate the South's awakening to the dangers of the spreading war. Perhaps the realization of the South's perilous position may lead to a more generous welcome and better treatment of colored soldiers who are stationed at Southern posts. APR 17 1943

The War on Elmer Davis

JUN 28 1943

When the House refused to appropriate funds for the Domestic Branch of the Office of War Information, much more was involved than a personal attack on Elmer Davis. He is widely liked, and all except a few congressional disciples of The Chicago Tribune admit that he has acted with notable tact and moderation. It is ridiculous to compare him with Dr. Goebbels or Virginio Gayda; he hasn't even attempted to do what the Creel Committee did successfully in the last war. Any other man in the same position, whatever his ability, his character or his political record, would be subject to the same congressional abuse.

It cannot even be said that the attack was really directed at the policies of the OWI. No matter what policies it followed—no matter whether it issued propaganda for home consumption or the unadorned facts, or nothing but news bulletins for the daily press; no matter whether it favored labor or management, or neither; farmers or city consumers, or neither; Russia or Poland, or neither; no matter whether it called for a tough war or tried to make the public believe that this could still be an easy war; no matter whether its top officials were New Dealers or conservative Democrats or Republicans—it would still be slandered and abused.

The truth is that its policies have been cautious and reasonable to a fault. It has never tried to lead the public by the nose, or to make newspapers echo the views of the administration, or to whip up anger against the Axis by inventing atrocities. It has gone so far in the opposite direction that the real atrocities of the Germans in this war have been approached with diffidence, as if they were horrors that couldn't be discussed in polite society. In general, and except for a brief period when advertising men tried to get control of the agency, it has made its appeal to the common sense and patriotism of the public. It has issued no fervid exhortations, furnished no four-minute speakers and organized no patriotic rallies. It has never attempted to influence the public on the emotional level that leads directly to action.

If anybody thought that the function of the OWI was to improve morale and unify the country in the face of danger, he would be forced to conclude that its record is one of failure. It hasn't convinced the miners that they ought to dig the coal that is necessary for war production instead of following John L. Lewis in his political adventures. It hasn't created public feeling against those industrialists who, as shown in several confidential reports, are trying to provoke their own men into striking; they think that strikes at this time would weaken the labor unions. Undersecretary Patterson says that the production of supplies for the army ground forces has declined since April. He thinks that part of the decline was caused by complacency and overconfidence on the part of both labor and management. The OWI has failed to change that state of mind.

It has tried hard to improve racial relations, but it didn't succeed in preventing the riots in Los Angeles and Beaumont and Mobile, or the Klan-instigated strike in Detroit against the hiring of Negroes as skilled workers. Any war is likely to generate ill feeling on the home front. People are overworked and overwrought; they have to stand in line; they can't go where they want to go or buy what they want to buy; and these frustrations produce a feeling of anger that ought to be directed against the enemy. Too often in this war it has been directed against other Americans—against Jews, Negroes, Mexicans, union labor, Congress or the administration. The country is full of internal animosities that an Office of War Information might have helped to prevent, if it had been given authority to act.

And there are other examples of its failures in the field of public morale. There is, for example, the growth of the black markets, which might be prevented by public feeling against them—but the public is not helping much to stamp them out. There is the effort of farm organizations to destroy price ceilings, even at the cost of inflation. Everywhere is the feeling that, as we have heard several people say, "I'm going to get mine while the getting is good." There are indications that this feeling is also widespread in the army. One soldier wrote us from a Southern camp (and we have seen other letters in the same vein): "Everybody seems busy getting his own little promotion and feathering his own little nest, oh, so damned carefully, because nobody has been able to absorb a nobler philosophy. If there is one around, the old OWI story, it hasn't been put very convincingly—maybe it can't be, with Congress the way it is."

JUN 28 1943

Congress has clearly indicated that it wants no efforts to improve the national morale. Accordingly the Domestic Branch of the OWI has confined itself to more modest but still indispensable tasks. It has brought order and system into government publicity and has reduced the number of government bulletins. It has persuaded the Departments of War and the Navy to be more communicative in their communiqués. It has given sound advice to magazine editors, book publishers, radio announcers and motion-picture producers who wanted to advance the national interests in wartime but didn't know how to go about it. In Washington, it has prevented many squabbles among government officials by reading their speeches and statements in advance. It has explained government policies and helped the public to understand what the government agencies were doing.

Essentially it is because of these modest achievements that the OWI was attacked on the floor of the House. A bi-partisan majority in Congress hopes that the New Deal will be defeated in 1944. Some members of Congress are more interested in fighting Roosevelt than they are in fighting Hitler. These men reason bluntly that the more squabbles there are among government officials, and the less public understanding there is of government measures, the better chance their side will have of winning the next election. The policies they were condemning were not those of the OWI, but those of the administration. Their attack on Elmer Davis was directed against the President.

As we point out elsewhere, it is still uncertain what the Senate will do. It has shown a much greater sense of wartime responsibility than the House, but this time the Senators will have to act quickly, and there is a chance that the Domestic Branch of the OWI will be sacrificed to its enemies in the rush to pass appropriation bills before July 1. Even if its funds are restored, the struggle against the OWI will continue. We suggest to Mr. Roosevelt that it is time for him to go before the public—not once, but preferably in a whole series of speeches—and defend his wartime agencies.

Only U. S. Action Can Protect Negroes in Army, Says Leader

Ex-Stimson Aide Calls on Administration To Halt Rising Tension in South

William H. Hastie is widely regarded as a leader of conservative Negro opinion. A graduate of Harvard Law School, he was the first Negro ever appointed to a Federal judgeship, serving in the Virgin Islands. In October, 1940, he was made a special assistant to the Secretary of War, acting as Henry L. Stimson's adviser on Negro problems. After he resigned last January, he accused the Army Air Forces Command of "reactionary policies and discriminatory practices" designed to curb Negro participation in that service. He is now dean of Howard University.

JUN 14 1943

WASHINGTON, June 14—At Camp Stewart, Ga., Negro soldiers and military policemen engaged in a fatal gun battle. In Centerville, Miss., a sheriff kills a Negro soldier. At Camp Shelby, Miss., two Negro soldiers lie in a hospital, wounded in an affray with highway patrolmen.

These are the headlines of the past week. No one of them is surprising. Since April military and civilian authorities have recognized Camp Stewart and the neighboring communities as powder kegs of racial tension. The Centerville violence is just one more chapter in the turbulent history of the 364th Infantry, a Negro regiment, embittered by incident after incident during a two-year period while the regiment has been shifted aimlessly from camp to camp without any prospective mission appropriate for combat troops during a war. The environs of Camp Shelby are more than familiar to the military authorities who have surveyed and studied that very area because of the acute problems of racial relations which confront the Army there.

Whites Take Precedence

A critical problem of American life in a time of war is revealing itself in a fashion which cannot be ignored. In communities throughout the South, the Negro soldier finds himself not only outside the protection of the law but even the object of lawless aggression by the officers of the law. It is only the sensational cases of shooting, killing and rioting which attract public attention. But day by day the Negro soldier faces abuse and humiliation.

He is forced to walk in the street so that white persons may use the sidewalk. He must wait for hours in bus terminals and railroad stations until all white travelers have been accommodated. He is even compelled to surrender the space he has obtained on the bus so that there may be room for additional white passengers. Nigger is the name by which he is usually addressed.

In such a climate resentments, hatreds and fears and misunderstandings mount until they erupt in sensational violence. Yet, both the Administration and the military authorities persist in trying to muddle through, without plan or program, hoping that somehow things will come out all right.

Army's Policy

The cautious "liberals" who advise the Administration on race relations are confronted by a situation which confounds and frightens them and leaves them impotent. Their moral equipment does not include the courage and forthrightness which this crisis demands. Their counsel must be counsel of inaction. And the Administration, convinced that it must appease and hold in political alignment the Congressional delegations from the South, is easily persuaded to a do-nothing policy in this field.

JUN 1943

The Army, long wedded to the mores of the South and immobilized by its traditional methods of procedure, pursues a course of dealing with each incident as it occurs. Formal investigation and report, an occasional court martial, the removal of some individual from his command and the shifting of a troublesome regiment to another station—these are the Army's customary and familiar devices. It sticks to them doggedly.

The events of the first week in June have served bloody notice that such attempts to muddle through cannot succeed. The Administration cannot ease racial tensions by working quietly behind the scenes. The Army cannot check the increasing wave of violence by ponderous investigation of each case as it occurs. The Government must take the issue to the people boldly, giving America a measure of understanding and of leadership which is now lacking.

The voices of the President and of ranking public officers which we hear over the radio urging miners to return to work, calling upon all of us to fight the black market and exhorting the purchase of war bonds must be heard on this matter of racial strife which is so seriously affecting the war effort.

What We Must Do

False fears must be allayed. At the same time Americans must be told plainly that public manifestations of race prejudice cannot and will not be permitted to impede the Nation's struggle for victory and a free world. Public opinion can be molded. Even where tensions are highest, there are many citizens, not bold enough to take the lead themselves, but decent and patriotic enough to follow those in authority who will assume the initiative.

The Army itself is busy with booklets, lectures and various devices of indoctrination, teaching our soldiers how to treat the peoples of India, the South Sea islanders, the Arabs, everyone but their fellow American soldiers. It is time, and past time, that similar effort and technique be employed in the business of building comradeship within our own Army and in relation to our own civilian communities.

Nor is it necessary to resort exclusively to such persuasion. Local military commanders have a powerful weapon in their authority to declare an entire community "out-of-bounds" or "off-limits" for all soldiers, white and black, until such time as local authorities shall take all responsible steps to protect all men in uniform against lawless violence and abuse.

The civilian community is vitally interested in the money which the soldier spends. When that source of income is cut off or even seriously threatened, action will be taken to make local law enforcement a reality rather than a travesty.

Race Haters Do Hitler's Work in War Plants

JUN 9 1943

The recent wildcat race strikes at a Mobile shipbuilding plant and at the Packard Motor Car Co., in Detroit, both precipitated by the upgrading of Negro workers, indicate the potential power of an old Axis weapon in a new setting. If we allow this sort of thing to spread, we can jolly well lose the war on the assembly lines.

The menace of race prejudice as a crippler of war production struck me forcibly last week, as I moved through crowds of striking workers at the Packard factory gates and at the Union Hall of Packard Local 190, UAW-CIO, which had been "captured" by pro-strike agitators violently promoting race hatred.

Contradictory Arguments

The ostensible reason for the strike—the upgrading of three Negro workers to testers of plane engine parts—was almost lost in the variety of slick and contradictory arguments presented by the hate-strike fomentors. These arguments ran the full gamut of appeals to prejudice, narrow self-interest and superstitious fears. All were calculated to strike a responsive chord somewhere in practically every listener; all bore the earmark of inspired hate propaganda.

Here's a sampling of what I heard:

¶ "The Union is throwing out white workers and giving their jobs to blacks. We got to teach them our trades, so they can grab our places." (The upgraded Negroes were not displacing whites. Detroit has an acute labor shortage, with jobs for all.)

¶ "We don't mind letting Negroes get better jobs and more pay. But we don't want to work with them. Let them work on separate assembly lines." (Impossible. If carried through, this Jim-Crow arrangement would require duplicate machines, one set for whites, the other for Negroes.)

¶ "Whites and Negroes don't mix. It's against human nature." (Untrue. The foundry division at Packard, manned by hundreds of whites and Negroes working side by side in complete harmony, operated without interruption throughout the strike.

Distrust and Fear

¶ "The Negroes may be all right now. But when the war is over, they'll undercut our wage rates and take away our jobs." (Another slick argument, designed to sow distrust and fear in workers not now bitten by the prejudice bug.)

¶ "Are you for or against white womanhood? If you're for white womanhood, why allow your sister or wife to work beside black men?" (A variant of the old non sequitur, pulled out of the bag by race-baiters every time the cry for equal rights is raised: "Would you want your sister or daughter to marry a Negro?")

¶ "Nearly all Negroes have syphilis. Diseased blood runs out of their fingers onto machines where they work, and you catch syphilis if you handle the same machine." (This "bleeding-finger" fiction is so widespread not only at Packard but at other plants, that it appears to be inspired by industrial fifth columnists. As for syphilis, it is infectious only in the "active stage" and then only through actual sexual intercourse, with very rare exceptions. Again syphilis is less common among Northern Negroes than among whites in many Southern areas. Would the Detroit Kluxers refuse to work with Southern whites from these areas?)

OCD Picks a Time Like This to Fire Its Only Expert on Racial Harmony

PM
New York, N. Y.

JUN 11 1943

While New York seeks methods of promoting interracial harmony, the OCD (Office of Civilian Defense) has contributed its share by firing its only expert on the subject.

She is Mrs. Anna Arnold Hedgeman, Regional Director for Race Relations, in the Second Region covering New York, New Jersey and Delaware.

Mrs. Hedgeman's dismissal was ordered by the national OCD to meet the reduction made by Congress in its budget.

Originally, the Race Relations Director was to have been fired outright. However, upon the urgent request of Sinclair Hatch, the Second Regional Director, the OCD Washington office has permitted him to employ Mrs. Hedgeman occasionally as a consultant.

Hatch says "Mrs. Hedgeman has been invaluable." In many instances she has worked as a field representative rather than as a racial specialist. Whatever her assignment, Hatch says, she has always done an excellent job.

Work in the field of race relations does not always show accomplishment in terms of statistics. But here is one example of what Mrs. Hedgeman has done in one field.

JUN 11 1943

¶ Greater New York has 250 Negro nurses' aides daily contributing to the war effort in various hospitals, as compared with Boston where there are only four such aides. The Boston area does not have an OCD Race Relations Director.

Besides, Mrs. Hedgeman has kept her regional office constantly informed of trends and reactions of Negro communities toward the war effort.

Mrs. Anna Hedgeman

In last Sunday's PM. Harry Bravermen, provisional chairman of the Los Angeles Citizens' Committee to Combat Race Riots, told New Yorkers:

"I believe you need the help of the OCD to prepare for racial trouble just as the OCD has prepared for air raids.

"One point I believe you can drive home with . . . the help of the OCD. It is this:

"Any person who foments racial trouble, who encourages strife—directly or indirectly—or who wantonly participates in racial disturbances is a traitor to America."

JUN 11 1943

James M. Landis, National OCD Director, said he had no alternative to firing Mrs. Hedgeman. Of the four persons he ordered dismissed in New York, he said, "she is the only one I .have allowed to be retained on a part-time basis."

A SMOKE SCREEN

McNUTT'S RAP OF RACE DRAFT QUOTA WAS ONLY A SMOKE SCREEN TO RELIEVE HIM OF A HEADACHE

BY HORACE R. CAYTON

EDITOR'S NOTE—Since Mr. McNutt suggested that it would possibly be necessary to ignore the quota for Negroes in the draft, a suggestion referred to by Mr. Cayton, Mr. McNutt and the Army and Navy have agreed on plans for the induction of nearly 10 per cent of the Negro population into the Army and Navy.

Pittsburgh Pa. Courier

* * *

ACCORDING to a recent release of the press, Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt made the startling statement that Negroes should be taken into all branches of the armed services—the Army, Navy and the Marine Corps—without regard for percentage quotas. This, McNutt was quoted as saying, would effect an easement on the number of whites being called for military duty. McNutt did not clarify or elaborate on his statement. However, such a startling announcement has caused this reporter to speculate on some of the possible problems and motives which led McNutt to issue such a statement.

Mr. Cayton

First let us speculate on what McNutt's problems are as Manpower chief. On one hand there is a demand for more manpower than he can furnish to the Army, and at the same time he is harassed by farmers and manufacturers who wish to obtain exemptions for essential workers. On the other hand, the manpower chief has a pool of Negroes, most of whom are untrained, which he finds impossible to integrate into war industries.

FEAR OF THE SOUTH

If it were possible then to use a disproportionate number of Negroes in the Army a number of things might, in part, be achieved:

1. The easement of the drafting of white essential war workers in industry, people over thirty-eight and farmers. Considerable resistance has materialized around the drafting of all of these groups in Congress and by outside pressure organizations.
2. There are rumblings throughout the South that too few Negroes are being inducted into the Army. Where Negroes constitute a large percentage of the population there has developed a non-rational fear about the ratio between Negro and white men left in southern communities.
3. In the Middle West and Northern farming areas there is a definite shortage of farm labor. There is however an absolute unwillingness to employ Negro farm labor. Here again it might be felt that Negroes could be used to fulfill the manpower need of the army while the more essential white farmers would be left on the farms.
4. Finally, disproportionate induction of the Negro into the Army would utilize the pool of Negro manpower which has not been effectively integrated into industries. It would likewise quiet the fears of Southern communities and Northern farmers.

MAR 20 1943

McNUTT USING A SMOKE SCREEN

McNutt made what sounded to be a liberal gesture in saying that Negroes should not be confined to a quota and should be integrated throughout all branches of the service, (which, incidentally, could be done immediately with the ten per cent now in the armed forces), and that the quota for Negroes in the army should be abolished. On both of these points, in all probability, most Negro leaders would agree, but taken in the context of McNutt's entire statement it seems as if they were used as a smoke screen.

THE point that I believe McNutt was trying to get over was that by putting the Negro manpower pool, which he cannot so easily place in industries or on northern farms, in the army, it would relieve the Administration of loads of headaches. One might raise the question as to whether the Negro should not, as he is, by and large, less trained for industrial work and northern farming, be used to release white industrial workers and farmers for essential work. This argument breaks down, however, when one considers that it takes as long to train a man to fight as it does to train him for industry.

WHAT ABOUT QUOTA FOR INDUSTRY?

Although not in favor of quotas in any form, I would like to suggest to Commissioner McNutt that he agitate for the integration of Negroes throughout all the services of the armed forces using the ten per cent which is in the army before trying to change the ratio. To solve his industrial manpower question (and farm manpower question for that matter) he could insist that a Negro quota of ten per cent be integrated throughout all the levels of skills in industry.

THE slogan McNutt first brought out was "work or fight." If this present suggestion is to be carried out it might change the slogan to "work or fight" for white people but for Negroes, "fight because we can't place you in industry and on Northern farms."

Lawyers Guild Hits Bias Against Negro Lawyers in U.S. Forces

Daily Worker New York City

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 2.—Turning a glaring spotlight on discrimination practiced against Negro attorneys, the National Lawyers Guild today called attention to the "unwillingness" of the Judge Advocate General's office of the Army and Navy "to grant commissions to Negro attorneys despite the fact that there are more than 500,000 Negro soldiers and sailors in the armed forces."

MAY 3 1943

The Guild statement also pointed "to the unequal representation of Negro attorneys in Federal and State departments and agencies" and announced formation of a special committee to work for the complete elimination of every form of discrimination against Negro attorneys.

"We feel very strongly in this connection that the appointment of Negro attorneys to posts in the diplomatic service would do much to enhance our relations among the United Nations," the Guild declared, pointing out that such a policy would pay dividends "particularly in developing greater friendship and collaboration with the countries of Latin America and other nations where the colored peoples comprise a substantial section of the population."

The Guild statement welcomed the widespread repercussions among members of the bar which followed the question raised concerning the admission of a distinguished Negro attorney into the American Bar Association as "evidence of the deep, popular conviction that the abolition of racial discrimination in every aspect of our national life is essential for the attainment of victory."

While the principle of non-discrimination was one of "the fundamental motivating factors which led to the establishment of the National Lawyers Guild," NLG President Robert W. Kenny, Attorney-General of California, declared that the Guild welcomed "every indication which tends towards the acceptance of this principle by the entire Bar."

The Guild hit out hard at the policy of discrimination practiced by the Army and Navy despite the fact that there are many qualified Negro lawyers who desire to serve in the Judge Advocate General's office but are denied commissions.

"Granting of commissions to Negro attorneys in the Judge Advocate General's office would do much to enhance the morale of our armed forces," the Guild declared.

Urging all bar associations to adopt a program of activity leading towards the complete elimination of every form of discrimination against Negro attorneys, the Guild announced formation of a special national committee for this purpose and instructed all chapters to hold special meetings to discuss this problem.

Among the members of the national committee are Honorable Robert W. Kenney, Honorable William E. Hastie, Hon. William H. Holly, Hon. Nathan Perlman and Carev McWilliams.

Levy May Face 2nd Court-Martial for Liberal Fight

NEW YORK.—Fear that ex-Sgt. Alton Levy, Jewish soldier, may be retried by a general court-martial for his fight against mistreatment of colored comrades was expressed this week by officials of the Workers' Defense League.

Levy, attached to the Lincoln, (Neb.) Army Air Base, was first tried by a special court-martial on August 16, reduced to the rank of private and sentenced to four months' imprisonment at hard labor.

May Use Personal Letters

Testimony of Corp. Helen Perkins, a WAC with whom Levy had kept several dates, led to his conviction. Letters to Miss Rosalind Peck of New York, which were quoted in Workers' Defense League releases, are expected to be used as a basis of the second trial.

Criticisms of his post commander and of alleged connections with Lincoln politics were included in accusations against Levy, who was convicted of making subversive statements. Principal basis for his prosecution, however, is understood to be his outspoken opposition to discriminatory practices at the post.

WDL officials are urging a flood of telegrams and letters to President Roosevelt in behalf of Levy's liberation.

SENATOR DOWNEY
BILL TO INVESTIGATE DISCRIMINATION IN THE ARMED FORCES

From the "California Eagle," Negro paper.

SEN. Sheridan Downey of California has introduced a Senate resolution to investigate discrimination against Negroes in the armed forces. Hearings will be held shortly—if the resolution receives needed public support. . . . The petition ordering the discharge of the anti-poll tax bill, HR 7, introduced by Representative Marcantonio and supported by a bi-partisan coalition in the House has been completed. The final House vote on the legislation takes place on May 25, with debate the preceding day. Supporters of the poll tax now plan to defeat the bill by burdening it with amendments. However, the chances of passing the measure are extremely favorable—if congressmen's mail sufficiently reflects the demand back home for affirmative action. . . . In NEW MASSES of May 11, I pointed out that war production still falters. The Kilgore sub-committee of the Senate Military Affairs Committee has just issued its important first interim report on war mobilization. It concludes: "Either we go forward to undertake the integration of basic mobilization policies in the fields of manpower, production, and stabilization, or we will continue to proceed haltingly from one emergency to another. The time has come—indeed, it has all but passed—for basic policy integration. We cannot accept the doctrine that we are in the middle of a war, and therefore cannot undertake to effect total mobilization. That is a doctrine of despair. It must be discarded if we are to forge ahead to victory."

Drive Jim Crow From the Army

JUL 15 1943

There is one agency of the Government which can by a simple act exert a powerful leverage on the problem of racism. That is the Army. Jim Crowism in the Army is a bigger and more sinister symbol in the mind of the ordinary Negro than anything else that happens to him. And the Army can act to give Jim Crow a dishonorable discharge.

Consider what this means to the young Negro who comes into the Army. If he has been living in the South he has, after a manner, got accustomed to Jim Crow—if one can ever speak of getting accustomed to constant humiliation and injustice. But he has hoped that in the Army things would be different. They are not.

JUL 15 1943

And if the young Negro is a Northerner, he may be even more bitter. Although he has lived with discrimination, he has had a chance to avoid it somewhat—steering clear of the hotels, restaurants, schools, social groups that would bar him. He gets into the Army and he finds that discrimination has become rigid. He cannot avoid it. The Army is a system of rules and discipline, and Jim Crow is bone of its bone.

Can we wonder that the morale of Negroes in the Army is low? Not only are there sporadic riots and shootings, some of which are given publicity and some suppressed. There is a constant state of tension. I think it is no secret that the problem of Negro morale has given War Dept. officials more headaches than any other single problem they have.

JUL 15 1943

And obviously more is involved than Army morale. Civilian morale is involved as well. What happens to the Negro in the Army has become, and rightly, the great and ranking symbol of how genuinely we mean our war purposes. It has become this for 13 million Negroes in the United States. And it is, at least potentially, a weapon our enemies can use against us all over the world now and after the war.

JUL 15 1943

The Army has been asked repeatedly, by whites and Negroes alike, to drive Jim Crow out. PM embodied, as part of its program after Detroit, the suggestion that the Army develop an experimental mixed unit of Negroes and whites. A similar suggestion, I understand, has come from such high Catholic quarters as Bishop Shiel of Chicago.

JUL 15 1943

Note that the requests are moderate enough. No one is asking the Army to change overnight. No one is asking the Army to violate anyone's prejudices or to compel any white boy to train and fight alongside a Negro. All that is asked is that the Army officials allow the whites who would like to belong to a mixed unit to volunteer for it.

I gather that the War Dept.'s attitude is that it cannot be expected to try any social experiments in wartime. To this the best answer is that this "experiment" goes to the essence of the fighting morale of the soldiers—not only of the Negroes, but of many white soldiers as well, who are outraged and anguished when they see the visage of Jim Crow. The Army would not use a gun that was obsolete: why should it continue to use an obsolete social pattern?

I have no illusions about how easy it will be to get the Army caste to move on this. Many of the high Army officers are Southern: there is a strong Southern military tradition. Texas A. and M., for example, has more officers in the Army today than West Point has. And the whole officers corps is shot through with racism.

But if the obstacles were not huge, there would be no problem. It is too much, no doubt, to expect the Southerners to change their pattern of thinking. But is it too much to ask that they should not be allowed to force their pattern of thinking on others?

There should be room, even within the rigid confines of the Army, for an Army division made up of whites and Negroes, chosen on a voluntary basis. That the project will work is already clear: for whites and Negroes train together in the Officer Candidate Schools, —the only place in all the Army where Jim Crow does not rule—with no mishaps and with a deepening of understanding on both sides. That the project cannot long be postponed is also clear. There is ferment in the Army. It shows itself in the letters and articles which every publication receives from soldiers. An army and a nation that dam this ferment up will find it has been sitting on the lid of something potentially healthy, something potentially dangerous.

Hastie Blasts Military Authorities for Muddling

JUN 19 1943

Judge William H. Hastie, who endeared himself to the American Negro when he quit as special assistant to the Secretary of War and accused the Army Air Forces Command of "reactionary policies and discriminatory practices," blasted away at the Administration and the military authorities for their muddling through attitude and demanded forthright action this week in an article for the Marshall Field Publications.

He said the events of the first week in June, that brought headline of killings and shootings of Negro soldiers ". . . have served bloody notice that attempts to muddle through cannot succeed. . . . The Administration cannot ease racial tensions by working quietly behind the scenes. The Army cannot check the increasing wave of violence by ponderous investigation of each case as it appears. The Government must take the issue to the people boldly, giving America a measure of understanding and of leadership which is now lacking."

FIGHT BLACK MARKETS

Judge Hastie said the voice of the President and of public officers exhorting us to fight black markets, buy war bonds and that urge miners back to work . . must be heard on this matter of racial strife which is so seriously affecting the war effort."

JUN 19 1943

Hastie insists that the public will follow this initiative, that public opinion can be molded even where the tension is highest. He said the Army keeps itself busy putting out booklets - and other devices of indoctrination instructing our soldiers how to treat the people of India and the South Seas, the Arabs and everyone but "their fellow American soldiers."

Because all communities are interested in the soldier's money, Judge Hastie sees the "out-of-bounds" law as a powerful weapon in the hands of the military authorities that can be used. He said to declare a community "out-of-bounds" for soldiers, black and white until that community takes steps to protect all men in uniform against violence and abuse would "soon make law enforcement a reality rather than a travesty."

Hastie took a crack at the cautious "liberals" advising the Administration on race relations. He said theirs is a council of inaction and that the present situation only confounds and frightens them and leaves them impotent since their moral equipment does not include, "the courage and forthrightness which this crisis demands."

Air Command Wasting Manpower, Hastie Says In New Statement

Points Out That Negroes Trained In Toughest Field

FEB 21 1943

NEW YORK—(SNS)—William H. Hastie, who recently resigned as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, in protest against the shortcoming of the military aviation program as it affects Negroes, Saturday had give an additional statement on aspects of racial discrimination and segregation in the Army Air Forces.

Hastie pointed out that the discrimination-segregation policy was preventing but a mere 200 Negro pilots from qualifying in face of the fact that ultimate objective of success in battle was being hindered. Restrictions on the Negro youth are resulting in wasted manpower, he said.

FEB 21 194

The Howard University Law School dean questioned the decision of the Air Command to train Negroes only as pursuit pilots, which he said constituted the most difficult type of combat aviation. Pointing out that the Air Command expressed doubt of the Negro's ability to fly in the first place, Hastie asked whether the move was an attempt to prove the fact if the Negro failed in the difficult operations branch.

Statistics reveal that 42 per cent of Negro trainees successfully complete their training as pursuit pilots, Hastie said, pointing out that the Negro cadet must become a pursuit pilot or nothing while white cadets may be sorted out and placed according to their apparent aptitudes. Fifty-nine percent of white aviation cadets qualify as flwing officers through this added advantage, he said.

If the Negro flyer fails to meet the physical specifications of the pursuit pilot, if he is too tall or too heavy for pursuit flying, he cannot be an Army flyer, however competent he may be for some flying job other than pursuit work. It was stated. The Air Command has never undertaken a campaign of publicity or promotion designed to get young Negro men with superior training into flying training, Hastie sad.

Doubt that many Negroes will get far as aviation cadets under the new restrictions placed upon the acceptance of volunteers in the army was expressed by Dean Hastie, since papers must survive a long journey through military channels.

Race Segregation In Army Cannot Wait Until War Is Won, WDL Head Warns In Urging Levy Case Review

"The problem of race discrimination is squarely before the public again in the case of Alton Levy," Rev. Laurence T. Hosie, chairman of the national executive board of the Workers Defense League, declared in urging that "it should be made clear that neither Al Levy nor anyone else can be penalized for protesting against this violation of human decency, and American democracy."

Hosie's remarks were telegraphed to Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York, who is the author of Section IV (a) of the 1940 Selective Service law forbidding discrimination against Negroes in the armed forces.

Meanwhile, the WDL disclosure that Army courtmartial authorities who heard the Levy case had pronounced their belief he was innocent of the specifications cited, only to reverse themselves 48 hours later, raised a storm of inquiry in Washington as to the merits of Levy's conviction. James A. Wechsler, P.M.'s national editor, and David Dubinsky, ILGWU international president, strongly queried the War Department on discrepancies in its assertion that Levy was definitely guilty of "slander" and the case officially closed. The WDL's disclosure of the curious reversal of the court opinion on Levy's guilt, termed "an outstanding legal error" by the Chicago labor attorney, Leon Despres who investigated the case, was released through Levy's family by the League.

The pressure on the President to review Levy's conviction for his protests at discriminatory Negro treatment and to end by executive decree the jim crow segregation of Negro soldiers, took added weight October 8th, when PM carried a full page edtiorial by Wechsler, and Dubinsky's telepgraphed plea to New York Senators Robert Wagner and James Mead to demand a full-fledged invesitgation of the Levy case, were released. The significance of Levy's courtmartial, Wechsler's editorial ran, "arises at a time when the status of the Negro in our Army is the source of deep resentment among Negroes and the target of sharp criticism from all democratic groups; at a time when prejudices against union men plainly still prevail in many sections of the Army; at a time when single incidents dramatize to whole peoples the validity of falsehood of democratic manifesttoes."

In calling the court's reversal of opinion a serious legal error, Mr. Despres, Levy's attorney through his father, Morris Levy, further disclosed that although the Army has denied the Negro issue in Levy's trial, the specifications in the courtmartial charges of which Levy was held guilty on every count, specifically cited "wilful and malicious" intent in spreading "false statements" concerning the Negro situation in the Lincoln Air Base. Mr. Despres, the Levy family disclosed through the WDL, is coming to Washington in the coming week to present his brief contesting the accuracy of War Department claims concerning Levy's guilt, under which the Department now considers the case closed.

Filing Of Navy Yard Complaints Under Way By Urban League And Natl. Negro Congress

New York, N. Y. — Age

The second meeting to obtain specific cases of alleged Brooklyn Navy Yard discrimination against Negro workers called jointly by the National Negro Congress, Brooklyn Council and the Brooklyn Urban League Industrial Department, Wednesday, brought out representatives of such leading civic organizations as the NAACP, Central YWCA, New York State Conference of Negro Youth, trade unions and a large number of grived Negro Navy Yard workers.

The gathering was presided over by Lorenzo F. Davis, industrial secretary of the Brooklyn Urban League and Edward Strong, executive secretary of the National Negro Congress; the outstanding business taken up was the formal recording of complaints and working out methods of action to adjust them.

Samuel Risk, a local FEPC examiner, counselled the workers on properly filing written complaints and assured them of the FEPC's protection from job intimidation, giving as example the courageous action of Negro workers testifying at the current Railroad hearings in Washington. In the past, such fears have retarded action on the part of Negro workers in the Navy Yard.

After a free discussion of workers' grievances, close to a dozen complaints, charging, in most cases, refusal to upgrade, segregation, and unequal working conditions were recorded. Many more were promised within a few days.

A committee of workers was formed, by unanimous agreement, to ask representatives of the United Federal Workers of America (UFWA), leading Navy Yard union to attend an executive meeting on Octobr 18th with other organizational representaives to hear complaints and enlist their aid for Negro workers within the yard. After careful examination at this meeting, all substantial complaints will be filed with the FEPC Regional Office, followed by other appropriate action decided upon by the group.

The next public meeting is to be held Wednesday, October 20th, at 8:30 p. m., place to be announced.

All persons who feel that they have been discriminated against by the Brooklyn Navy Yard, whether working there now or not, should report such cases immediately to the Brooklyn Urban League, 105 Fleet place, Brooklyn or the National Negro Congress, 307 Lenox avenue, New York City.

NAACP Asks Probe of Alton Levy Court Martial

Daily Worker

New York, N. Y.

President Roosevelt was urged yesterday by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to investigate the court martial of Alton Levy.

Levy, convicted on Aug. 16 of circulating slanderous rumors about his commanding officer, is serving a four-month term at hard labor, at the Lincoln, Nebraska, air base.

The War Department states that there is no basis for allegations, publicized by Socialist Party groups, that Levy has been mistreated, because of his alleged championing of the rights of Negroes in the Army.

The NAACP letter to the President on the case, which was signed by Roy Wilkins, the Association's assistant secretary, stated:

"The case as it now stands is bound to give the public the impression that the Army command will find a way to punish a soldier who makes critical comment of the mistreatment of Negroes in the Army."

Wilkins urged the President that "the record of the Court Martial should be carefully examined to determine if it is a proper case for the exercise of the pardoning power on the grounds.

"1—That Alton Levy did not receive a fair trial.

"2—That there was not sufficient evidence on which to predicate a finding of guilty."

Several other groups, among them the International Ladies Garment Workers for which Levy was formerly an organizer, have asked for a probe.

Negroes Eager To Fight For U. S., Says Educator

BUFFALO, N. Y.—(AP)—The Negroes of the United States want a chance to fight for their country, says Dr. James E. Shepard, president of the North Carolina College for Negroes.

Speaking at the 20th anniversary of the Michigan Avenue Negro Y. M. C. A., Dr. Shepard asserted Friday night that the Negro "wants a chance to work and not be discriminated against on account of his color. He wants a chance to fight for his country; he does not want to be robbed of his self-respect."

"A victorious United States must inevitably mean a victorious Negro," the educator said. "At a time when the ideals of democracy are being threatened by foreign powers, our first obligation is in the service of our country. There can be no justification for any plan of action which in the least threatens the success of our war effort."

He said that while "nobody of intelligence or knowledge would say that the Negro has received, throughout our country, even a substantial measure of his rights, we know also that there is no country other than ours in which 12,000,000 or more Negroes have found the opportunities which we find in this country."

FEPC Withdraws Accusation Of Virginian R'way

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

SEP 13 1943

WASHINGTON — Withdrawal of complaints against the Virginia Railway Company and consequent removal of the firm's name from the list of 23 railroad companies summoned to appear at public hearings in Washington, D. C. on Sept. 15 to 18, was announced Sunday by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice.

The Committee's action followed receipt of official notification from the Association of Colored Railway Trainmen and Firemen, Inc., representing the complainants, that satisfactory adjustment had been reached with the Virginia Railway Company through the offices of the National Mediation Board on Monday, September 6.

CLAIMED DIFFERENTIALS

The complainants were filed originally with the FEPC in June, 1942. Through the Association, 46 workers had charged that the Virginian Railway Company had maintained unfair differentials in wages and working conditions between Negro and white workers at its Sewall Point Coal Piers, Norfolk, Virginia. Negroes, it was charged, were classified as car riders, performed brakeman's work but were not given a standard rate of pay nor granted overtime pay until after 10 hours per day.

In contrast to this situation the complaints pointed out, white workers doing the same work received a standard rate of pay wihch was higher than that for the Negroes and further, received overtime pay for all work over eight hours per day.

SEP 13 1943

Joseph C. Waddy, General Chairman for the Association, represented the complainants in the mediation preceedings which were begun Thursday, September 2, and notified the FEPC, at conclusion of the proceedings, that a satisfactory adjustment had been reached, requesting that the original complaints be withdrawn.

ACCUSATION CITED

Mr. Waddy's letter of notification to the Committee said in part:

"In June, 1942, the Association of Colored Railway Trainmen and Locomotive Firemen filed with your Committee a complaint against the Virginian Railway Company charging that Company with discrimination against Negroes because of race. The discrimination charged consisted of the refusal of the Company to grant its far riders (all of whom are Negroes) employed at Sewalls Point Coal Terminals, Norfolk, Virginia, working conditions substantially equal to those grantel white pier employees and also its refusal to pay the car riders wages equal to the wages paid similar employees on the Norflok and Western Railroad and the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, both of which operate in the same area.

SEP 13 1943

"You are hereby advised that on September 6, 1943, the Virginian Railway Company and this Association entered into an agreement (copy of which is attached the effect of subsantially wiping out the major differences between the working conditions of the white pier employees and the car riders.

SEP 13 1943

"You are further advised that information has come to the Association indicating that the differential in rates of pay for car riders employed on the Virginian and those employed on the Norfolk and Western and the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroads is not necessarily based on race but other factors.

"Under the circumstances, the Association desires to withdraw the complaint against the Virginian Railway Company."

FEPC Probes 'Jim Crow' in Vital West Coast Shipyard Centers

Guardian
Boston, Mass.

(Special to The Worker)

NOV 28 1943

LOS ANGELES.

The government has started an offensive against one of the worst Jim Crow centers in war industry—West Coast shipyards, where AFL unions and management alike discriminate against Negro workers although there is an acute manpower shortage.

In the past week, the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee, headed by Malcolm Ross, has conducted hearings into practices at the Kaiser yards, Portland, Ore., home of the notorious Boilermakers Local 72, and into practices at several yards in the Los Angeles area.

In both centers, qualified Negroes have been refused jobs, those who did get work were denied full application of their skills, and were refused training and up-grading. In several L. A. yards, as at Portland those who were employed were forced to join a Jim Crow "auxiliary" of the AFL Boilemakers Union, which compelled them to pay dues but denied them voting rights. Those who refused to pay, were discharged.

PORTLAND HEARING

The Portland hearing was highlighted by testimony from Joseph Lake, white official of the AFL International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, who told the five-man FEPC body that from 300 to 500 of his 16,000 members working at Kaiser, are Negroes and that harmonious relations prevail. He said he saw no reason why discrimination or segregation should exist.

The Rev. J. J. Clow, Baptist Church pastor and president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, testified that colored workers who appealed to him for help in keeping their jobs at Kaiser were refused a chance to join the Boilemakers and told by union representatives that they must join a Jim Crow auxiliary or else lose their jobs.

Robert Rhone, 17, and Raymond Gee, 31, two New Yorkers who came to Portland when Kaiser pleaded with the East for manpower, testified that they had been fired because they refused to join the Jim Crow auxiliaries. Skilled men, they were promised skilled jobs but when they got to Portland, they were offered common labor posts only.

LOS ANGELES PROBE

At Los Angeles, the FEPC heard testimony concerning practices at California Shipbuilding Corp., Consolidated Shipbuilding Corp., Western Pipe and Steel Corp., and those strange auxiliaries to which boilermakers relegate their Negro members.

Walter Williams, young Negro welder, organizer of the Shipyard Workers Committee for Equal Participation, which helped bring the FEPC west, testified that many Negroes paid dues to the auxiliary only because failure to do so meant discharge.

PARADE OF WITNESSES

A whole parade of witnesses, Negro and white, added testimony on discriminatory practices in the yards. Attractively Ruby Ryder Johnson told how she had been refused a job as a clerk, when clerks were needed. Christopher Kemp, an auxiliary steward, told how stewards of the Jim Crow locals were not recognized for the settlement of grievances. William L. Moore, who trained at school as a shipfitter, related how he had been forced to take a job as a military policeman.

There was no testimony from the Boilermakers Union. At Portland, local officials pleaded they were without responsibility, that the International made the policy. The International was not represented there or in Los Angeles, though it had been invited.

Council Votes Against Mixing Races in Offices

With an assertion that "mixed employment of the races" was planned in one or more Atlanta office buildings, City Council has called upon congressional representatives "to insist upon the removal" of the Southeastern regional office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment in the Ten Forsyth Street Building.

"The race situation can best be handled by local people," said a resolution adopted by Council Monday afternoon. "The activities of this committee in other parts of the South and particularly in Alabama have resulted in the building up of racial animosities."

The regional office was opened here last week to expedite handling of charges of discrimination in war work.

FEPC Defied by Railroads In South on Hiring Negroes

New York Times
New York, N. Y.

President's Board Is Told Its Orders Are Unconstitutional and Handicap to War—Retort Charges Evasion

DEC 14 1943

By LOUIS STARK
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13—Challenging the legal and constitutional authority of the President's Committee on Fair Employmen Practice to issue directives to cease discriminatory practices affecting employment of Negroes, sixteen Southern railroads and terminal companies informed the committee today that they could not comply with its orders of Nov. 18, 1943, because to do so would seriously handicap the war program.

Compliance, they declared in a letter to the FEPC, was impracticable, "and indeed impossible," and would violate the Railway Labor Act.

Offering to confer with their employes under the provisions of the Railway Labor Act, the employers declared frankly that it was "utterly unrealistic to suppose that these railroads and their employes can agree to comply with the breadth of your directives or that problems of such delicacy, controlled and governed by a special act of Congress, can be solved out of hand by the fiat of your committee's directives."

The railroads sent a summary of their viewpoint to members of Congress.

The issues were the subject of a four-day hearing in Washington in September. Seven unions were asked to appear at the hearing, but did not so. As a result of the testimony the FEPC gave the parties thirty days to cease discrimination against Negroes. The roads covered by the Southeastern Carriers Conference agreement with the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen were directed to set aside this agreement on the ground that it was designed to cut down the employment of Negroes as firemen and to increase the hiring of white persons for that job.

The reply of the railroads today indicated that they were ready to carry the case to the Supreme Court.

Malcolm Ross, chairman of the FEPC, [illegible] a reply to the railroads, declaring that their letter of today "makes a public bid for disapproval of FEPC by viewing with alarm alleged pretensions of Negroes to be engineers and conductors" but that "the plain fact is that this issue is dormant and could remain so if the railroads offer justice to Negro railroad men in the classifications where reason and public policy both urge it."

Gives Definition of Issue

The Southeastern agreement, Mr. Ross stated, was "concerned with the hiring and use of Negroes as firemen and not with their promotion from firemen to engineers." He denied that there was any conflict between his committee's directives and the Railway Labor Act and added that the committee was not suggesting anything which could not be done in conformity with that act.

Two orders affecting the West Coast were issued today by the FEPC.

It ordered the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers and all its lodges at Portland, Ore., and Los Angeles, to eliminate all membership practices which discriminated against workers because of race or color.

It also ordered five West Coast shipbuilding companies to reinstate all Negro workers discharged because of their refusal to pay dues to boilermaker auxiliary unions. The companies were also ordered to cease discharging or refusing to hire Negroes solely because they had failed to obtain clearance from the union.

The companies involved are the Oregon Shipbuilding Corporation and the Kaiser Company, Inc., in the Portland-Vancouver area, and the California Shipbuilding Corporation, Consolidated Steel Corporation (shipbuilding division), and the Western Pipe and Steel Corporation, in the Los Angeles area.

The committee found, after public hearing, that the Boilermakers Union created auxiliaries for Negro workers only. Auxiliary members, it was stated, had no voice or vote in the conduct of the union's affairs and must accept as their business agent the business agent of the supervising lodge in whose election the auxiliaries had no part.

The hearings were held after several hundred Negroes were dismissed for refusing to pay dues to auxiliary boilermakers locals, charging that these locals were discriminatory.

FEPC Hearings

SEP 24 1943

You stated editorially with some justice September 17 that the hearings by the Fair Employment Practices Committee into discriminatory employment practices by the country's railroads were "ritualistic" and that the evidence of discrimination against Negroes "is apparent to the naked eye."

I agree wholeheartedly with you when you decry "the obvious violence done to democratic principles by the current practices of the railroad industry" and I want to underscore your statement pointing up the "urgent practical need at this time for wider utilization of Negro skills."

But while the railroads' discrimination is "apparent to the naked eye," what is also equally evident is the beam in your own eye when you charge that "the labor organizations (are) primarily responsible for the discrimination."

Here is a hearing called by a Government agency for the single purpose of discovering how the present anti-Negro policy came about and what the present situation is on the Nation's railroads, and what happens? Without waiting to hear one scintilla of evidence and without even the pretense of an investigation by The Post, you have determined who is guilty and you have brought in a verdict: "The Government's power should be used to break their (rail brotherhoods) monopolistic control."

If The Post had had a reporter covering the initial hearings, as many other papers did, it would have learned that spokesmen for 22 of the Nation's leading railroads charged by the FEPC with discrimination argued only that their employment policies reflect the civilization in which they operate, reflect, as they said, "the prevailing more and legal system of the States they serve."

At no time did they even so much as hint that the unions were "primarily responsible" for the discrimination.

The Government's power should be used against the real culprits, of course.

Bi-Racial Committee Gets Busy:

Ask Congress Probe Of Demoting Two Sergeants For Bias Protest

The People's Voice New York N.Y.

MAR 27 1943

ST. PAUL, Minn.—Encouraged by reports from reliable sources that both Samuel Reed, a local boy, and Clifford Clemmons of Kansas City have been promoted to sergeants in the regiments they were transferred to after being demoted last October following their protest at Camp Lee of discriminatory conditions at the post, the Minneapolis and St. Paul branches of the NAACP are planning to redouble their effort to a congressional investigation of discriminatory treatment of Negroes in the armed forces. They are being aided by a Coordinating Committee of prominent Twin City citizens, both Negro and white.

47d

Reed, now in Africa, was a sgt. major at Camp Lee before his demotion and Clemmons, last reported stationed at Fort Dix, was a first sergeant. The two high-ranking non-coms, along with 9 other Negro sergeants, last October 24, presented a list of recommendations to their commanding officers at Lee, asking that Negro soldiers be granted their "full and equal rights on the military reservation and in the surrounding community." The list of recommendations centered around charges of discrimination in the assignment and equipment of Negro military police; discrimination on public conveyances, in the use of facilities of the camp (post exchanges, theatres, service clubs, sport centers and certain areas); the discriminatory policy of the War Department in limiting Negroes by quota in some branches of the service (the Army Air Corps) and the opening of branches now closed to Negroes (the Army Glider program).

Patterson Replies To Questions On Negro In Aviation

Hastie Calls Answer 'Misleading Impression'

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — The air force is now bringing the Negro fighter group "to strength" and will train them to carry out their combat mission, according to Robert P. Patterson, under secretary of war. The question of training additional units, including a bomber group, is now under study, he added. In addition to this, he said, air base security battalions will be organized and given the "important tactical duty" of guarding air bases "not only in continental United States, but also in overseas theatres."

47d

This statement of program and policy of the war department was contained in a letter which the under secretary last week wrote to Wilbur La Roe Jr., white of the Washington Federation of Churches, in answering 12 questions which the latter, as chairman of the federation's committee on civic affairs, had submitted.

Mr. LaRoe wrote the war department on March 13 inquiring about certain alleged discriminations against Negroes in the army air forces. Less than a week after its receipt, the department invited Mr. LaRoe and his committee into a conference. Among the four committee members was the Rev. Hallie Tabor, local figur-

BATTERY OF GENERALS

The army was represented by "a battery of generals" headed by the under secretary. Truman K. Gibson, the civilian aide to Secretary Stimson, was not present.

At the conclusion of the conference Mr. Patterson was asked to put his remarks in writing, the result of which is the letter received by Mr. LaRoe last week. Although Mr. Gibson was not acceptable higher up the ladder of authority.

The department was asked in one question to comment on the "allegation" that Negroes are restricted to single engine pursuit ships and barred from training for the heavy bombers.

"It is true that Negroes are so far being given the opportunity for training on single engine pusuit ships," was the admission. "It was believed wise to [illegible] by training a fighter group, where only one air man per plane is involved, namely the pilot. To train a heavy bomber group, it is necessary to train in addition to the pilot, a navigator, a bombardier, an aerial gunner, a radio operator, an additional mechanic and several other technicians. Because of the technical and other features present in flying, it was decided to proceed toward the formation of more complicated units after having gained experience with the simpler units."

AVIATION SQUADRONS

Inquiry was made with regard to the "aviation squadrons (separate)" which have been established for colored soldiers "but that serve no specific military need and have never had a defined function,'" unless it be "common labor." The answer here was:

"They provide a place for man in the air force who do no have the qualifications for more technical work. The duties they perform are to a large extent labor and housekeeping jobs that have to be done at every air force base. While there are no white units actually named 'aviation squadron (separate)' there are many white headquarters which perform the same type of duties at air force installations."

The war department policy provides that 55 per cent of those going to air force must pass the army general classification test and the mechanical aptitude test with a grade of 100 or better. The other 45 per cent who don't and who go into that branch are assigned to unskilled jobs. The secretary says that, cacording to exrerience, 47 per cent of white enlisted men meet this qualification, while only 10 per cent of the Negroes inducted measure up.

"As a consequence," he added, "in order to absorb the same proportion of Negroes as exists in the total population, a small percentage of them who enter the air corps are qualified for entrance into the technical school, and the large majority must be assigned to unskilled tasks."

Mr. LaRoe saw in this decrepancy the handicap which Negroes, particular in the soouth, must labor through the ineaquality of educational facilities.

MEDICAL OFFICERS

The LaRoe letter also asked whether or not it was true that Negro medical officers are admitted to the principal school of aviation medicine at Randolph field. This is one of the complaints made against the air force by William H. Hastie, former civilian aide to the secretary, following his resignation Feb. 1.

"Until Feb. 1 of this year," was the reply, "Negro medical officers at Tuskegee were not in residence at the school of aviation medicine at Randolph field. Since that date, however, they have been assigned to residence study there. This schooling was originally covered by extension courses and by commutation to Maxwell field as a comparatively small number were involved. When this matter was brought to the attention of the air force headquarters, the change was made in order that Negro medical officers could have the same opportunity as the white medical officers.'"

The Patterson letter gave the assurance that while white officers have charge of the training at Tuskegee, Negroes will be given command duties as soon as they qualify.

Invited to comment on the reply, Mr. LaRoe declared: "Race dicrimination is one of our worst social evils. It is the No. 1 enemy of brotherhood and of a stable post-war world. It does more actual harm than any other thing, and it is, in addition, utterly silly. But I do not see how we can expect the army to make further progress in the matter of brotherhood than we are able to make in civilian life."

The solution? "The best approach to a solution is in civilian life," he proposed. "The way to do it is to do it. And it must be done in a practical way." He invited his own successful efforts in first bringing Negro representatives into the Washington Federation of Churches where a colored man now serves on the board. He pointed to a similar effort on the district parole board of which he is a member along with Lt. Col. Campbell C. Johnson. Together they have been able to get Negro girls employed in the offices of the board, unsegregated, where only a small staff is maintained at any time.

Recently President Mordecai Johnson of Howard university spoke at Mr. LaRoe's church at the invitation of the latter, the result of which was that many members protested bringing a Negro into their church. He believes, however, that in time this antagonism will be wiped out just as it has in other instances.

Although Dean Hastie said he had read the letter to Mr. LaRoe, he confined his comment to this: "The letter is a combination of half-truths and untruths that conveys a seriously misleading impression." He promised a more detailed statement this week.

Air Force Again Forced To Shift Race Instructors

CHANUTE FIELD, Ill.—(ANP)—The fate of the group of Negro instructors trained here last year and which the air corps can't decide what to do with is still unsettled.

Chanute field thought it had sent them out to do useful work two months ago when they were transferred to half a dozen fields to train mechanics for various aviation ground crews. In crews of 12 to 16 they were sent to various air fields in Mississippi, North Carolina and Nebraska. Last week after protest by southern officials because they were teaching whites, they all were bundled up and shipped back north, some of them to Chanute field, others to Lincoln, Neb. Where they will go next nobody appears to know.

More than 100 civilians were hired by the air corps to be trained as instructors something over a year ago. At that time, plans were in prospect to establish a complete training school at Tuskegee in connection with the flying school. There ground crews were to be turned out to fill every need for maintenance and repair men for an aviation squadron. The men to be trained were designed primarily for replacements with the 99th Pursuit Squadron at Tuskegee and for the 100th, 101st, 102nd and other squadrons to be trained at the same place. Five women in the squads were trained in instrument maintenance.

HITCH OCCUR MAR 2 4 1943

Somewhere a hitch occurred and the men when finally trained, were not sent to Tuskegee. It is said the mechanical school which was to be set up there was abandoned because of opposition by Judge William Hastie, then civilian aide to the secretary of war, and others. The instructors were stalled around here at Chanute, given refresher courses and generally given the run around. Finally, two months ago, they were shipped away, a squad going to each of the following fields: Goldsboro, N. C., Gulfport Miss.; Boloxi, Miss, Wichita Falls, Texas; Amarille, Texas and Lincoln, Neb.

The receptions the men met were varied. At Goldsboro, N. C., they were put to work until they demanded they be given teaching assignments. At Gulfport, Miss., reputed to be a particularly well officered field, the squad was put to teaching immediately. The officer in command, to whom they reported, told them to go on in and take charge. The instructors received every courtesy, had their meals in the same mess that all other soldiers had. There were only 16 colored soldiers at Gulfport. In their classes and in the town, the squad got along well. The instructors taught only white soldiers various maintenance skills. All of the groups taught only whites where they were permitted to teach at all. No one appears to know why the air force after its policy of exclusion, should suddenly decide to assign Negro teachers to white soldiers in the south.

At Biloxi, Miss., hostility met the squad as soon as it arrived. Officers were discourteous and contemptuous. There happened to be several spirited men among the instructors however, and is it reported that they gave as good as they received. They demanded their teaching assignments and generally insisted upon their rights. The commanding officer is said finally to have called the leaders in and told them that he had never seen any Negroes such as they were, before.

Governor Paul Johnson of Mississippi, although reputed to be the fairest governor Mississippi has had in years, wrote a scorching letter, described by some as vicious, to the war department excoriating them for sending Negroes to Mississippi camps to teach white soldiers. The war department is said to have sent a reply which knocked the "Ole Miss" governor on his heels, practically telling him to mind his own business.

Nevertheless without warning, a week ago, the various units received orders to move. Those at Gulfport, Wichita Falls and Amarilla were sent to Lincoln. Those at Biloxi and Godslboro were returned here to Chanute. What's next is what the instructors would like to know. There are some who think the units will gradually be discouraged and weeded out. One thing is certain, some one has bobbled somewhere. In the meantime it is said there is great need for additional trained maintenance men to service the planes of the squadrons at Tuskegee.

Army Pampers Dixie Jimcro At Expense Of Negro Soldiers

The People's Voice New York N.Y.

FEB 27 1943

Extra

"We asked him if the laws of the state were of such miportance as to overshadow the demands of victory. He evaded the question until it was re-stated, and then implied that the state comes first when it comes to segregation and that the nation was secondary."

This is not a quote from the Civil War era. It is an excerpt from a letter written to PV by a Negro soldier stationed at Camp Claiborne, Louisiana, and tells of the attitude of a white southern college official who explained to a group of our soldiers why they were not to be included in the chance to take night extension courses offered at the camp in cooperation with the General Extension Division of Louisiana State University and Louisiana college.

On Jan. 20, the soldier states, there was posted a circular directed to "all enlisted personnel of Camp Claiborne, Louisiana." It was titled 'Educational." and made announcement of the proposed classes in Spanish, the Psychology of Leadership, and of War Service.

NOT FOR NEGRO SOLDIERS

A group of Negro soldiers attended an organization meeting for the classes held Feb. 1, after their company commander had informed them he could see no reason why Negroes would be excluded, seeing the courses were sponsored in conjunction with an army camp, and advised them to attend the meeting.

When they arrived, the Public Relations officer and a Dr. B. M. Smith of LSU, stated:

"Boys, this is going to be somewhat embarrassing for us, but we will have to inform you that full provisions have not been made for you. . . .

When the soldiers protested, they were told provisions would be made for them at a camp under the auspices of Southern University (Negro). The boys said such arrangements would not be satisfactory because of the fact Southern did not have the facilities with which to teach technical war subjects, and they inquired whether or not it was fully realized what importance such courses might play in future victory or defeat of this country.

RACE SECONDARY NOW

Another excerpt from the letter reads: "We emphasized that these courses would equip us to fight the common enemy with greater dexterity and proficiency, and that we could settle our relatively small grievances of race distinction at a later and more universally convenient date."

The college official insisted that "the policies and laws of this state were so designed as to prohibit our being a member of this class;"

JIMCRO OK'd TO 'KEEP PEACE'

Dixie race prejudice is so deeply ingrained that the Army, at the risk of discouraging and making miserable thousands of loyal Negro soldiers, confirms. The "pampering" continues even with America getting deeper and deeper into the war with each passing day. At the 310 Aviation Squadron, AAF Flexible Gunnery School, at Fort Meyers, Fla., there is a bulletin advising service men, both Negro and white, on "Adjustment of Personnel On Local Customs, Laws and Ordinances." It is a clear, concise formula for following the jimcro laws of Florida.

Item 1 reads: "It is the policy of this Command that all personnel will respect and adhere to all local customs, laws and ordinances. It is probable that many of the officers and soldiers at this Post are or will be from PARTS OF THE COUNTRY WHERE THERE ARE NO SEGREGATION LAWS SIMILAR TO THOSE ENFORCED IN THIS AND OTHER SOUTHERN STATES."

Item 5: . . . "These instructions will be repeated by officers to all of their personnel at appropriate intervals to insure that every soldier, both white and colored, clearly understands and abides by these laws and customs. The Army did not establish these customs, but it must recognize their existence. Conformance with them will keep soldiers out of trouble and avoid friction with local civilian population. The Army demands respect for the uniform that every soldier wears, but it is mandatory that every soldier act in a manner befitting a soldier and thus earn this respect."

If the Army demands respect for the uniform every soldier wears, it rightfully should demand respect for the uniform worn by a Negro soldier. In southern towns, our soldiers are insulted, beaten and humiliated by white civilians.

SAME IN WORLD WAR I

In James Weldon Johnson's Black Manhattan are accounts of the jimcro and discrimination suffered by Negro soldiers in World War I—the war was to make the world safe for democracy. The democracy that is once more imperilled by the very force making up the backbone of the South's jimcro structure—race hate.

"There were some depressing happenings at home after our entry into the war. From the other side came tidings far from being glad. There came back reports of the practices of discrimination and "Jim Crowism" against Negro soldiers; of the efforts to belittle and discredit their fighting abilities; of the ceaseless endeavor at every turn on the part of many of the white American troops to create a prejudice against them WHERE NONE HAD EXISTED. By one means or another, copies of the order entitled Secret Information Concerning Black American Troops found their way from France into the United States. This order, issued at the instance of American authorities and through the French military missions, was for the instruction of French officers in dealing with American Negro troops.

"It deprecated any intimacy between French officers and black officers. Specifically it said: 'We may be courteous and amiable with these last, but we cannot deal with them on the same plane as with the white American officers WITHOUT DEEPLY WOUNDING THE LATTER. We must not eat with them, must not shake hands or seek to talk or meet with them outside of the requirements of the military service.'"—NELL DODSON

Segregated Training Doesn't Make Sense, Says Judge Hastie

FEB 27 1943

Washington Tribune

NOTE: In the following statement, William H. Hastie, who recently resigned as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, in protest against the shortcomings of the military aviation program as it effects Negroes, discusses some additional aspects of racial discrimination and segregation in the Army Air Forces. -- -27 1943

Washington, D. C.

There is not now and never has been any good reason for the segregated training of Negro flyers at Tuskegee.

There are two stages in the training of a soldier to be an Army flyer. The first stage teaches the new cadet how to fly, using small light aircraft adapted to the training of a beginner. This part of the program is carried out by private operators who contract with the Army to give preliminary flying instruction to aviation cadets. The private contractor furnishes the field and the instructors, while the Army selects and assigns the cadets, prescribes the course of instruction and supervises training. There are a great many such contract schools scattered in various sections of the country.

FEB 27 1943

The cadet who successfully completes the elementary flying course at such a school is next assigned to an Army field for further basic and advanced training. From this point on, the Army takes complete charge of the training program.

There was no need to segregate Negro cadets in either stage of training. Newly appointed Negro cadets could have been assigned to beginning classes at any one of the many contract schools just as white cadets are assigned. In fact one or two Negro cadets were so assigned by mistake. But when they arrived for training, arrangements were quickly made to reassign them to Tuskegee. Similarly in the more advanced training, Negroes who had completed the primary course could have been sent to the various Army flying training centers. But the Air Command was determined to separate Negro and white cadets at every stage of training.

Tuskegee Institute was awarded a contract to provide Army primary training for Negro Army aviation cadets. Under this contract the Army enlisted and appointed a small group of Negro cadets every few weeks and sent them to the Tuskegee contract school where Negro instructors employed by Tuskegee Institute gave elementary flying training under Army supervision. Incidently, this caused some confusion, because Tuskegee Institute also has a civilian pilot course which is not connected with the Army. Some young men enrolled in this civilian course under the misapprehension that by doing so they were getting into Army aviation.

For the more advanced training of Negro cadets, the Army invested millions of dollars in the construction of a new Army Air Base for Negroes located a few miles from the town of Tuskegee. Tuskegee Institute has no connection with this Army field or with the advanced training conducted there. However, as to this there has also been some confusion and misunderstanding in the public mind.

But why in the name of common sense should all of this elaborate special machinery be set up to train Negro flyers? It was expensive. It caused a delay of six months or more in the beginning of flying training for Negroes. It was not flexible, since it was adapted only to the training of pursuit pilots. Only by setting up additional Negro training centers for bombardment and observation, or by abandoning segregated training could the program be broadened.

The idea of a separate training base for Negro pilots is indefensible, if Negroes are actually to be an integral part of our combat Air Forces. It is not possible to train flyers in one small area as foot soldiers can be trained. Even in training men must fly from field to field. After a flyer is commissioned, his flying in this country will necessarily take him in and out of a large number of flying fields. If he goes into combat abroad one thing is certain. He will not just fly out of a jim crow base with his own Negro unit and fly back again. Even infantrymen traveling on their own two feet get scattered in combat. How much more are aviators bound to get into unexpected places and undergo regrouping from time to time during the course of a campaign. It is simply impossible to maintain racial segregation of pilots in a combat area. The Air Command must know this.

Since such contacts and mingling are unavoidable, the only sensible thing to do is to prepare men for them by providing inter-racial associations in training such as they are bound to have later on. If we want white and colored flyers in combat to get along well with each other, the best plan is to build mutual understanding and self-respect by training them together from the time they begin learning to fly. The worst plan is to keep them apart until they are forced together under the stress of circumstances in combat. Prejudice is based on ignorance. Let men get acquainted with each other in training and there is no great problem [illegible] harmony later on.

All of this has seemed simple and obvious to me. The Air Command, however, cannot see it. The Air Command is not even influenced by the fact that the Ground Forces have been training white and colored officer candidates together with excellent results ever since the beginning of the present Army expansion.

There are none so blind as those who do not want to see. And the Air Command just does not want to see the advantages of training white and colored flyers together. I believe this blindness will continue until public criticism and condemnation of the segregated training policy becomes so strong that it can no longer be ignored.

Negro Soldiers Clean Toilets Of Whites At Camp Wheeler In Ga.

MAR 6 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Why are Negro soldiers required to rise an hour earlier than white soldiers at Camp Wheeler, Georgia? the Washington Bureau of the NAACP demanded this week of Secretary of War Stimson.

Reveille is sounded at 5:30 a. m. for colored soldiers [illegible]. Upon rising, they clean their own barracks and mess halls, after which they are required to clean the toilets used by white soldiers. White soldiers at Camp Wheeler rise at 6:30 a. m.

MAR 6 1943

In the letter to Stimson, the NAACP declared: "relegation of Negro soldiers by the United States Army to the status of menials gives democracy an empty sound to those who are called upon to sacrifice, fight and die for it."

The NAACP cited the treatment accorded Negroes assigned to the medical detachment as being especialy objectionable.

DISCHARGED WHEN RACE DISCOVERED

TWO OTHERS ALSO SENT BACK TO CIVILIAN LIFE

MAR 3 1943

JEFFERSON CITY, MO. — Faces are still red in the headquarters of the 7the Service command in Omaha after three Negroes, one of them a Lincoln university professor, were inducted as privates along with 2,000 whites, into an aviation cadet unit at Jefferson Barracks, Mo. The mistake was rectified only when the three were given speedy honorabl discharges and placed in orable discrarges and placed in the air force enlisted reserve.

The Lincolnite who had a taste of democracy in the army in Stewart B. Fullbright, an alumnus and a French instructor here until Jan. 31, when he entered Flight "B" of the 1,166th Technical School squadron at Jefferson Barracks. He was gone 10 days before returning to the university to resume his teaching duties.

3 In By Error

MAR 3 1943

Telling of his experiences last week, Mr. Fullbright said: "I thought it strange that I was the only Negro in a group of over 2,00 aviation cadets and I later found out that there were three of us there by mistake."

The others to whome he referred were Wendell R. Smith, of Des Moines, and Charles L. Smith, of St. Louis.

MAR 3 1943

Unfamiliar surroundings didn't phase Pvt. Fullbright. He met no difficulty in going through the processing period along with the white men with whom he had been placed.

"I can sincerely say that during this processing (mental, physical and orientation tests, interviews and drilling), no discrimination was shown toward me," he said. His white companions accepted him ni their conversation and in horseplay and the flight sergeant was especially kind, he aserted.

MAR 3 1943

Pvt. Fullbright ate in a Negro mess hall at his own request, not on orders, but one of his Negro confrers who ate in the general mess was alleged to have been told by a kitchen police officer that "We don't allow N . . . . to eat in here."

MAR 3 1943

All Three Discharged

The day following that incident, according to Pvt. Fullbright, Pvt. Wendell Smith was transferred from Squadron 1,167, which is an aviation cadet unit, to Squadron 917, a Negro unit of enlisted men. Unlike the Lincolnite, he had not ben permitted to go through the processing, but on Feb. 6 he too, was notified that he would be discharged.

The third Negro soldier, Pvt. Charles Smith, was on a 10-day convalescent furlough at that time, observed Pvt. Fullbright, who also saw strange things within the confines of an army post. However, the day this Pvt. Smith reported for duty he was given an honorable discharge, also.

MAR 3 1943

When informed on February 8 that he was to be discharged, Pvt. Fullbright didn't know what to think. The reason given him was that "the Omaha office (headquarters of the Seventh Area command), made a mistake." He was given the honorable discharge and permitted to keep his uniform, but he's still subject to the air reserves, according to a notation typed on his discharge. It took two more days to complete the army routine of issuing the discharge papers.

Calls on Senate to Investigate Discrimination in Armed Forces

PM's Bureau

APR 9 1943

WASHINGTON, Apr. 9.—A Senate investigation of discrimination against Negroes in the armed services was proposed yesterday by Sen. Sheridan Downey (D., Cal.).

Downey proposed that a subcommittee of the Senate Military Affairs Committee be directed to investigate the status of the Negro and other minority groups to determine the extent of compliance with the draft act's prohibition against racial discrimination.

The Committee would be authorized to inquire into practices which exclude personnel from certain assignments because of race or color; the extent to which opportunities for advancement are limited for similar reasons; and the relationship of the system of segregated units to the effective utilization and appropriate placement of personnel on the basis of individual competency and merit.

Hastie's Resignation Cited

Noting that complaints of discrimination have been made, Sen. Downey said some of them have come from "responsible persons in a position to have full knowledge of the facts, among them Mr. William Hastie, formerly civilian aid to the Secretary of War, who has resigned in protest against what he charges to be violations of the non-discrimination provisions of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940."

APR 9 1943

"It has been charged," Downey added, "that despite the severe shortage of competent personnel in the air force, qualified Negro personnel have been hindered in their desire to render their best services in the defense of America.

'Their Loyalty Unquestioned'

"By the end of this year there will be more than 1,000,000 Negro Americans serving their country in armed forces. They will represent more than 10 per cent of all Americans under arms. Their heroism, their loyalty, is unquestioned. The records of such Negro heroes as Dorie Miller at Pearl Harbor offer living testimony of the will of the Negro people to defend the heritage of freedom and democracy which is the birthright of all Americans.

"It becomes vital to the successful prosecution of America's war of survival that the morale of the Negro Americans in our armed forces and of the 12,000,000 more who are now working on the home front, be not impaired by failure of any Government agency to live up to the letter and spirit of existing laws against discrimination."

TROOPS USED BECAUSE SEATTLE SNOW MENACED MILITARY OPERTIONS, SAY ARMY HEAD

MAR 18 1943

Washington, D. C.—Denying that there was discrimination in the recent use of Negro troops for snow removal in Seattle, Washington, Major General J. A. Ulio, Adjutant General of the War Department, told the NAACP this week that the Commanding General of the Northwest section had utilized for this detail the most available troops "who happened to be colored."

In answer to the NAACP's charge that the U. S. Army was using Negro troops to releive municipalities of legitimate expenses, Major General Ulio said:

MAR 18 1943

"The storm in Seattle was of such an extent as to seriously interfere with all activities pertaining to the operation of military installation and defense as well as its civilian activities—the commanding general of the 39th Army Aircraft Artillery Brigade utilized white troops and their equipment to assist in restoring the region of Bremerton Navy Yard and Seattle to normalcy while the commanding general of the Seattle port of embarkation utilized all troops available to him regardless of color in operation of the port and in clearing the snow and ice from that vicinity to permit the proper operation of the port.

"It was impossible to assemble state discrimination committee for formal action on your request in the time specified. CRITICISE NEGRO SHIPYARD ADVISER FOR NEWS ARTICLE

MAY 7 1943

Chicago Bee

Chicago, Illinois

MAY 7 1943

By Leon H. Washington Jr.

OAKLAND, Cal., Mar. 5 (ANP)—Community protest and indignation reached a high pitch here this week following publication of a news item in the San Francisco Chronicle with a picture of Don Gibson who is employed as race adviser at the Richmond Shipyard No. 1. The article read as follows: "I belive race problems in the shipyards are exaggerated by outsiders."

MAY 7 1943

This is the opinion of Don Gibson, the first Negro to become a counselor in the Richmond yards.

"A colored man is a worker like anyone else," he said. "He is producing and helping America to win—he should be made to feel he has something to gain in doing his part to defeat the enemy."

Don's job is to talk over problems with Negroes in Richmond Yard No. 1 and help them get adjusted to their work. He is a big fellow with quiet, friendly eyes that don't miss a thing. He is soft-spoken and chooses his words carefully.

He has six years' experience in personal relations, but feels he learned most about people when he was manager of a night club in Chicago. "I became interested in character reading," he said. "I try to study a man as I talk to him. I make it a point not to get mad at people—you don't get mad at people when you understand them. That's why I can talk about the race problem without getting upset."

This quality of tact comes in handy when Don has to settle a disagreement between two workers.

MAY 7 1943

"I try to keep in mind that the other fellow has a perfect right to think or feel as he does—no matter how I feel about it. And believe it or not, I've never had a fight in my life."

Don started to work in Richmond Yard No. 1 eight months ago as a trainee welder. He already knew how to weld, so he soon became a journeyman. He is full of praise for personnel officials in the yard, who he says give him warm cooperation in every problem that comes up.

Workers and civic leaders loudly condemn Gibson for his statement. One worker who was interviewed stated that he not only disagreed with Gibson but would like to make known his disagreement "in a personal manner with him."

MAY 7 1943

According to the workers discrimination is riding high. Even when persons attempt to get employment their applications have a space for one's nationality. Negroes are not promoted and they point out that white persons coming from the south who have had less experience are immediately promoted to higher positions. Most of the lead men are from Oklahoma and Texas and are put over Negro gangs in order to create racial discrimination and dissension.

MAY 7 1943

The housing conditions are deplorable. Negroes are relegated to one section of the project. Their quarters are unequipped and they have an electric plate for cooking and heating purposes. None of the projects is without their segregated sections.

MAY 7 1943

An incident was related by a young woman who stated that she was employed on Feb. 13 as a welder student at $1.04 per hour. She was then given a slip to purchase a leather jacket, gloves and welder's hood. She went to work that evening, finished her shift during which she was told by the instructor that she was welding too fast and to take it easy. However, the next day she was told to go to the personel office and upon arriving there was informed that she did not have the ability to become a welder.

MAY 7 1943

She then went to Don Gibson but was unable to see him. Later she contacted him at his home at which time she says Gibson told her not to create any disturbances and that after all his power was limited and that he had to protect his job. He would talk to the officials to see what could be done. He called her that morning and told her to come out to the yards. She got there at 1:30 and from that time until 4:00 P. M., she was unable to see anyone. Later she contacted Gibson who arranged for a conference with a Mrs. Kuhne who attempted to pacify her with other jobs which paid less money, in spite of the fact that she had spent over $45 for welding clothes. It was also charged that there is a general policy of the Richmond hiring yards to hire one Negro to every 25 whites.

MAY 7 1943

Mr. Gibson was interviewed and stated that he had been misquoted by the white newspaper and that at all times he had worked to the best interest of the Negro workers. He pointed out the fact his position was that of an arbitrator and that he had been responsible for the employment of a number of Negro women.

MAY 7 1943

C. L. Dellums, civic leader and member of the Bay Cities Anti-Discrimination committee, stated that it was unfortunate that such an incident should occur immediately upon the release of Judge S. Lazarus' report which branded the ship industry here as a hotbed of rank racial segregation and as the bottleneck in our all-out war effort. Many civic leaders condemned the Gibson statement as a cover up for the labor troubles which exist in the shipyards thruout the bay area. They point out that in spite of the need for electricians and machinists, Negroes are denied these jobs simply because of discrimination.

Former Federal Judge William H. In a prepared address Judge Hastie declared that Negro morale was being impaired by discriminatory practices against Negro soldiers, particularly in the South. Negro Labor Ordered Paid as Much as White

WASHINGTON, June 7.—(AP)—Pay differentials between white and Negro labor were under War Labor Board ban today, governed by a decision in a case from Texas.

Directing the Southport Petroleum Company of Texas City to increase the pay of its Negro employes to parity with white workers of the same classification, the board held that "economic and political discrimination on account of race or creed is in line with the Nazi program."

Dr. Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina and public member of the board, wrote the opinion, which called the case "small but significant" and reported that "to the credit of the company" the concern accepted the order in good faith and spirit."

Color Restricts Army Pilots to 200 When 1,000 Can Be Trained

Afro-American
Baltimore. Md

Bombers, Navigators, Gunners, Enlisted Flyers' Units Open to Whites Only.

FEB 20 1943

WASHINGTON

The air command could increase its output of colored flyers from 200 to 1,000 a year if it would remove existing racial restrictions.

This is the view Dr. William H. Hastie expressed in his third public statement issued since resigning as civilian aide to the Secretary of War.

Explaining the failure of the War Air Command to encourage, or even permit, free participation of colored men in flying training and service, Judge Hastie said a few hundred pilots can make a big difference in almost any of the present theatre of war.

Segregation Is Costly

"Of course there would be serious practical difficulties in developing segregated training fields and segregated organizations of many various types in such training fields and segregated organizations of various types in such an expansion," he declared.

"From a military point of view all of this new segregated setup probably would not be worth the time, expense and diversion of personnel.

But if the war lasts long enough, it is not too much to hope that those in authority will realize that their insistence upon strict racial segregation in aviation training and organization is a real hindrance to the ultimate objective of success in battle."

How Restrictions Operate

In March, 1941, the Army Air Corps began accepting colored applicants for aviation cadet training. Actual instruction began several months later, but only in one type of combat aviation — pursuit flying — which it described as an experiment. Dr. Hastie's statement continues:

"The single pilot in his pursuit ship has the most exacting of air tasks, handling his fast plane, maneuvering it at terrific speed in actual combat, mastering the technique of accurate and properly directed fire in aerial dog fights, and exercises split-second judgment in unexpected situations and emergencies.

"Why was the colored man, whose ability was in doubt (?) not started off with observation flying or in bombardment where co-pilots and other crew members assist each other and share and divide responsibility?

"Only the men who made the decision know the answer. They may have reasoned that through pursuit flying colored men would demonstrate their ability to perform any air combat task. Fortunately, it seems to be working out that way.

"They may also have reasoned that colored men were less likely to succeed in pursuit flying than in somewhat less exacting work.

42 Per Cent Successful

"During the first year, 42 per cent of the colored trainees successfully completed their course and earned their wings as pursuit pilots. During the same period 59 per cent of white aviation cadets who entered training qualified as flying officers.

"Of course the number of colored pilots was small and the statistics are therefore not conclusive. More important is the fact that colored candidates have no opportunity at any stage of training to be assigned to some other branch of combat flying, if they seem not to be well adapted to pursuit work.

Pursuit or Nothing

"The colored cadet must become a pursuit pilot or nothing. White cadets are sorted out placed according to their apparent aptitudes.

"Under these circumstances, the fact that 42 per cent of the colored candidates who had the physical and educational qualifications for aviation made the grade in the most difficult assignment is a significant accomplishment.

"Beyond the fact that the colored cadet must have the ability for pursuit flying, or else not fly at all, he must meet the special physical specifications of the pursuit pilot. "If he is too tall or too heavy, he cannot be an army flyer, however competent he may be for some flying job other than pursuit work.

No Publicity

"The Air Command has never undertaken a campaign of publicity or promotion designed to get young colored men with superior training into flying training.

"When the air forces set up their college reserve program, no colored men were wanted. The small "colored quota" was already filled for a year in advance. So, while the ground forces were welcoming colored college men into their college reserve, the air forces refused to accept them.

"Even earlier the Air Corps had undertaken the recruiting of groups of men from the individual college campus who would go into training as a unit with the group spirit and enthusiasm developed through their association at college. The colored youth was excluded from this also.

"Thus, only those who went forward on their own initiative, determined despite hell and high water to be combat flyers, ever became aviation cadets. Even then, they were accepted only within limited quota restrictions and for one type of training.

Volunteers Restricted, Too

"Within the past two months, restrictions upon the acceptance of volunteers in the army have been extended to aviation cadets. Apparently, aviation cadets will be chosen almost exclusively from men already in the army.

"A new problem faces the colored man. He must apply for aviation cadet training through his commander and his papers must survive a journey through military channels. It remains to be seen whether his application will be encouraged and facilitated to the same extent as the application of the white soldier.

No Enlisted Pilots

"In this connection, one recent experience is disturbing. For more than a year the Air Command has been selecting young soldiers, high school graduates, to be taken from the ranks and trained to become enlisted pilots. They become master, staff and technical sergeants with flying rating.

"As far as I have been able to discover, colored enlisted men have not been accepted in this program. How different will the situation be now that both prospective flying officers and prospective enlisted pilots will be selected from the ranks of the army?"

Negro Leaders Refute Knox on WAACs, SPARs

MAY 28 1943

Negro editors and heads of Negro organizations have bitterly denied Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox's assertion that they favored barring Negro women from the present setup of Naval and Coast Guard reserves.

Their opinions are made public today by the City-Wide Citizens Committee on Harlem, which this week is holding a series of meetings on problems affecting the Negro people.

The Committee first wrote to Mr. Knox Feb. 19. This letter, signed by Dr. Algernon D. Black, co-chairman, asked the Secretary of the Navy for clarification of that department's policy with respect to it's recruiting Negro women.

Mr. Knox on March 5 answered that the Women's Reserve "shall be composed of women trained and qualified for duty in the shore establishment of the Navy to release male officers and enlisted men of the Naval Service for duty at sea." The letter added: "The Navy does not have any substantial body of Negro men available or qualified for general service at sea. There is no occasion to replace Negro enlisted personnel by Negro women enlisted in the Women's Reserve."

DENY KNOX STATEMENT

The Navy Secretary closed his letter with the following statement, characterized by the Committee as "astonishing and inaacurate": "This program is necessarily experimental, but it is not discriminatory, and it has received the approval of Negro organizations and the Negro press generally."

The City-Wide Committee on Harlem immediately wrote to a number of leading Negro organizations and editors asking them to comment on Mr. Knox's statement

Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., City Councilman, pastor of the Abyssinian Baptist Church and editor and publisher of the People's Voice, said the Knox promise was "entirely erroneous." While it was true, Dr. Powell said, that the WAVE's was established to relieve male officers and enlisted men of the Naval Service for duty at sea, "it does not say that these men must be supplanted by whites only."

The editor of the New York Age, Ludlow Werner, wrote that, "when there is so much talk of democracy, it is ironic that the Secretary of the Navy should see fit to make such a damnable statement of policy." He said he could not "under any circumstances subscribe to" the Navy's discriminatory program "and I do not believe that Mr. Knox can say a single Negro editor has okayed his proposal."

Channing Tobias, senior secretary, National Council of the YMCA, said Mr. Knox's letter was "a classic illustration of subterfuge and evasion."

Lester B. Granger, executive secretary of the National Urban League, wrote:

"The statement of Secretary Knox that the Navy Department's program is 'necessarily experimental' and 'has received the approval of Negro organizations' certainly does not express the position of the National Urban League. Neither does the League approve the over-timid and frequently contradictory policies which the Navy Department has instituted."

The National Urban League is among the many Negro organizations in the New York metropolitan area supporting the forthcoming Negro Freedom Rally in Madison Square Garden June 7. Among other things, the rally will focus attention on the progress being made nationally against Jim Crow services. Mr. Granger will be a featured speaker at the Garden meeting.

Other Negro editors and heads of Negro organizations were equally vehement in renouncing Mr. Knox's position

The City-Wide Citizens Committee on Harlem said it would continue to put pressure on the Navy Department to abolish discrimination against both Negro men and Negro women in its services.

No Colored MP in New Orleans

WASHINGTON

There are no colored military policemen in New Orleans although a large number of colored soldiers are stationed in that area, a War Department official told the AFRO this week.

The official denied charges that colored civilians and soldiers were beaten with blackjacks by white MP's during a recent disturbance which followed the arrest of a soldier for disorderly conduct.

In a letter to the AFRO, soldiers from Jackson Barracks and Camp Harahan said the treatment received from civilians and MP's in New Orleans "is shameful," and urged that colored MP's be put on duty there.

DOWNEY LAUNCHES PROBE ON BIAS IN COAST PLANTS

"Pittsburgh Courier" Pittsburgh Pa.

MAY 8 1943

By J. ROBERT SMITH

LOS ANGELES, Calif., May 6—In keeping with his recent bill introduced in the Congress of the United States to investigate racial discriminations in the armed forces, Senator Sheridan Downey (Dem., Calif.) selected his home State as the starting point for his campaign by launching a series of hearings in the Federal building here last week.

Senator Downey, who is chairman of the Sub-committee of the United States Senate Military Affairs committee, was accompanied by the following members of the Investigating committee: Col. Clarence Harsham, who represented the War Department; Captain G. H. Laird, Navy; William K. Hopkins, War Manpower Commission; Otto S. Breyer, Office of Defense Transportation; Eugene Weston, National Housing Administration; C. W. Flesher, Maritime Commission; C. W. Eliason, Maritime Commission; Boyd Stewart, Agriculture; Capt. Francis P. Trayner, Navy; Dr. Gustave Peck, War Production Board; Edwin Bates, War Relocation Authority; Lt. Col. Ben R. Howell, Selective Service and James Bond, War Manpower Commission.

MAY 8 1943

DOWNEY ISSUES STATEMENT

In opening the hearings, the Senator made the following statement to the packed courtroom, "By the end of this year there will be more than one million Negro Americans serving their country in our armed forces. They will represent more than ten per cent of all Americans under arms. Their her[illegible] loyalty is unquestioned.

"The record of such Negro heroes as Doris Miller at Pearl Harbor offer living testimony of the will of the Negro people to defend the heritage of freedom and democracy which is the birthright of all Americans.

"It become vital to the successful prosecution of America's war survival, that the morale of the Negro Americans in our armed forces and of the twelve million more who are working on the home front, be not impaired by failure of any Government agency to live up to the latter and spirit of existing laws against discrimination. It is essential that there be full and unhindered use of all America's manpower in the conduct of the war."

INTRODUCES RESOLUTION

The Senator told his listeners that for those very reasons he was introducing a resolution in Congress whereby the Senate may have full information as to the degree to which its legislative mandate is being carried out in the armed services.

Before introducing testimony to support the need of Senator Downey's Congressional legislation, Revels Cayton, State vice president of the California CIO, in taking the stand gave concrete examples of the unpatriotic attitude of many employers by not being willing to open their doors to accept the best skills of Negroes and other minorities.

"Despite the fact that there has been a great increase in employment of Negroes in industry throughout the entire State, the difficulty, however, is that they are being hired in the most menial capacities and to do 'stoop' and 'mule' labor," he said.

NORTH AMERICAN BLASTED

North American Aircraft company was again the focal point of attack by witnesses who testified. Mrs. Louise Holland, white, an inspector at the plant, stated that she was questioned by management relative to her friendship with Negro co-workers.

The same company was also subjected to the attack of Vernon E. Ford, a former teacher of accounting at the Thomas Jefferson high school, who resigned his position to aid the war effort by applying for an accounting vacancy at the plant. According to Mr. Ford, who is now a stock clerk at North American, he has constantly been denied the opportunity to fill a vacancy in the accounting department, despite the fact that many exist from time to time.

OPEN TO HEALTH IMPAIRMENT

Sherman Hardaway, white, of Local 131, United Rubber Workers of America, an employee of the Goodyear Rubber Company for the past fifteen years related cases of rank discrimination against Negro women workers at the Goodyear plant.

He informed the Senator that they were given the "hot house" jobs in temperature ranging from 135 to 140 degrees; that they were assigned to nylon painting and kept there, though the paint is nauseating, and over a short period of time serves to impair one's health.

John Wilson, chief steward in the executive department and the only Negro on the executive board at Vultee Aircraft testified to the lack of upgrading opportunities at this plant and the willingness of management to employ qualified skilled Negroes in their particular fields.

MUST DO SOMETHING

At the close of the special sessions which were conducted by Paul Pinsky, research director of the California State CIO, Senator Downey thanked the witnesses for their frank and unbiased testimonies and told his hearers, "We must certainly do something to have these conditions cease if we are to have the kind of democracy that we are fighting for."

Similar meetings are scheduled to be held in other key areas of the state.

Former War Department Official Denounces 'Unholy Alliance'

Chicago Defender
Chicago, Illinois

Tuskegee institute was charged with collusion with the Army air forces to promote segregated flying training in a blistering attack on the historic institution this week by Judge William H. Hastie, former civilian aide to the Secretary of War.

In a speech here at the Woodlawn forum Sunday night and a statement released through the NAACP, Hastie terms Tuskegee's "unholy alliance" with the Army air forces "outrageous."

In a cold, calm and dispassionate voice, the Spingarn medalist spoke to an overflow audience here, denouncing the newest program of segregation by the air forces. The program allows a flying cadet five months of training in 125 universities and colleges in the country.

"But," said Judge Hastie, "due to sinister motives on the part of some people, interested solely in themselves or the institution, all Negro cadets must be shifted to Tuskegee institute down in Alabama."

Not "First Class"

"There may be some Tuskegee graduates in the audience. I hope I do not hurt their feelings by telling the truth. Tuskegee institute is primarily a mechanical and agriculture school. It was founded as such and has remained more or less as such. True, the college department has made some progress and has received a rating. Tuskegee institute, however, is not a first class liberal arts college.

"I am discouraged when men will intercede to have all Negro cadets sent to Tuskegee institute and see no reason for such a move other than there is a definite plan to make Tuskegee the army flying center for Negroes. Tuskegee is not rendering the Negro flyer or the war effort any valuable service in this latest step to concentrate a black aviation program around the Tuskegee campus.

MAR 27 1943

"The school gets its mess of pottage and the air forces now have the most willing accomplice in its determination to keep the Negro out of northern universities and colleges which have no color barrier.

"Inexcusable"

"Even if Tuskegee were an outstanding liberal arts college, which it is not, this newest and wholly unnecessary Jim Crow scheme would be inexcusable. In all the circumstances the plan is outrageous.

"The time has come when the unholy alliance between Tuskegee institute and the Army air forces must be publicly denounced and condemned.

MAR 27 1943

"With calous indifference to the best interests of the Negro and to the importance of democracy in the war effort, Tuskegee institute is looking out for Tuskegee."

Asked by a Defender reporter if he believed his resignation had accomplished anything, the judge answered, "It has to some extent. The army air forces has made some changes, presumably so that whatever might have been said against it would not be true."

Whites In 'Fast To Death' Against Race Prejudice

MAR 20 1943

Chicago Defender
Chicago, Illinois

COSHOCTON, Ohio. —(ANP) — Twenty-one former campmates have wired President Roosevelt urging the immediate release from Danbury (Conn.) Federal prison of two conscientious objectors who have been on a work strike and "fast unto death" because of segregation and race discrimination within the prison.

The fast of Louis Taylor of Bronx, N. Y., and Thomas Stanley Murphy, of Queens, N. Y., was ended on the 21st day with forced feeding administered by prison guards but has continued since March 5. Dr. Evan W. Thomas, an assistant professor of medicine at New York university, said in New York Saturday that he did not think they could live out their two and one-half year sentences under forced feeding.

A third objector, George Russell Kingsley of Rochester, N. Y., has been in solitary confinement in the Danbury "hole" for joining Murphy and Taylor in resisting segregation by a work strike.

Walk Out of Camp

The three men were sentenced in Buffalo, N. Y., on February 2 for having walked out of the Civilian Public Service camp at Big Flats, N. Y., because of the failure of the government to provide them with constructive work. They had previously spent an average of 16 months each in the C. P. S. camps for conscientious objectors maintained by peace churches recognized by selective service.

The men declared that they found acceptance of C. P. S. to be cooperation with conscription for war and had to protect the only way they could. They felt they had been boondoggling in the camp in a time of world crisis and that there was no justification for it.

At the time he was taken into custody, Murphy was engaged in volunteer service with a pacifist community in a Detroit slum. In a neighborhood of race tension between Detroit Negroes and newly-arrived southern whites, Murphy conducted a recreational program in which he was successful in bringing the children of both races together. He was also active in the efforts of this community group to interest their neighbors in forming a local cooperative for the purchase of milk, and a tenants' league to combat rising rents in the slum.

Long Conflict

"Although Stanley Murphy, George Kinsley and Louis Taylor have now come to public notice because of their non-cooperation, and the hunger strike of the latter two, this is by no means the first time that C.O.'s have come into conflict with prison authorities because of race discrimination," disclosed Joseph Guinn, president of the Chicago NAACP Youth council, now assigned to the C.O. camp at Coshocton, Ohio, and one of the signers of the telegram to the President.

"Many C.O.'s have been placed in solitary confinement or themselves been segregated in special prison camps for so called 'disruption' of prison routine by refusing to follow jim crow practices. In fact, this has been the chief point of conflict between C.O.'s and prison authorities.

"Since these men refuse to participate in war because they believe in the equal value of every human being, they frequently find themselves unable to comply with the segregation rules of the federal prisons. This has caused antagonism on the part of some of the other prisoners, and has even resulted in violent attacks upon the objectors in at least one prison, Chillicothe. Their steadfastness of conviction, however, has also won the respect and friendship of many other fellow prisoners."

OCT 29 1943

Hastie Resigns From 'Hot Seat' As Civilian Aide: —Who's Next?

JAN 23 1943

William (Bill) Hastie, who has had a prize "hot seat" as Negro Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, caused a furore of talk and double-talk this week by resigning his post. No reason was given in the first-person release sent to newspapers, but it has been known for quite some time that the Dean of the Howard University School of Law, now on leave, has not been exactly happy in the job—which carries with it the biggest headache of any held by a Negro in America today.

His resignation reads as follows:

"In the past, replying to inquiries prompted by rumors and speculation, I have stated that, if and when I should leave the War Department, the press would receive direct and authoritative information. Accordingly, the press is now advised that I have submitted my resignation as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, effective at the end of January, 1943.

"I have asked Mr. Louis Lautier, Administrative Assistant in this office, who has been dealing effectively with the matters involving civilian personnel, to remain at his post. It is my belief that he can continue to contribute substantially to gains already represented by the placement and advancement of thousands of Negroes and the satisfactory adjustment of many employee grievances.

"I have also asked Mr. Truman K. Gibson jr, Assistant Civilian Aide, to remain at his post, at least through such transitional period as may be necessary to prevent any discontinuity of effort in matters which have been undertaken by this office.

JAN 23 194

"I wish to state my sincere appreciation for the measure of friendly support and cooperation which my office has received from the press.

"I shall have no further or amplifying statement to make until after my official duties shall have terminated."

JAN 23 1943

WERE HIS HANDS TIED?

Hastie has been subjected to criticism in the past months because of what has been termed his "lack of aggressive action" on various discriminatory measures brought to his attention. Just how far Hastie, or any other Negro holding a high federal position is, or would be allowed to pursue any such action, is open to argument. It's no secret that "aggressiveness" on the part of Negro "titles" is frowned on in the nation's capital and that much of the authority that goes with such positions is more of the paper variety than of actual performance.

There are many who have constantly maintained Hastie, tired of being constantly under pressure for conditions he really does not have the power to control, has been dissatisfied for months. There seems to be an inference in his resignation that Truman K. Gibson jr, his assistant, and Louis Lautier, administrative assistant in charge of matters affecting Negro civilian personnel, may ultimately leave their posts. It is stated they will remain on duty with the department at least through such transitional periods as may be necessary to prevent any discontinuity in efforts which have been undertaken by this office." This falls in line with the off-the-record statement a few weeks ago of a Washington Negro of influence in racial affairs who said that there was a possibility certain individuals might fall into disfavor with the powers-that-be because of a growing reluctance to complacently conform any further to policies arbitrarily shoved down their throats.

Gibson To Follow Hastie Out Of War Dept.

WASHINGTON.—In a dramatic protest against Army discriminatory practices, both Negro civilian aides to the Secretary of War — Judge William H. Hastie and Truman K. Gibson—acted to resign this week.

Hastie's resignation was turned in to the War department on Saturday while Gibson indicated he would step out at the first opportunity.

Bringing the long smoldering situation in the War department to a climax was the recent Army action in setting up a jim crow technical air corps training school at Jefferson Barracks without consultation with either Hastie or Gibson, the Defender learned.

As long ago as last May, reports were current that such a segregated air corps school would be established but both Hastie and Gibson denied knowledge of it to the Chicago Defender at the time. They promised to tell the Defender when they learned about the plans but they found out about it from the same sources as the Defender—from an official War department release issued without informing either of the two civilian aides.

Soldiers "Can't Resign"

While Hastie's resignation was a formal one without giving his reasons, Gibson told the Defender:

"I am anxious to get out as soon as possible. But someone has to stay on the job to look out for the boys in Mississippi, Louisiana, and other places. They can't resign."

He said he couldn't leave the office because the "boys would probably catch hell." Gibson said he couldn't let "the boys" down.

War department chiefs had no comment to make on the decision by Hastie and Gibson to quit.

Difficult Job

Hastie found the War department difficult to deal with, next to impossible to secure cooperation from, steeped in traditional prejudice and bias and unwilling to remove bans or lift bars where Negro troops are concerned. Hastie and Gibson have won high esteem from officials of the War department and many friends personally in army circles, but they have been in a baffling blind alley when it came to getting accomplished the things which they actually fought to get done.

Hastie served directly under the assistant secretary of war, Judge Robert Patterson. Judge Patterson is said to have been in complete sympathy with the general objectives of the Hastie office but there came a time when it was difficult to see Judge Patterson or to place upon his busy desk the personal plaints of Negro soldiers.

It is reported that at one time white officers in the department set up a committee to pass upon affairs affecting Negro soldiers and not only did not invite Hastie to become a member of the group but failed even to tell him it was formed. The plan evidently was to "by-pass" his office on all important decisions.

Hastie's statement said:

"In the past, replying to inquiries prompted by rumors and speculation, I have stated that, if and when I should leave the War department, the press would receive direct and authoritative information. Accordingly, the press is now advised that I have submitted my resignation as civilian aide to the secretary of war, effective at the end of January, 1943.

WASHINGTON —Without saying why he quit or what he expects to do in the future, William H. Hastie, civilian aide to the Secretary of War announced his resignation this week after thanking the press for the friendly support and cooperation which my office received."

Despite the surprise element involved, Mr. Hastie's resignation was not unexpected. In recent months, it has been frequently reported that he was making plans to quit his highly important position.

In a prepared statement issued Monday, he said: "The press is now advised that I have submitted my resignation as Civilian aide to the Secretary of War, effective at the end of January, 1943.

JAN 23 1943

Prior to Nov. 1, 1940, when he joined Secretary Stimson's staff, Mr. Hastie was Federal judge in the Virgin Islands. He was born in 1904, in Knoxville, Tenn., and is a graduate of Amherst College and Harvard Law School.

Since joining the War Department, he has been on leave as dean of the Howard University Law School.

JAN 23 1943

As to his record while serving as Civilian Aide to Secretary Stimson, he carried on a 2½-year fight to end Jim Crowism in the Army, saw to it that nearly 3,500 white collars workers were hired to work in the onetime "Lilly-White," Dixie-controlled War Department, put a stop to discrimination at officers' training schools, fought for more aviation opportunities for colored pilots and attempted to induce government authorities to put out a pamphlet instructing all troops to respect their colored comrades like other soldiers.

NAVY JIM-CROW AT PEARL HARBOR HIT; CITE ABUSES

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Jan. 7 —The United States navy program as promulgated by high-ranking naval officials at Pearl Harbor is dangerously un-democratic and endangers the nation's war efforts.

This was revealed this week in the statement of a Negro sailor just back from Pearl Harbor, where the skill of hundreds of technically-trained Negroes is being scuttled because of discrimination.

This sailor disclosed that Negroes are forced to work as messmen and stevedores, in defiance to the navy's new policy as announced by Secretary of Navy Frank Knox. This policy calls for the training of Negro seamen for skilled work.

JAN 10 1943

Abused by Whites.

Training for skilled assignments is being given Negro seamen at Camp Robert Small Naval Training station at Great Lakes, Ill., and at Hampton Institute, in Virginia, but southern navy officials in Hawaii are restricting them to anything but menial jobs.

They are also forced to submit to abuse from southern white sailors, and receive no protection when they take their troubles to the officials.

They also are faced with Dixie prejudice from the native population, which at first accorded Negro sailors the same hospitality, courtesy and privileges granted white sailors. This has been changed, however, because of the resentment such treatment given them aroused among the whites. Boycott of white establishments catering to the Negro seamen was threatened in an effort to force the native population to discriminate.

JAN [illegible] 1943

The sailor also revealed that there have been several minor clashes between white and Negro seamen. Because of the unrest and low morale of the Negro sailors, he predicted a serious racial crisis unless steps are taken immediately to remedy the situation.

Says We Fail To Meet Bus Job Requirements

JAN 28 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ANP)— No applications from Negroes for jobs with the Capital Transit company have met the standards set by the company, said the president, E. D. Merrill, to a group of Negroes interested in placements when visited him early this week.

The delegation sponsored by the Committee on Jobs for Negroes in Public Utilities discussed the situation with Merrill fully and he promised faithfully that when the first Negro showed up with the necessary experience and qualifications he would be placed in training for the position of bus and street car operator.

JAN 28 1943

After the conference, the committee issued a statement urging maintenance workers already employed to apply immediately for u-grading to positions as operators.

The delegation was composed of Mrs. Jewel Mazique of the Council of United Negro Labor leaders of Washington. Mrs. Margaret Holmes. Rev. W. H. Jernagin, Baptist Young People's alliance; E. B. Henderson; Mrs. Martha Dudley, League of Woman Shoppers; Dr. Martin D. Jenkins, Howard university Teachers union; and Doxey A. Wilkerson of Howard who acted as spokesman for the group.

TROUBLE BREWING

The administration's policy of boot-licking minority groups in order to win their cooperation in the war against the man who would suppress all minorities, is paying off dividends in rotten eggs. Ambitious leaders of these minority groups can't seem to forget their own selfish interests and get on with the job of making the world safe against the greatest menace that ever threatened free men.

This is particularly true of the Negro leaders known as the Black Brain Trust, who are trying to use the war emergency in order to win revolutionary changes which are certain to cause domestic strife at a time when there should be complete unity.

Latest example of the tactics these Negro leaders are using is the action of William H. Hastie, dean of the Howard College law school and a civilian assistant to Secretary of War Stimson. Hastie won his seat in the war secretary's office with strong-arm methods which convinced the President that the presence of a Negro in so important a position would stimulate the patriotism and enthusiasm for war of the Negro race as a whole. But instead of devoting his time and thought to measures which would bring complete victory for all, Hastie has used his position to force undesirable social changes on the Army as well as civilians.

Disgruntled because he could not set up a policy of social equality in the Army, which he hoped would be reflected in civilian life after the war is over, Hastie has resigned. He gave as his reason the establishment of an all-Negro aviation training center at Tuskegee over his protests against segregation. In other words, if Negro soldiers are to be placed on their own instead of being sandwiched in with white units, Hastie doesn't want to play.

His resignation goes to prove the oft-repeated contention of many Southerners that Negro leaders are interested in nothing short of social equality and an amalgamation of the races. It should also be sufficient to convince the social-minded boys and girls of the administration that when they try to ram their liberal policies down the throats of Americans during a time of war they are engaged in a dangerous pastime.

Judging the Hastie action by that of his associates of the Black Brain Trust, notable among whom are mulatto Walter White, head of the Society for the Advancement of Colored People, and Sleeping Car Union president A. Philip Randolph, we venture the prediction that President Roosevelt will shortly be threatened and intimidated again.

It was because of a threat to stage a march on Washington that the Committee on Fair Employment Practices was set up by President Roosevelt, and recently there have been more ominous threats of a Negro "non-cooperation" campaign patterned after Gandhi's sit-down strike against the British in India. While such action might cause the administration temporary embarrassment and might conceivably delay the progress of the war for a time, it might be well for the commander-in-chief to tell the radical Negro leaders to crack their whips and get on with their campaign. Without doubt that would cause less trouble in America than to submit to their pressure and undertake to make the nation accept a social equality which it knows is undesirable and which it will not tolerate.

Every fair-minded person knows that there have been many shameful instances of discrimination against the Negro which have denied them economic opportunities and adequate educational and health facilities. Long before the Black Brain Trust came into being rapid progress was being made to abolish these inequalities. But for these radicals to attempt to seize upon the present emergency as a means of obtaining concessions which cannot be made without grievous consequences reflects an attitude of selfishness and misguided interest in the welfare of their race. They would profit more by abandoning their fight against segregation and for social equality and concentrating on those things which are attainable, such as better schools, better health facilities, better recreational facilities, and better economic opportunities.

Only Colored Gen. Whitewashed Report on Army Conditions

This Is the View of Joseph Julian, Whose Story of What He Saw in England Is Printed Below

By JOSEPH JULIAN

(Reprinted by Permission of The Nation)

The colored brigadier general, Benjamin O. Davis, was recently sent to investigate reports of trouble between colored and white American troops stationed in the British Isles.

After an inspection that lasted only a few days, he issued a statement to the effect that the situation had been greatly exaggerated, that generally the boys were getting along fine together; occasionally a few social difficulties might arise, but so far as the army was concerned there was no problem—"white and colored troops are treated as equal, having exactly the same rights and privileges."

It is hard to reconcile General Davis's report with my own observations during my recent two months' stay in England or with what colored soldiers told me.

Technically, it is true about the equal rights and privileges, but prejudice never respects technicalities.

Difficulties Not Isolated

Equality cannot be created by a manual of army regulations; the men must feel it and think it and act it. The social difficulties mentioned by General Davis are not isolated cases and should not be considered of no concern to the army.

Bad feeling between colored and white troops has military consequences.

Perhaps General Davis did not get around as much as he should have, or perhaps he did not consider it wise to make an issue of the matter at this time.

An ugly and dangerous situation does exist, and it impairs the efficiency of the troops and depresses the morale of the entire colored American population, already near the breaking-point.

It is particularly shocking to observe the jim-crow bacillus being injected into England, a country without prejudice, where the people regard colored Americans not as menials and comics but as human beings, and are guided in their regulations with them by their natural reactions to them as individuals, not as colored persons.

Jim Crow an Order

The prejudiced white American soldiers are not the only carriers of this germ. Sometimes it seems to have been introduced in England by order of the A.E.F.

In a recent issue of the London New Statesmen and Nation, a correspondent writes:

> . . . Orders or requests have been issued by the American military authorities to the townspeople to the effect that white and colored troops should not be permitted in the same civilian canteens.
>
> In some cases the townspeople have refused to comply. Partly as a result of the latter some have become extremely annoyed at what is regarded as discrimination against colored soldiers. As a further result, scuffles between white and colored Americans have occurred when colored Americans have entered, or tried to enter, dance halls or bars where the white Americans were already disporting themselves.
>
> Apparently in one case the white Americans remonstrated with a landlady for serving colored customers. The reply of the woman is significant:
>
> "Their money is as good as yours, and we like their company."

The average Briton appreciates the complexities of the race question but sees it as purely an American problem. He resents being told that he must develop prejudices.

One Soldier's Reaction

One night I met a colored American corporal in Piccadilly Circus and after I left him jotted down our conversation almost verbatum.

I think he simply and eloquently expressed the thoughts and feelings of the average colored soldier with the A.E.F. in England.

Our conversation ran as follows:

"Got a light?"

"Here y'are."

"Thanks. You American?"

"Yeah."

"So am I. Where you from?"

"Pittsburgh. Where you from?"

"New York."

"I worked at the Savoy in Harlem for a while."

"Oh, I was up there just before I left."

(Brightening) "Yeah? Whose band was playin'?"

"I forget."

"They sent me first out to Oklahoma, an' then back to Fort Dix. I gotta gal in Brooklyn I went to see one night, just before I come over here. I was a sergeant and they busted me for it."

"Why?"

"A.W.O.L. She had a kid from me an' I wanted to see 'em both before I came over here. I didn't know if I'd ever come back again, so I wanted to see 'em. I made out an allotment to her."

"That's tough, being busted for that."

"Well, they gotta have rules in an army. I don't blame 'em. I'm a corporal now."

The Big Question

"How do you take it here?"

"Awright—'cept not many colored boys over here. Ya get lonesome sometimes."

"How do they treat you over here?"

"Who, the English?"

"Yes."

"Oh, hell, they treat ya fine. It's in the camp and around we get all the trouble and riots."

"You mean the American soldiers?"

"Yeah. We had three officers resign last week. They just didn't want nuthin' to do with us."

"White officers?"

"Yeah. Lot of them white boys still look at us like we ain't nuthin'—just to shine their shoes. They walk away from me when I walk down the street. They go out when I come into a pub for a drink. They change their seats when I sit down in a movie. Hell, sometimes I think maybe one of these guys'll be needin' a drink from my flask—maybe lyin' wounded an bleedin' and dyin'. I told one of my white officers that, and he growled at me and said, 'You just leave 'em there bleedin', don't touch 'em.' So I'll leave 'em. I'll leave 'em bleed and bleed till they die."

(At this moment two drunken white sailors staggered up to us. One of them plopped his arm on the corporal's shoulder and said, "Darkey, we're absolutely broke; could ya let us have something? We haven't a shilling t'our name." Without a moment's reflection he reached in his pocket, took out a half-crown, and put it in the sailor's hand.)

English Woman Abused

"I have a friend (he continued) who came over here in 1936 with a band—white fellow—married an English girl. I was talkin' to them one day. He went across the street to get a paper. I stayed talkin' to his wife. Three white American soldiers come by—seen me talkin' to a white girl, and they ripped her fur piece off an' tore it up to pieces."

"Do you go into any of the American Service clubs here, Red Cross Club, and so forth?"

"I just keep to myself. I don't go lookin' for trouble no more. But sometime when I have to stay in London overnight—see, I drive a truck down here from where I'm stationed in Birmingham 'bout once a week, an' when I gotta stay over—I go over to the British soldiers' club an' they put me up. They treat you much better than at the American clubs. When the Americans do give you a bed, they make you feel they don't want to give it to you."

"How do most of you boys feel about the war?"

"I think most of us feel it don't matter much what happens. We just know we have to fight: so we fight."

"I know there's a lot more that has to be done, but don't you think some progress is being made? Colored men are being trained as pilots now, and many more branches of the service are open to them than ever before."

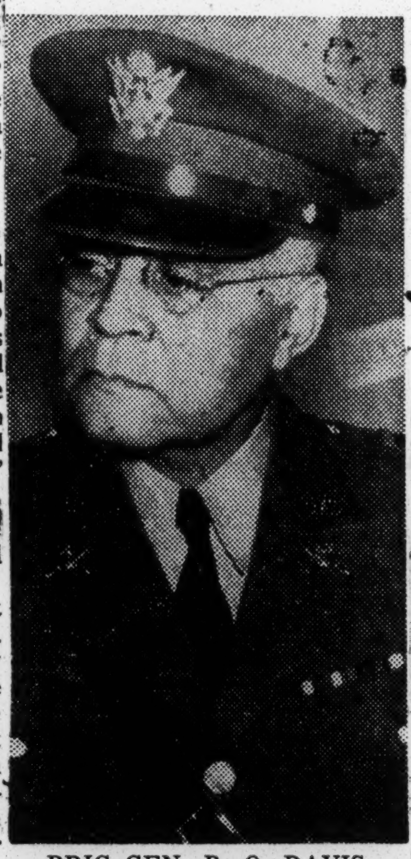
"Yeah, that' right, an', well, maybe after America gets a little messin' around, and gets bombed up some, it'll be better. They just been having it too easy, too much to eat an' everything. Maybe after they get messed up some, they'll begin to understand, maybe it'll come out awright."

Englishmen Preferred

"You feel much more comfortable with English soldiers than Americans?"

"Sure, man, they drink with ya, they talk with ya. There ain't no difference with them. I'd like to stay here after the war, except the United States is still your home and you have a feelin' you wanna get back to your home no matter how bad things are there."

Didn't He See??



BRIG.-GEN. B. O. DAVIS, attache of the Inspector General's office, whose report on conditions of segregation and jim crowism affecting colored soldiers in England is criticized in Joseph Julian's article, "Jim Crow Goes Abroad," reprinted for the nation on this page.

"Well, I hope it will work out better for you fellows. That's one thing this war's about—equal rights for all people. So long, soldier, I have to run along."

"So long."

Same Story Everywhere

It was the same story with each of the many colored soldiers I talked to: "The English treat us fine—it's in the camp and around we get all the trouble and riots."

Apparently nothing is being done by the army or any other government agency to remedy the situation except some clumsy attempts at segregation.

Instead of some kind of educational program designed to eradicate the color bias by driving home to white soldiers how silly it is to talk about fighting for democracy when they don't mix with colored troops in their own ranks, official policy seems to be, "Keep them apart—as far apart as possible."

"Applied Democracy" Needed

Both Russia and Germany have effectively used their ideological commissars to help build their powerful armies. Though we reject their systems of government, we could strengthen our own army tremendously by a similar technique of indoctrination.

Let us have in our army commissars of "applied democracy" to keep our own ideology alive in the minds of soldiers.

There is a vital need for such a department, not only as a means of overcoming jim-crowism, but generally to keep the original humane motives of our fighting men alive and integrated with their job of killing."

The Negro in the Army

Dear Sirs: Joseph Julian's Jim Crow Goes Abroad (The Nation of December 5) is valuable as evidence of the treatment of Negroes during the war, but as a discussion of the problem of the Negro in the armed services, it is naive.

"Some kind of educational program designed to eradicate the color bias by driving home to white soldiers how silly it is to talk about fighting for democracy when they don't mix with colored troops in their own ranks," as Mr. Julian proposes, would be a futile effort indeed and would do more harm than good.

JAN 9 - 19

There are a tremendous number of men in the army, particularly from the South, upon whom all the talk in the world about the color bias would make no impression. These men have grown up in the well-rooted culture of the South. That their prejudices against the Negro is extreme is a natural consequence of the historical background of their section. This fact cannot possibly be ignored in any effort to deal with the problem.

Mr. Julian objects to what appears to him to be the official policy of the army: "Keep them apart—as far apart as possible." The army has before it a large part of the task of winning the war. It has been the experience of the army that trouble—often in the form of violence—results when Negro soldiers are allowed or encouraged to mix with white. Such trouble can seriously impair the efforts of military personnel to train the men. Actual riots, and they have occurred, have a demoralizing effect upon all the men. Segregation, therefore, is an expedient resorted to in the face of necessity. This necessity cannot be obliterated by the stardust of crusading idealism.

It is, of course, disheartening to the Negro soldier to be segregated while being forced to fight for the whi States' freedom. In the face of this he has been magnificent. He is so much more capable of a philosophical attitude than the whites that the whites are discredited by the evidence of it. Any effort in the direction urged by Mr. Julian can only hurt him.

McNutt Decides Not To Register Women

JAN 20 1943

Atlanta Daily World, Atlanta, Georgia

Atlanta Daily world,

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(SNS)—Comprehensive plans for voluntary mobilization of American womanpower for war employment were announced Saturday by Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission. Mr. McNutt's action was taken upon the recommendation of the Women's Advisory Committee which met in Washington on January 12 and 13.

The plans will be varied area by area according to local labor needs. Mr. McNutt pointed out that there were three types of areas which must be dealt with by the Commission. Every effort is being made to adapt mobilization plans to each local situation.

JAN 20 1943

First are the areas in which there is still unemployment, and where no aggressive action will be taken to bring additional women into the labor market. National discussion of the need for women workers has unsettled the labor market in some of these communities and Mr. McNutt emphasized that recruitment of women is not needed everywhere.

Second are areas where direct recruitment of women is taking place through the United States Employment Service Offices. The women are brought to the offices or to special recruiting centers through educational efforts of the press, radio, local organizations, and the cooperation of local employers. They are referred directly to jobs, or to training courses leading to known jobs.

Third are areas in which the most intensive direct recruiting through educational methods reach the point of diminishing returns. As these develop, steps will be taken to voluntarily control women in order to obtain information as to their training, experience, availability, and other factors. This information will enable local manpower authorities to estimate their total potential supply of women workers and plan for other labor supply accordingly.

JAN 20 1943

Mr. McNutt said that the decision as to when the third stage is reached would be made by the Manpower Area Director and with the advice of the Area Manpower Committee. He pointed out that in even a labor market as tight as Baltimore, Maryland, direct educational methods have been effective in recruiting more than a thousand women workers a week through the Area Manpower facilities.

The Regional Manpower Directors, Mr. McNutt said, will be responsible for conducting all recruitment activities in every area to correspond with specific employer agreements to their women. These agreements will detail the number of women to be hired, when they will be hired, and in what occupations.

JAN 20 1943

Local manpower officials will also take steps to expand training facilities for the kind of training and the number of trainees needed in the area. On-the-job training for women workers, up-grading training for women foremen and supervisors and technical training will be included, the Chairman added.

Citizens Believe Segregation Has Not Increased

JAN 2 194

Army Traditions Have Revealed Heretofore Concealed Race Prejudice

Over 10,000 colored citizens made observations on discrimination and segregation this week in their respective communities and the majority of them informed The Pittsburgh Courier's Bureau of Public Sentiment that they did not believe there was more of the two evils in existence than there was before the current war began.

It was brought out in the poll that in some localities traditional attitudes about the separation of the races, and the consequent discrimination which inevitably results, had undergone changes.

BIAS MORE PRONOUNCED THAN EVER

On the other hand, certain sections of the country, notably the South, responded that race bias was more pronounced than ever before.

The question was worded thusly:

"DO YOU BELIEVE THERE IS MORE SEGREGATION AND DISCRIMINATION NOW THAN THERE WAS BEFORE THE WAR STARTED?"

"NO" said 56.7 per cent of the citizens; "YES" said 41.2 per cent, and the small percentage of 1.9 could not make up their minds one way or the other.

JAN 2

COMMENTS WERE MOST INTERESTING

Comments were most interesting from the varied sections of the country. A Northern "YES" answerer firmly believed that the question of segregation is now out into the open for the first time. "It formerly had been concealed in some spots and the increase is due to more general knowledge of it," he said.

"It has been brought to light by the war effort," said another. Many took this attitude and upheld their contention by calling attention to the results which the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice has produced. These persons say the FEPC has failed to alleviate job bias.

SOME BLAME IT ON THE ARMY

Some blame the increase—if there is an increase—on the Army. The Army takes race bias wherever it moves, they say. Not only in its own administration, they add, but in nearby communities as well.

A Northern attorney stated, "Discrimination has lessened while segregation has increased markedly." He apparently meant that while opportunities have increased for Negroes it is on a basis of "jim-crowism."

A MINISTER SPEAKS UP

On the other side of the answer ledger, a Southern minister answered "NO," but added that he did not think the ease-up in bias was genuine. "I think fear of defeat enters the equation," he said.

A Northern educator reached this conclusion: "The American white man's status quo is being threatened and he is temporarily 'bending over backward' in his efforts to be considerate of the Negro."

Next week's question:

"IF THE NEGRO MAKES POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC GAINS DURING THIS WAR, DO YOU THINK HE WILL LOSE THEM AFTER THE WAR?"

Registration In Germany Ordered

FEB 13 1943

Indicating that the reprisals which have been visited on the Jews in germany will be turned against Negroes there, the Gestapo has ordered the registration of all Negroes in reich territory, it was revealed last week. This information was contained in the Swedish weekly Trots Allt, according to OWI.

FEB 13 1943

Stating that the order came from heinrich himmler, gestapo chief allegedly. The Swedish paper says:

"The decree states that local authorities must register all Negroes, mulattoes and quadroons and report the results immediately to the office of the Chief of Reich Security

"The decree is addressed to all police authorities. There can be no doubt what will happen after their registration as Negroes are treated as are all 'inferior races' forced to find new objects of their racial policy.'

"The office mentioned in the decree is the same one that handles Jewish deportation and property confication. Apparently there are no longer many Jews or gypsies left in germany and the germans are now

This War Plant Proves a Worker's Color Doesn't Matter

"P. M. Daily"

JAN 1 3

By Erwin van Swol

Henry Wetstein and Herbert S. Chandler, toolmakers, always said that if they ever became bosses they wanted to run the kind of plant in which they would want to work if they were employes.

The chance came. Now they are operating their own war factory on these principles:

New York. N.Y.

¶ Pay as much as your workers can get anywhere. A satisfied worker produces.

47

¶ Give your workers the best union contract you possibly can afford. A union saves the boss lots of headaches.

JAN 1 3 194

How It Pays

You may think that formula Utopian, but Wetstein and Chandler say it pays:

¶ Their labor turnover is nil.

¶ Their output volume broke records.

¶ Their rejection rate is infinitesimal.

And their product is no cinch to make. It is a super-critical ammunition tool that must be accurate within .0003.

Forty per cent of their employes doing this highly skilled and technical work are Negroes. The most important operation—a secret process the partners invented—is entrusted to a Negro.

"There is a feeling of difference between white and Negro workers only if management emphasizes that attitude," Wetstein and Chandler explain.

JAN 1 3 1943

Beautiful, But Smart

When a PM reporter and a photographer surveyed the factory, white workers told them:

"Be sure you talk to and get a picture of Elva Scott. She's intelligent and beautiful."

Elva is a Negro. She was majoring in English at Teachers College, Columbia University, last June when she decided she wanted a war-plant job. Now she runs a polishing machine. She says that when the war is over, she'll go back to learning to be a teacher. But right now she knows she's making a concrete contribution.

So does Oswald Goldschmidt, 19, a cripple who was driven out of Vienna by the Nazis. He's in charge of shipping.

"We're all working toward one goal here," he said. "This is my way of contributing, since I'm not strong enough for other jobs. America is my new country, I'll never leave it."

Garage mechanics, knitgood workers, laborers once, the employes are now part of a highly efficient war machine created by the two bosses. Unable to get skilled toolmakers, they organized a production system based on a few trained key men among a mass of semi-skilled workers.

Wetstein, a toolmaker since 1910, was foreman of a big plant. So was Chandler, who has been a toolmaker since 1923. Chandler also holds a substitute teacher's license and taught machine-shop practice nights at a Brooklyn high school.

Confronted by a shortage of machines, the two partners built many themselves from junk, adapted others to their specialized needs.

JAN 1 3 1943

That's why they don't worry about their system being put into general practice.

"To use it," they say candidly, "you've got to know more than any of your workers. Most bosses don't."

Assail Attempt Of Southern Army And Navy Personnel To Force Jim Crow In The North

JAN 9 - 1943

ASSAIL ATTEMPT—2421 .. ....

WASHINGTON, D.C.— Repeated attempts on the part of a southern army and navy personnel to enforce southern race patterns on non-southern areas are assailed again this week by Walter White, executive secretary to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who in a letter to the Secretary of War, Stimson, said:

"We submit again that the War Department needs to speed up the formulation of a more clearly defined program in accordance with the highest standards of democracy to avert further trouble and to serve notice upon bigots that the decent thoughful people of the United States who constitute the overwhelming majority, are going to determine the patterns of action of the country as a whole and not the bigots themselves."

JAN 9 - 1943

The NAACP called Stimson's attention to a memorandum issued by order of Major Ralph S. Hardiman through A. J. Brown, 1st Lt. QMC, Adjutant of Headquarters, Second Battalion, 47th Quartermaster Regiment at Fort Sill, Okla., in which were quoted sections 201, 204, 207, and 209, of the Oklahoma Statute providing for segregation in federal carriers with penalty for violation thereof and to which was added the further note that "the following is published for the information and guidance of all concerned."

JAN 9 - 1943

The NAACP inquired if Secretary Stimson believed it to be a proper function of the War Department to assist states in the enforcement of laws enacted to discriminate against citizens on account of race or color.

KIMBLE FOLLOWS HIGHER-UPS IN HIS RULE AT TUSKEGEE

JAN 9 - 1943

By SIDNEY WALKER
(Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, D.C., Jan. 7—A special, unique brand of segregation and discrimination is apparently being fostered within the United States Army Air Force of which the provocative example at the Tuskegee Army Air Force school is only a sample.

Responsibility for conditions at the Tuskegee school where Negro officers are made the victims of a strict and humiliating Jim Crow set-up has been laid at the feet of Col. Frederick von Kimble, the commanding officer of the post.

Responsibility for the larger, all-around policy of discrimination which characterizes Air Force training operations must be traced to Washington.

POLICY BASED ON COLOR

JAN 9 - 1943

It is fair to assume, in the light of the practices already pursued within the Air Force, that the high command, including Lieut. General Henry H. Arnold, has concluded that the Negro youth is not only different from all other American youths, but also inferior and a problem requiring special treat-

ONE BRANCH!

If "Our Boys" Can't Make Good As Pursuit Pilots, They Lose Out Altogether

A galling by-product of the discriminatory policy at Tuskegee is the manner in which aviation cadets who fail as flyers are discarded. These cadets are made to toe the mark for pursuit flying, the most difficult and exacting form of aviation. If they can't make the grade in this, they lose out altogether in aviation.

This is not true of white boys. White boys who fail as cadets are trained as bombardiers, gunners and in other phases of aviation team work. There are no Jim Crow schools to send Negroes to for this training. As a consequence, no Negro is trained to go into the air unless he can pass the tests for handling a pursuit ship.

The policy is based on color alone. There is nothing in the past experience of the Air Force to indicate that Negroes would make better, or worse, flyers and fighters, than whites. Their training record, as far as they have been permitted to go, has been as good as that of whites if not better. But in spite of this training record, doubts, based on color alone, are made the basis for special Jim Crow treatment of them.

This writer heard General Arnold, head of the Air Force, tell reporters that the training program for Negroes in aviation is an experiment. This statement came in the wake of another in which the general had boasted that the American boys trained in the Army air school were making the "best, damned flyers in the world."

STIMSON QUERIED ON RACE UNIT

But General Arnold meant white American boys, not Negro American boys. That was two months ago. Two months ago, the training of Negro boys was still an experiment to the highest offer in the Air Force.

Three weeks later, Secretary of War Stimson was queried about the training of Negro aviators. After he had been led to state that the proportion of Negroes in the Army as a whole would be about the same as the proportion in the population, or approximately 9.6 per cent, the Secretary was asked if this proportion applied also to the Air Force.

The question plainly caught the Secretary off guard. It was apparent in his reaction that he considered the question unfair and a bit on the dumb side. Visibly vexed, he replied that it was not correct to make such a deduction. He then explained that the technical requirements of some of the services would necessarily limit the proportions of Negroes.

A fair interpretation of the Secretary's reply was that he did not believe, or had been led not to believe, that Negroes could qualify for proportionate representation in the Air Force.

SECRETARY MAY NOT KNOW CASE

This statement must not be held too strongly against the Secretary. The chances are that he firmly believes that all Negroes who can qualify should be trained, given all the training that white boys are given. He perhaps does not know that the number of Negroes trained is being arbitrarily limited and that the training given is of a limited character, due to their color.

Civilian leadership in the War department is in the same position as the parent who hires a doctor. The doctor is supposed to know his business. So is the Army officer. The civilian leader asks the Army officer to perform a job in the same manner as the average parent calls on the physician. The physician may prescribe in error, but what is the parent to do.

Thus Army Air Force policy is largely the work of the high military command of the Air Force. Negroes forced their way into the Air Force with two strikes against them. Even after Negroes had succeeded through Congress in making it mandatory on the Secretary of War to see that some Negro flyers were trained, the military men in the War Department balked. Long after the law had been passed, no action had been taken. Congress had to rap General Geo. C. Marshall, chief of staff, across the fingers to get any action. The result was Tuskegee.

AIR FORCE ACTS INDEPENDENTLY

But since that time there has been an organic and fundamental change in the Army itself. The Army has been reorganized on a triple-threat basis into the Air Force, the Ground Force and the Services of Supply. These three forces, led by three-star generals, are supposed to be responsible to General Marshall. He has four stars. General Marshall is in turn responsible to the Secretary of War, the Congress and the Commander-in-Chief.

In actual practice the Air Force is putting a heavy strain on the hinges of this co-ordinate set-up. The crusade of some writers for an independent Air Force is being reflected in the Air Force by a disposition to do things its own way. A study of Air Force policy discloses that in a number of instances it is not bound by the broad general policies of the Ground Force or the Services of Supply.

The chief offender in the commissioning of civilians was the Air Force. Secretary Stimson had to issue a statement in defense.

OPENING JIM CROW OFFICERS SCHOOL

Another case in point is the setting up of a Jim Crow Air Force Officers' Training school at Jefferson Barracks in Missouri. There are no separate officer training schools in the Ground Force or the Services of Supply. In both these branches of the Army, white and Negro officers, North and South, are trained together.

That the Jefferson Barracks Jim Crow school was the work of the high command of the Air Force was indicated late in November when Secretary Stimson, queried on the prospective organization of the school, was forced to acknowledge that he was not informed about it. That was at a press conference.

Despite the Secretary's lack of information and despite the fact that the Air Force Jim Crow school contrasts the policy of the other two branches of the Army, this extension of segregation within the Air Force has proceeded.

Of course, the most tragic aspect of this "independent" policy of the Air Force is its indifference to the public interest.

Negro flyers have been in training at Tuskegee since 1941, before Pearl Harbor. But not a single Negro flyer has gone to war.

It is a matter of plain, blunt truth, that scores of Negro flyers might today be on the front lines if they had been permitted to receive their training with their white fellow Americans.

TUSKEGEE NOT TRAINING TO FIGHT

The reason they have not been sent to the front, the reason that these expensively-trained men are not paying the taxpayers back is because they must qualify for fighting through a special Jim Crow system and that system is not yet perfected.

Flyers who finish the Army Air Force Jim Crow school near Tuskegee are not ready to fight. White boys who finish schools similar to the one at Tuskegee are sent to other schools for finishing courses. They are sent to Randolph Field in Texas for courses in didactics. They go to Maxwell Field in Alabama for field courses. They are given an opportunity to learn to fly in large groups. They receive "mother" courses from men who have been to the battlefront.

Colored flyers can take none of these courses because they are not assigned to the so-called white schools. Some colored boys have been required to take correspondence courses. Correspondence courses have been cut out for white boys. Three colored boys were sent to Maxwell Field in order to qualify as instructors at the Jefferson Barracks Jim Crow schools.

DOCTORS UNABLE TO GET TRAINING

There is an entirely new field of medicine, aviation medicine. Colored doctors do not have the opportunity to take courses in aviation medicine. As a consequence, if colored flyers were sent to the front, they would be without expert medical aid unless white doctors trained in aviation medicine were sent with them.

Thus it can be seen that the conditions imposed at Tuskegee by Col. Kimble, however depressing they may be to the trainees there represent only part of the picture.

Manpower represents one of the big problems of the war. Industry has been warned that it must use every man and women it can in the place where he or she can give the best service to the nation.

The United States Navy and the Army Air Force ignore this plain mandate of necessity. The Air Force is wasting time and money on an anti-democratic scheme to train Negro aviators. Its mandate is dictated by color and prejudice, not by necessity nor the national interest.

In its new notion of independence, the Air Force is dangerously close to independence of the law and the Constitution.

Race Bias Charged At Jersey Plants

JAN 26 1943

Special to the World-Telegram.

NEWARK, Jan. 25.—With New Jersey war plants short 80,000 workers, discrimination against Negroes is hampering war production noticeably, Lawrence A. Oxley of the War Manpower Commission said.

Addressing a meeting of the Greater Newark Industrial Union Council, Mr. Oxley pointed out that while Negroes comprise eight-tenths of 1 per cent of the state's war workers they make up 5.5 per cent of the population.

An official survey, he said, revealed that 51 per cent of expected job openings were barred to Negro workers.

Clergy Asks Probe Of Anti-Negro Bias

FEB 1 - 1943

Leading churchmen today appealed to President Roosevelt to reschedule public hearings on alleged discrimination against Negroes on southern railways. The hearings were canceled by Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission.

The appeal was made in a memorial requesting that the President reaffirm his executive order forbidding race discrimination in war industries and reconstitute the Fair Employment Practices Committee, removing it from the jurisdiction of the War Manpower Commission.

Negro Quits Job As Stimson Aide

Law College Dean Refuses To Give Reasons For Resigning Position

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—(AP)—The resignation of William H. Hastie, negro civilian aide to the secretary of war, was disclosed today. Hastie declined to say why he was resigning or what he expected to do.

"I wish to state my sincere appreciation for the measure of friendly support and co-operation which my office has received from the press," he said. "I shall have no further or amplifying statement to make until my official duties have terminated" at the end of this month.

Hastie was born in 1904 at Knoxville, Tenn., and is a graduate of Amherst College and Harvard Law School. He has been on leave as dean of Howard University Law School here since he joined Secretary Stimson's staff November 1, 1940, as an adviser on negro affairs. Hastie was federal judge in the Virgin Islands from 1937 to 1939.

Hastie said that his assistant, Truman K. Gibson, Jr., and Louis Lautier, administrative assistant in charge of matters affecting negro civilian personnel, would remain on duty with the department.

STREET CAR FIRM TO STUDY USE OF NEGRO WORKERS

Officers to Consider Move, Council Told.

Thomas C. Strachan, attorney for the surface lines, informed members of the city council's local transportation committee yesterday that company officials next week will consider demands that Negroes be employed as street car conductors and motormen. Negro groups have charged discrimination.

Ald. James R. Quinn [50th], chairman of the committee, expressed hope the company would solve the problem.

Lee Friedman, counsel for the Chicago Motor Coach company, told the committee bus lines have not discriminated against Negroes. The only reason the company has not employed them on buses he said, is that no Negroes have applied.

Promises Bus Applicants.

"If they apply and can meet our requirements they will be hired as drivers," said Friedman. Ald. Benjamin A. Grant [3d], colored, and a leader in the fight for traction jobs for his people, promised he would send qualified Negroes to apply.

The local transportation committee also took steps to stop long haul refusals by taxicab drivers because of greater profit in short trips, by calling upon the taxicab companies to post notices that drivers will carry passengers to thier destinations anywhere within the city or suburban regulatory limits.

Fights Double Parking.

In other transport matters, Phil Harrington, subway commissioner and Chicago area coördinator for the office of defense transportation, urged the transportation committee to act against double and angle automobile parking on car lines. The committee also heard a complaint from William H. McManus, chairman of the West Town Chamber of Commerce, that 25 war plants are without adequate transportation because of the recent abandonment of the Kimball-Homan avenue bus route.

Dr. Patterson Mentioned As Successor To Hastie

War Undersecretary Patterson Says Department Regrets Resignation

WASHINGTON—(ANP) — Discussing the Hastie resignation, Robert Patterson, undersecretary of war said in his press conference Thursday morning. "It was with great regret the secretary received Judge Hastie's resignation. I personally had many contacts with Mr. Hastie and respected him thoroughly. The choice of his successor is now underway." When another question was asked as to why Judge Hastie resigned, Mr. Patterson replied, "I can't say."

"In his two years with the war department. Mr. Hastie did some excellent work. He is a man of the highest character. While he was here, work on the utilizing of Negro soldiers in all branches of the service made extensive progress. The number of Negro civilian employes also grow rapidly. He rendered able and distinguished service to the war department."

Immediately after the conference, Mr. Hastie was visited in his own office where he still refused to discuss the situation. He did say:

"There is a number of fine officials in the war department and a blanket condemnation of them would do irreparable harm and be an injustice. Therefore, when my official duties here are severed, a statement containing a resume of what happened will be issued.

At the same time, Truman Gibson, assistant to Hastie stated he had no intention of remaining in the position he occupies any longer than necessary for a successor to Judge Hastie to be named and sworn in on the job.

Prominently mentioned as Hastie's successor is Dr. Frederick Patterson, president of Tuskegee. Mr Hastie said he felt his resignation would do some good where it was needed most, or else he would not have resigned

Asked about his future plans Judge Hastie said he was going to rest a while before doing anything. He had not made up his mind yet what he plans to do, whether he will return immediately to the Howard University Law school from which he was on leave of absence, or take a post with the NAACP nation office in the legal division.

Raps Negro Ban In WAVES, SPARS

Daily Worker "N.Y.

JAN 20 1943

Failure of the U. S. Navy to induct Negro women into the WAVEs and SPARs, Navy and Coast Guard women's auxiliary services, was sharply assailed by a resolution introduced at a long wrangling session of the City Council yesterday by the Rev. A. Clayton Powell, lone Negro member of the city legislative body.

Powell's resolution was sent to the committee on rules without discussion.

It pointed out that the Bronx Hunter College buildings, supported by taxes paid by New Yorkers of all races, had been leased to the Navy for training of WAVEs and SPARs, "two discriminatory services."

ASSAILS AGREEMENT

"Such an agreement between the City of New York and the Navy is against the spirit of the City of New York, the laws of the State of New York, the philosophy of our democracy and the announced purposes of this war," said the resolution.

Councilman Powell asked that the City Council formally request the United States Navy "to reconsider its policy as it affects the WAVEs and SPARs."

The Powell resolution also requested that the Mayor, Board of Estimate and Board of Higher Education consult with proper Naval authorities "with the view of urging the changing of these policies."

This should be done immediately, said the resolution, so that "a full, all-out, vigorous prosecution of the war shall be continued on a 100 per cent basis consistent with the spirit of New York City and the laws of the State of New York and the fundamental tenets of our beloved nation that peace and victory may be hastened."

NAVY DENIES BAN

Asked about discrimination against Negro women in the WAVEs and SPARs, a spokesman for the Navy at 90 Church St. said there were "no rules barring persons for race, creed or color."

The Navy spokesman declined to comment, however, when asked if he knew of any Negro women in the WAVEs or SPARs.

The Powell resolution was earmarked and sent to committee after a long councilmanic wrangle over a resolution by Councilman Stanley M. Isaacs asking that the city continue operation of 130 WPA classes in English and Citizenship when the WPA ends next month.

Isaacs asked for immediate consideration of the resolution. There were no objections. He made a motion for its consideration. The motion was seconded by Councilman Peter V. Cacchione, Brooklyn Communist.

Charge Army, Navy Spreading Jim Crow

Judge Hastie Hands In Resignation As War Department Aide

JAN 23 1943

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Speculation is rife in this city over the resignation announced on Saturday by former Judge William H. Hastie as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War. The resignation will become effective as of January 31st.

For some time it has been rumored that Judge Hastie's resignation would be forthcoming chiefly, it is said, because he was often the target at which many militant organizations fired their shots in protest against discriminatory treatment of Negro soldiers.

In 1940, when Judge Hastie took a leave of absence from the Howard University Law School which he served as dean, he said on accepting his post with the War Department:

"I have always been consistently opposed to any policy of discrimination and segregation in the armed forces of this country. I am accepting this post in the hope that I will be able to work effectively toward the integration of the Negro in the Army and to facilitate his placement, training and promotion."

In his statement announcing his resignation, Judge Hastie said:

"In the past, replying to inquiries prompted by rumors and speculation, I have stated that, if and when I should leave the War Department, the press would receive direct and authoritative information. Accordingly, the press is now advised that I have submitted my resignation as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War effective at the end of January, 1943.

I have asked Mr. Louis Lautier, administrative assistant in this office, who has been dealing effectively with matters involving civilian personnel to remain at his post. It is my belief that he can continue to contribute substantially to gains already represented by the placement and advancement of of thousands of Negroes and the satisfactory adjustment of many employee grievances.

'I have also asked Mr. Truman K. Gibson, jr., assistant Civilian aide, to remain at his post, at least through such transitional period as may be necessary to prevent any discontinuity of effort in matters which have been undertaken by this office. I wish to state my sincere appreciation for the friendly support and cooperation which my office has received from the press.

"I shall have no further or amplifying statement to make until after my official duties shall have terminated."

Those close to Judge Hastie, place special significance in his concluding statement and feel that when he does issue his net statement it will not only explain the reason for his resignation, but also will incorporate suggestions which he has made to the War Department as to the Negro service man's treatment in the future.

Army Officer Rebuked For Racial Superiority Talk

Protest To Secretary Of War Brings Reply Of "Assurances"

JAN 2 2 1943

NEWARK, N. J.—(ANP)—Implying that one of the overshadowing backgrounds in the war effort against the Japanese was "the necessity of saving the white man's face in the orient," brought a prompt checkup by his superiors to Lt. Col. William J. McKiernan of the air force recently, when the incident was reported to the office of the secretary of war by Harold A. Lett, secretary of the New Jersey Urban league with headquarters here.

JAN 2 2 1943

The officer had been assigned as one of the speakers representing the office of the secretary of war to speak at ceremonies marking the award of the army-navy "E" to the Tightflex Metal Hosiery Co., of Newark. A patriotic spirit permeated the meeting as it progressed smoothly along until Col. McKiernan urged the workers, representing several nationalities and with a large number of Negroes, to increase their efforts because, "a defeat by the Japanese would cause the white man to lose face in the orient; and if the white man lost face there it is going to be pretty tough for us all over the globs."

JAN 2 2 19

The letter of protest written to Under-Sec., of War Robert Patterson by Mr. Lett resulted in the department writing Mr. Lett after a short lapse of time that:

"The United States army is a fighting force composed, as is America itself, of men representing all creeds and all races. We are fighting for the rights of free men and the right of every man whatever his race or creed to be free.

"I need hardly add that any statement inconsistent with that spirit does not have the sanction of the war department, and I have so informed Col. McKiernan in the name of the under-secretary of war.

JAN 2 2 1943

"Col. McKiernan has assured me that he intended no slight to any race, that he intended merely to convoy the impression that defeat at the hands of the axis would make it tough for all Americans."

Hastie Resigns in a Huff as Recommendations Are Scrapped

JAN 2 3 1943

Judge Willian Hastie, Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War since November 1, 1940, has resigned his post effective January 31, 1943.

While Judge Hastie refused to elaborate on his resignation or to ascribe any reason for his decision, it was generally understood by those who have followed his activity in the War Department, that the resignation was provoked because of the judge's inability to get affirmative action on his recommendations.

Judge Hastie is said to have told friends at the time he accepted the position, that he would not hold on if he found he could serve no useful purpose. For that reason, he failed to resign his post as dean of the Howard School of Law, but merely took an indefinite leave of absence.

Since Judge Hastie has been with the War Department, many gains have been made, but it was felt that not enough latitude had been given him.

JAN 2 3 1943

Mre than 10,000 Negroes have been hired by the War Department since the Hastie appointment; an air coprs has been set up at Tuskegee Institute; a tank battalion has been formed, and there is no segregation in officer candidate schools.

But with all of this Hastie's efforts were rebuffed when he sought to have aviation opportunities—which are now limited to 33 a year—expanded. He met with opposition again when he sought to have the War Department issue pamphlets instructing troops on the attitude they should have toward Negroes.

Discrimination and segregation still exists at all Army camps and conflicts between Negro soldiers and civilian police have resulted in several shooting episodes.

Hastie was known to have acknowledged several months ago that he had gone as far as the War Department would permit, and on several occasions is said to have offered to resign, but had been urged to hold on.

In leaving the department, Hastie has expressed a desire that Louis R. Lautier administrative assistant, to remain at his post, and has urged Truman K. Gibson, assistant civilian aide, to remain "at least through such transitional period as may be necessary to prevent any discontinuity of efforts in matters which have been undertaken by this office."

JAN 2 3 1943

However, it is generally believed that Mr. Gibson will follow Mr. Hastie's precedent, and resign shortly after the first of February.

Jim Crow Ousted By Plant; It Works

EDGEWOOD ARSENAL, Md., Jan. 6.—There is a unique labor situation in this arsenal where poison gas is manufactured, loaded into shells and stored.

Women make up 60 per cent of the workers who handle the cases, assemble gas masks and do other work at the headquarters of the Army's Chemical Warfare Service. Sixty per cent of all workers are Negroes.

JAN 6 - 1943

Throughout the plant men and women of different races work side by side. It is a matter of policy that Negro workers shall not be employed exclusively on any type of job. In other words, no Negro is able to say he is given dangerous, disagreeable or arduous work that a white worker is not asked to do.

JAN 6 - 1943

I have visited many industrial plants where Negroes are employed but none where these circumstances prevail. In most plants Negroes are assigned to certain types of work and to certain departments to minimize the chances of friction arising from competition and proximity.

JUDGE HASTIE RESIGNS

ANNOUNCEMENT was made Saturday by Former Federal Judge William H. Hastie from his position as Civilian Aide To The Secretary of War, effective at the end of January, 1943.

In announcing his resignation, Judge Hastie said: "I shall have no further or amplifying statement to make until after my official duties shall have terminated."

JAN 2 3 1943

No reason was given for his resignation so that his statement, quoted directly above, is especially significant. It is no secret that Judge Hastie, who resigned from the Federal bench in the Virgin Islands to go back to civilian life as dean of the Law School at Howard rather than to stand for certain things, has been in an uncomfortable position ever since he became connected with the War Department. For one thing he has a reputation for being outspoken and not given to pulling his punches.

JAN 2 3 1943

At the time of assuming his War Department position he told reporters:

"I have always been consistently opposed to any policy of discrimination and segregation in the armed forces of this country. I am assuming this post in the hope that I will be able to work effectively toward the integration of the Negro into the Army and to facilitate his placement, training and promotion."

JAN 2 3 1943

His resignation, then, could mean that Judge Hastie saw his hopes blasted and was unwilling to remain longer as a scapegoat. We shall await his clarifying statement.

JIM CROW PATTERN FORCED ON NORTH BY ARMY, NAVY, CHARGE

JAN 8 - 1943

Washington, D. C.—Repeated attempts on the part of southern army and navy personnel to force southern race patters on non-southern areas were asasiled again this week by Walter White, executive secretary to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who in a letter to the Secretary of War Stimson said:

"We submit again that the War Department needs to speed up the formulation of a more clearly defined program in accordance with the highest standards of democracy to avert further trouble and to serve notice upon bigots that the decent thoughtful peopel of the United States who constitute the overwhelming majority, are going to determine the patterns of action of the country as a whole and not the bigots themselves."

The NAACP called Stimson's attention to a memorandum issued by order of Major Ralph S. Hardiman through A. J. Brown, 1st Lt. QMC, Adjutant of Headquarters, Second Battalion, 47th Quartermaster Regiment at Fort Sill, Okla., in which ware quoted sections 201, 204, 207, and 209, of the Oklahoma Statute providing for segregation in federal carriers with penalty for violation thereof and to which was added the further note that "the following is published for the information and guidance of all concerned."

JAN 8 - 1943

The NAACP inquired if Secretary Stimson believed it to be a proper function of the War Department to assist states in the enforcement of laws enacted to discriminate against citizens on account of race or color.

Former War Department Aid Gives Additional Facts on Army Aviation Program as It Affects Negro Youth

FEB 19 1943

In the following statement, William H. Hastie, who recently resigned as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, in protest against the shortcomings of the military aviation program as it affects Negroes, discusses some additional aspects of racial discrimination and segregation in the Army Air Forces.

4

BY WILLIAM H. HASTIE

NEW YORK. — It was not until March, 1941, that the Army Air Corps began accepting applications from Negroes for aviation cadet training. The actual instruction of Negroes to be flying officers did not begin until several months later.

FEB 19 1943

But even then, and to this day, there was and is only one type of combat aviation—namely, pursuit flying—for which the Air Command will train a Negro.

How did it happen that the training of Negro aviators was started in the field of pursuit flying? It is common knowledge that grave doubts were expressed from the beginning as to whether the Negro was capable of making good as a combat aviator.

Training of Negro An Experiment

FEB 19 1943

The Air Command described and still describes the training of the Negro in aviation as an "experiment." Yet, in the face of this expressed skepticism, the Air Command saw fit to begin with the training of Negroes for pursuit flying, the most difficult type of combat aviation.

The single pilot in his pursuit ship has the most exacting of air tasks, handling his fast plane, maneuvering it at terrific speed in actual combat, mastering the technic of accurate and properly directed fire in aerial dog fights, and execising split second judgment in unexpected situations and emergenies.

FEB 19 1943

Why was the Negro, whose ability was in doubt, not started off with observation flying or in bombardment where co-pilots and other crew members assist each other and share and divide responsibility?

Only the men who made the decision know the answer. They may have reasoned that through pursuit flying Negroes would demonstrate their ability to perform any air combat task. Fortunately, it seems to be working out that way.

Successfully Completes Course

They may also have reasoned that Negroes were less likely to succeed in pursuit flying than in somewhat less exacting work. Yet in all fairness it should be said thoroughly competent instructors were provided for the segregated training program for Negro pilots.

And the men in the field who started this training did so with enthsuiasm and determination to make it a success.

FEB 19 1943

Statistics already released by the Air Command show that, during the first year of Negro pursuit pilot training, 42 per cent of the Negro trainees successfully completed their course and earned their wings as pursuit pilots. During the same period 59 per cent of white aviation cadets who entered training qualified as flying officers.

FEB 19 1943

Of course the number of Negroes was small and the statistics are therefore not conclusive. More important is the fact that Negro candidates have no opportunity at any stage of training to be assigned to some other branch of combat flying, if they seem not to be well adapted to pursuit work. The Negro cadet must become a pursuit pilot or nothing. White cadets are sorted out and placed according to their apparent aptitudes.

Specifications Must Be Met

FEB 19 1943

Under these circumstances, the fact that 42 per cent of the Negroes who had the physical and educational qualifications for aviation made the grade in the most difficult assignment is a significent accomplishment.

Beyond the fact that the Negro must have the ability for pursuit flying, or else not fly at all, he must meet the special physical specifications of the pursuit pilot. If he is too tall or too heavy for pursuit flying, he cannot be an Army flyer, however competent he may be for some flying job other than pursuit work.

In wasted manpower, it is difficult to say how much is being lost by imposing such restrictions upon the Negro. It seems probable that some 200 Negro pursuit pilots will earn their wings in 1943. But the Air Command has never undertaken a campaign of publicity or promotion designed to get young Negro men with superior training into flying training.

College Reserve Program Set Up

FEB 19 1943

When the Air Forces set up their college reserve program, no Negroes were wanted. The small "Negro quota" was already filled for a year in advance. So, while the Ground Forces were welcoming Negro college men into their college reserve, the Air Forces refused to accept them.

Even earlier the Air Corps had undertaken the recruiting of groups of men from the individual college campus who would go into training as a unit with the group spirit and enthusiasm developed through their association at college. The Negro was excluded from this also.

Thus, only the Negro who went forward on his own initiative, determined despite hell and high water to be a combat flyer, ever became an aviation cadet. Even then, he was accepted only within the limited quota restrictions and for one type of training.

Within the past two months, restrictions upon the acceptance of volunteers in the army have been extended to aviation cadets. Apparently, aviation cadets will be chosen almost exclusively from men already in the Army.

Negro Faces A New Problem

FEB 19 1943

A new problem faces the Negro. He must apply for aviation cadet training through his commander and his papers must survive a journey through military channels. It remains to be seen whether his application will be encouraged and facilitated to the same extent as the application of the white soldier. In this connection, one recent experience is disturbing. For more than a year the Air Command has been selecting young soldiers, high school graduates, to be taken from the ranks and trained to become enlisted pilots.

They become master, staff and technical sergeants with flying ratrating. So far as I have been able to discover, Negro enlisted men have not been accepted in this program. How different will be the situation now that both prospective flying officers and prospective enlisted pilots will be selected from the ranks of the Army?

Negro Pursuit Pilots

FEB 19 1943

Two hundred Negro pursuit pilots a year is something more than token representation. Certainly, 200 pilots can make a mig difference in almost any of the present theaters of war. Yet the failure of the Air Command to encourage or even permit the full participation of the Negro in flying training and service prevents the number of Negro pilots from being several times 200 per year.

If the Air Command should decide to use Negro flying officers and enlisted men without racial restrictions, 1,000 pilots would be a conservative estimate of annual production.

FEB 19 1943

Of course there would be serious practical dimmiculties in developing segregated training fields and segregated organizations of many various types in such an expansion.

From a military point of view all of this new segregated set up probably would not be worth the time, expense and diversion of personnel. But if the war lasts long enough, it is not too much to hope that those in authority will realize that their insistence upon strict racial segregation in aviation trainng and organzation is a real hinderance to the ultimate objective of success in battle.

Whites Trained in Private and Army School All Over the Country, Hastie Points Out

FEB 27 1943

[EDITOR'S NOTE—This is the fourth public statement of Judge Hastie, who resigned recently as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War.]

FEB 27 1943

By WILLIAM H. HASTIE

There is not now, and never has been, any good reason for the segregated training of colored flyers at Tuskegee.

There are two stages in the training of a soldier to be an army flyer. The first stage teaches the new cadet how to fly, using small light aircraft adapted to the training of a beginner.

This part of the program is carried out by private operators who contract with the army to give preliminary flying instruction to aviation cadets.

Private Schools Numerous

The private contractor furnishes the field and the instructors, while the army selects and assigns the cadets, prescribes the course of instruction and supervises training. There are a great many such contract schools scattered in various sections of the country.

FEB 27 1943

The cadet who successfully completes the elementary flying course at such a school is next assigned to an army field for further basic and advanced training. From this point on, the army takes complete charge of the training program.

Separation Groundless

There was no need to segregate colored cadets in either stage o training. Newly appointed colored cadets could have been assigned to beginning classes at any one of the many contract schools just as white cadets are assigned.

In fact one or two colored cadets were so assigned by mistake. But when they arrived for training, arrangements were quickly made to reassigned them to Tuskegee.

Similarly in the more advanced training, colored cadets who had completed the primary course could have been sent to the various army flying training centers.

But the Air Command was determined to separate colored and white cadets at every stage of training.

Tuskegee Institute was awarded a contract to provide army primary training for colored army aviation cadets.

FEB 27 1943

Under this contract the army enlisted and appointed a small group of colored cadets every few weeks and sent them to the Tuskegee contract school where colored instructors employed by Tuskegee Institute gave elementary flying training under army supervision.

Some Misguided

Incidentaly, this caused some confusion, because Tuskegee Institute also has a civilian pilot course which is not connected with the army.

Some young men enrolled in this civilian course under the misapprehension that by doing so they were getting into army aviation.

For the more advanced training of colored cadets, the army invested millions of dollars in the construction of a new army air base a few miles from the town of Tuskegee.

FEB 27 1943

No School Connection

Tuskegee Institute has no connection with this army field or with the advanced training conducted there. However, as to this also there has been some confusion and misunderstanding in the public mind.

But why in the name of common sense should all of this elaborate special machinery be set up to train colored flyers?

It was expensive. It caused a delay of six months or more in the beginning of flying training for colored cadets. It was not flexible, since it was adapted only to the training of Pursuit Pilots.

Only by setting up additional colored training centers for bombardment and observation, or by abandoning segregated training could the program be broadened.

Must Mix in Combat

The idea of a separate training base for colored pilots is indefensible, if these pilots are actually to be an integral part of our combat air forces.

It is not possible to train flyers in one small area as foot soldiers can be trained. Even in training men must fly from field to field.

After a flyer is commissioned, his flying in this country will necessarily take him in and out of a large number of flying fields.

If he goes into combat abroad, one thing is certain: he will not just fly out of a jim-crow base with his own colored unit and fly back again.

Even infantrymen traveling on their own two feet get scattered in combat. How much more are aviators bound to get into unexpected places and undergo regrouping from time to time during the course of a campaign.

It is simply impossible to maintain racial segregation of pilots in a combat area. The air command must know this.

Mutual Respect Vital Lesson

Since such contacts and mingling are unavoidable, the only sensible thing to do is to prepare men for them by providing interracial associations in training such as they are bound to have later on.

If we want white and colored flyers in combat to get along well with each other, the best plan is to build mutual understanding and self-respect by training them together from the time they begin learning to fly.

The worst plan is to keep them apart until they are forced together under the stress of circumstances in combat. Prejudice is based on ignorance. Let men get acquainted with each other in training and there is no great problem of their harmony later on.

All of this has seemed simple and obvious to me. The air command, however, cannot see it.

This air command is not even influenced by the fact that the ground forces have been training white and colored officer candidates together with excellent results ever since the beginning of the present army expansion.

Public Pressure Needed

There are none so blind as those who do not want to see; and the air command just does not want to see the advantages of training white and colored flyers together.

FEB 27 1943

I believe this blindness will continue until public criticism and condemnation of the segregated training policy becomes so strong that it can no longer be ignored.

NAACP Addresses Query on Report To War Dep't

NEW YORK, N. Y.—(SNS)—An investigation by the War Department of the treatment of Negro troops stationed in Alaska was sought this week by the NAACP.

In a letter to Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, the NAACP stated that it had received from a number of sources reports alleging that Negro troops in Alaska are victims of widespread discriminatory treatment.

One allegation has it that Negro troops are confined to camp and have been denied passes to visit some Alaskan cities. It is asserted that this condition has extended far beyond any quarantine period and is an established practice.

It is also reported that the men are discriminated against within Army camps in that they are segregated into a theatre "for colored" and refused service at post exchanges except one designated "for colored."

One unidentified soldier returning to the states from Alaska is alleged to have told his relatives, "So far as treatment is concerned, I would rather be in Georgia than Alaska."

OCT 9 1943

The NAACP urged an immediate investigation and asked that if these allegations are found to be true corrective measures be taken without delay.

Negro Soldiers Clean Toilets of White at Camp Wheeler, Georgia

"The Call" Kansas City Mo.

MAR 19 1943

WASHINGTON.— Why are Negro soldiers required to rise an hour earlier than white soldiers at Camp Wheeler, Ga.? the Washington Bureau of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People demanded this week of Secretary of War Stimson.

MAR 19 1943

Reveille is sounded at 5:30 a. m. for colored soldiers only. Upon rising they clean their own barracks and mess halls, after which they are required to clean the toilets used by white soldiers. White soldiers at Camp Wheeler rise at 6:30 a. m.

In the letter to Stimson, the N.A.A.C.P. declared: "relegation of Negro soldiers by the United States army to be the status of menials gives democracy an empty sound to those who are called upon to sacrifice, fight and die for it."

MAR 19 1943

The NAACP cited the treatment accorded Negroes assigned to the medical detachment as being especially objectionable.

Hastie Sees Grave Danger In Air Forces-'Skegee Plan

Journal and Guide Norfolk, Virginia

NOTE: The following statement by William H. Hastie, released by the NAACP, describes and criticizes a new development in the Army Air program as it affects Negroes. Although Judge Hastie has completed his recent series of statements on the Air Forces, he considers this new and most recent development to be a matter which should receive public attention everywhere.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—The Army Air Forces have just announced a new program of five months academic training in selected colleges to be given to soldiers before they begin army flying training.

The men will be taught by the college faculties and will live on the campus.

Over a hundred schools all over the country have been selected to provide this preliminary college training. But eligible Negro soldiers are to be segregated and all of them sent to Tuskegee Institute to study physics, mathematics, history, English and geography.

UNDERGRADUATE TRAINING

Men from all parts of the country, men with varying educational background, a large number of them already graduates of first rate liberal arts colleges, must be sent to Tuskegee Institute for five months of undergraduate training, just because they happen to be colored.

Even if Tuskegee were an outstanding liberal arts college, which it is not, this newest and wholly unnecessary Jim Crow scheme would be inexcusable. In all the circumstances the plan is outrageous.

The time has come when the unholy alliance between Tuskegee Institute and the Army Air Forces must be publicly denounced and condemned.

Let there be no mistake. Tuskegee is rendering no valuable service to the war effort in this latest step in its effort to concentrate a black aviation program on and around the Tuskegee campus.

WILLING ACCOMPLICE

With callous indifference to the best interests of the Negro and to the importance of democracy in the war effort, Tuskegee Institute is looking out for Tuskegee. The school gets its mess of pottage and the Air Forces have a willing and valuable accomplice in their design of keeping Negro soldiers out of all unsegregated colleges.

Several hundred Negroes may be affected by this scheme almost immediately. Early in March the Air Forces called to active duty the entire waiting list of several hundred qualified Negro aviation cadet applicants. I am sure of this because of my personal acquaintance with several of the men who were near the bottom of the list and have been called to duty.

These are the men who, after the usual preliminary processing, face the prospect of five months undergraduate study at Tuskegee before they begin aviation training.

BOMBARDIERS

It still remains to be seen what will be done with these men after they finish five months of college study at Tuskegee Institute. A report was sent from Tuskegee to a leading newspaper that some of these men are to become bombardiers and navigators.

There is no apparent truth to this report. I can find no evidence from any source of any plan to train Negroes for bombardment aviation. It seems to me that someone has tried to take the curse off of this latest Tuskegee outrage by circulating the false report that new opportunity is being provided for Negroes in the field of bombardment aviation. The whole thing smells very bad.

MUST CONTINUE TO QUESTION

There is one further question which we must ask and continue to ask until an answer is given.

What about new Negro applicants for aviation cadet training now that the waiting list is exhausted?

I do not know of any plan of the Air Forces for accepting or using additional Negro applicants. Will they be accepted? If so will they go on a waiting list to remain there until 1944? I know from experience that the Air Command makes piecemeal special plans for Negroes to meet the emergency at hand and then lets the matter drop until another emergency arises.

There is grave danger, unless the public keeps the issue constantly alive, that after the group called to duty in March, no additional Negro aviation cadets will be trained for a long time to come.

FULLER ON TRIAL FOR EXPOSING ARMY BRUTALITY

Guardian Boston, Mass.

JUL 24 1943

NEW YORK—Chaplain Luther M. Fuller is being tried here on charges growing out of his exposure of army brutality.

The trial is before a Board of Reclassification of the U. S. Army consisting of five commissioned army officers. The Board will determine where Chaplain Fuller can be of the best service in the army or whether he is fit for any army duty after exposing treatment of soldiers in the South Pacific. An opportunity was given Chaplain Fuller to resign, but he refused on the grounds that his cause was just, and he demanded a hearing. He will be represented by Judge W. C. Hueston, Army counsel was assigned Chaplain Fuller but he insisted on his right to choose his own attorney.

Scores of churchmen and civic leaders are here to support the chaplain. Among witnesses heard by the Board the day the trial opened were Rev. J. E. Jeltz of Boston, Rev. W. H. Jernagin, director of the Washington Bureau of the Fraternal Council of Churches and Mrs. Eunice Wolf, chairman of the Brooks Memorial Volunteers, White Plains, N. Y. The trial may last a week or two.

Observers believe that the trial will reveal gross discrimination practiced toward men in uniform including chaplains. Instances are cited in which white officers have refused entirely to listen to or understand the viewpoint of colored chaplains when they argue the cases of colored soldiers who have been outraged by their white brothers. Racial animosities on the part of commanding officers toward colored chaplains, it is said, make it almost impossible to perform the required duties efficiently.

JUL 24 1943

CHAPLAIN LUTHER M. FULLER Militant Pastor of People's Baptist Church, Chelsea, on leave of absence, to serve in the U. S. Army, who is being tried in New York for disclosing ill treatment of colored soldiers, including chaplains, in the service. Dr. J. E. Jeltz of Boston is among witnesses in Chaplain Fuller's behalf.

Company dance in the South

Dear Bill:

My company threw a dance last night. The night before several men put up decorations at the Service Club; at 8 the night of the dance the club was cleared of all but necessary help and guards were posted to keep out all but company members—and the girls who came by bus-load from the nearby town.

The girls, as girls will, varied from plain to ravishing, and they had on lovely cotton dresses full of bright colors and the skirts were full and billowy. The music was good, it was not crowded, and the men began to say, and to repeat throughout the evening—they are still saying it— This is the best GI dance they'd ever been to. I, too, was stirred, and I tapped (or is it tagged?) and danced my way through the evening.

I was having a wonderful time, and, Bill, it was wonderful, dancing with these Southern belles. And then about 11 o'clock, having seen everyone I knew tagging each other and dancing off with blonde and brunette, the full skirts swishing, amid a whirlpool of scents from powder and perfume, I suddenly bethought me of five or six men who were not there. My heart sank. I felt sick. The men I had recalled were not doing CQ, they were not confined to the company area for misdemeanors or dirty rifles: they were Negroes.

Bill, I do not know what they were told about not coming by their officers; and I have not the heart to ask them; and, indeed, it is unnecessary to ask them anything. This is the South, and it would be unthinkable to allow five or six Negroes to enter a ballroom (albeit only a GI one) full of lovely young Southern (white) things in great big billowing skirts.

And when the hour of my remembering my fellow (Negro) soldiers had struck, I took no more delight in the music and the dancing and the scents of powder and perfume and the vain but lovely flirtatious eyes of the Southern belles. And there were many other things that no longer delighted me. It is like a beautiful line of poetry I once read: "The lark in my mind has flown."

Colonel Westbrook Grounds 332nd Fighter Group Until New Ships Arrive — Sidat-Singh Still Missing

Westbrook Relieved

At Selfridge Field

MAY 22 1943

BULLETIN !

DETROIT, Mich., May 20—Lt. Col. Samuel Westbrook, who came here from Tuskegee as commander of the 332nd Fighter Group, was unexpectedly replaced Monday morning by Col. Robert Selway, on orders of the War Department in Washington, D.C.

Colonel Westbrook will remain with the group as "group executive officer" under the new commanding officer.

Following last week's tragedies, Colonel Westbrook refused to send his pilots into the air until new planes were obtained. Whether or not the action in succeeding him as commanding officer has any significance, is not known. Whether or not the new commanding officer will also insist on new planes before continuing flights, is not known.

The replacement of Colonel Westbrook as commanding officer is probably a routine transfer. As executive officer, Colonel Westbrook will continue to have direct supervision of the training of the 332nd Fighter Group.

MAY 22 1943

By WILLIAM G. NUNN
(Special to The Courier)

DETROIT, May 20 — New planes are needed for the 332nd Fighter Group, located at Selfridge Field . . . and it is reliably reported that they will be had!

No Negroes are flying at Selfridge Field these days, Lt. Col. Samuel Westbrook, commander of the group, having grounded his investigation conducted by this writer, with the able assistance of John R. Williams, editor of the Detroit edition of The Courier, following the wave of air fatalities during the past 10 days.

INEFFICIENCY NOT INVOLVED

Speculation was rife following the accidents at the Oscoda Air Base, which took the life of Lt. Jerome T. Edwards and resulted in the "Still Missing" tag on Lt. Wilmeth Sidat-Singh, nationally-known athlete.

Colonel Westbrook and all of his subordinates are unanimous in their opinion that neither fatality was occasioned by inefficiency.

The Courier's investigation has disclosed two remedial steps which might be taken. One is the imminent arrival of a shipment of P-4OL's or P-51's to supplant the old P-40's, which have been used for advanced training by the pilots.

It appears that most of the old P-40's, brought from Tuskegee, had already seen plenty of service and should have been salvaged. This, it was pointed out, was impossible . . . because of the scarcity of planes at the time Tuskegee Base was first established. The Government was forced to press them into service. The planes, however, appear to have seen their best days . . . as is evidenced by the fact that the new allotment had been promised for sometime, but are still "on the way."

SUPERVISE "OFF-HOURS"

At the time of the fatalities, the Fighter Group numbered close to 100 flying cadets, yet the group had less than 20 of the old planes, we were reliably informed.

There have also been unconfirmed reports that fuel other than the 100 per cent high octane gasoline recommended for all flying craft, was used in some of the planes.

Our other suggestion has to do with closer supervision of the "off-hours" of the cadets. These men, it is agreed, are training in a branch of Army service which taxes them to the fullest. However, the gay "night life" of Detroit's better known amusement spots is not conducive to the split-second efficiency they must practice at all times.

Meanwhile Army officers are conducting a separate investigation of reported irregularities at the field, together with the shooting of Pvt. William McRae, chauffeur, by Col. William T. Colman. McRae still is improving in the Station hospital, but his condition is not yet such that he can be questioned.

Col. Franklin Babcock of the Inspector General's office in Washington and a staff of aides have been assigned to the task.

Mr. Shafer, before he dropped his probe, had linked the name of M/Sgt. Myron Collins, formerly stationed at the field. It is said that a white chauffeur, who formerly drove Colonel Colman and his wife, might be a key figure in the case.

It is now practically certain (as reported first in The Courier last week) that the shooting of McRae was a case of "mistaken identity."

The Selfridge Field scandal threatens to involve some "big names," but at present only Charles Burman and Hubert K. Marks, constables accused of having taken a bribe to fix jobs at the field, are the targets of U. S. Attorney John C. Lehr's probe of so-called bombproof "for the duration" jobs.

Julius Amberg, legal adviser to Under Secretary of War Patterson, held a press conference at the Book-Cadillac hotel in which he told representatives of the Negro press that relations between the races and between officers and soldiers were most amicable. We found his statement to be indisputably correct.

SKILLED NEGROES SUFFER DISCRIMINATION BY AIR CORPS, SAYS NAACP

JUL 23 1943

New York, N. Y.—Specific cases in which skilled Negroes are being denied opportunity for training and technical service in the Army Air Forces are cited by Roy Wilkins, assistant secretary in the most recent protest of the NAACP against racial discrimination in the armed services.

In one case, it is pointed out that four Negro enlisted men of the air corps, one of the top man and all ranking students in their class in.

photography, were rejected for advanced training leading to higher ratings and commissions in this field, while white classmates whom they had out-ranked were selected. The pretext for this discrimination was the charge by one of their officers that Yale university, where the advanced training is offered, "is not ready to accept Negroes."

Mr. Wilkins also cited the case of a Negro soldier, a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of a leading university, with advanced study in biology and biochemistry, who was first denied assignment to laboratory work in an army hospital, then especially trained as an air corps armourer and finally sent to an air field to work as a laborer.

Attacks on Negro Soldiers FDR Urged to Halt

PM New York, N. Y.

Five Killed in Year; Judge Hastie's Report Assails Justice Dept.

WASHINGTON, July 19. —Judge William H. Hastie, former civilian aide to Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, today urged President Roosevelt and other U. S. officials to halt "civilian violence" —against Negro soldiers.

In a report submitted to the National Lawyers' Guild, of which he is vice president, Judge Hastie charged that attacks on Negro soldiers were "continuing unabated" and are "the greatest single factor" undermining the morale of the Negro populace.

Reviewing a series of civilian and police assaults on Negro troops that took place during 1942, Judge Hastie warned that this year "both the seriousness of this form of lawlessness and the lack of any effective methods of control have become more apparent and increasingly grave in their implications."

Negroes Killed

The survey decried the failure of national officials to intervene and levelled its sharpest criticism against the Dept. of Justice. Pointing out that five Negro soldiers have been killed or wounded in civilian communities during the first three months of 1943, Hastie proposed:

¶ "Most obviously, the present limited power of the military authorities and the Dept. of Justice to restrain and punish such violence should be exercised with unremitting vigor and determination.

¶ "Congress has authority, not yet exercised, which should be exercised promptly, to bring all crimes of homicide or serious bodily harm involving members of the armed forces within the jurisdiction of the Federal courts."

'Miserable Failure'

The report declared, however, that "beyond laws and the enforcement of laws, the Federal authorities have failed miserably to build up any public sentiment against the mistreatment of the colored soldier, although there have been individual cases in which the Army commanders in the field have made real efforts to persuade the white community to show respect for the colored soldiers."

Contending that "the President, the Secretary of War and all the officials in Washington to whom the people would listen have remained silent on the subject of violence against the Negro soldier," Hastie said that the time had come for them to speak out. He expressed confidence that public appeals would be effective.

The report also urged the Army and Navy to initiate "a positive program of education" within the armed forces.

Among the case histories cited in the report:

¶ In El Paso, Texas, Private Willie Jullis, Negro, was shot and killed by a city policeman. The local authorities "went through the formalities of submitting the matter to a local Grand Jury and there it ended."

¶ Private Henry Williams, Negro, was shot and killed by a bus driver while riding through Mobile. In Mobile the drivers are authorized by law to cary firearms.

"The civil authorities did not even go to the trouble of a Grand Jury hearing in this case," Hastie observed.

In addition to discussing the cases of anti-Negro violence, the report cited "cumulative effect of every-day small insults."

Sacred Sidewalks

"We often do not hear," Judge Hastie said, "about the small towns in which the Negro soldier is forced to conform to local custom by stepping from the narrow sidewalk into the street whenever a white person passes.

"To address a Negro soldier as 'nigger' is such a commonplace in the average Southern community that little is said about it. But the mounting rage of the soldier is far from commonplace.

"He may not express his feelings when he must wait until all the white passengers are accommodated before he can get transportation. He may even hold his tongue when he is forced to get out of the bus in which he is seated in order to make room for white passengers. But it is of such stuff that bitterness and hatred are made."

JUL 19 1943

Judge Hastie's Resignation

Daily World Atlanta, Georgia

The resignation of William Hastie as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War and the reasons undelying that resignation will wound the racial pride and patriotism of American Negroes. Already frustrated in hopes by the blighting effects of discrimination in defense industries and civilian life, the War Department's lackadaisical policy, led on by the Navy's narrow attitude, serves further to curdle the morale of American Negroes.

In his formal charges Mr. Hastie goes into particulars: He deplores the government's indifference and its failure to do anything about the hostile attitude of white civilians towards Negro personnel at the Tuskegee Flying school the disarming of Negro Military Police, and the "wholesale segregation" of Negro and white officers at the Tuskegee base. He sees the organization of Negro "Aviation Squadrons" at Jefferson, Mo., as "nothing more than labor batallions." And he dislikes the all-around smell of "segregation in every governmentally controlled school for Negroes." The "conclusion," he says, "is inescapable that the air command does not propose to inform, much less counsel with, this office about its plans for Negroes."

These are grave charges against a government waging a better war upon the lofty principles of the Atlantic Charter and the Four Freedoms.

We are sorry that Mr. Hastie had to resign but his action will focus effective attention on demoralizing condition. The reasons given for his resignation would have influenced any other man of his stature and forthright convictions to have done likwise.

Nevertheless, we are comforted by the fact that Mr. Hastie did the best he could under the circumstances, and that the fate he suffered was no worse nor better than any other Negro would have suffered similarly placed. But of one thing we may all be certain, his courage and fortitude, smack of a new type of leadership in our group, which prefers no job at all to that of holding on to a position which not only stifles his own manhood principles, but likewise, betrays the confidence and trust of his race.

Facts and Nonsense

Amsterdam Star-News New York, N. Y.

AMERICAN RACE PREJUDICE marches on! Way over in Australia, half way 'round the world, the U. S. Army and the American Red Cross have opened a Jim Crow service club for U. S. Negro troops only. This was done in spite of the fact that there was no discrimination against or segregation of U. S. Negro troops in Australia until U. S. white soldiers and the Red Cross went over there and forced the American Jim Crow and discrimination systems down the throats of the Australians and the Negro soldiers.

Of course, the U. S. Army has done the same thing everywhere it has carried the American flag and the four freedoms. They have established the four freedoms, American Jim Crow brand, in England, Ireland, North Africa, the Hawaiian Islands, New Guinea (where serious trouble occurred between Negro soldiers and their white officers) and India.

When U. S. Negro troops first landed in Australia, they were treated like human beings by the white natives. They were freely invited to the Australians' homes to dinner, hospitably accepted in hotels, bars, dance halls and other public places. Australian girls gladly accepted them as escorts. All this changed, however, as soon as our white troops, aching to tote the four freedoms 'round the globe, landed in the land Down Under. White army officers completely segregated their Negro soldiers, denied them practically all recreational privileges away from their camps. White soldiers even cursed out Australian girls for going out on dates with "niggers." They told the Australians that Negroes were little, if any, better than beasts.

And so, after 13 months the U. S. Army and its stooge, the Red Cross, have made Jim Crow official in another foreign country. Dubbed the Doctor Carver Service Club, the Jim Crow outfit in Australia has all the trappings of a similar set-up in Mississippi. Overly solicitous for the comforts and happiness of the Negro soldiers, the Army and the Red Cross even went out and collected a bevy of half caste Australian beauties to act as hostesses for the boys. (Anything to keep them away from white women).

Meantime, we don't believe that the United States or any other country can possibly win this war as long as it out-Nazis the Nazis in treating with colored people. The Japanese beat the British in Burma, Singapore and Malay. They licked the Dutch in the rich Dutch East Indies. Australia is today in mortal fear of invasion. China can collapse and India is by no means secure.

These conditions in the Far East, where the Japs have established an empire larger than Britain's, can be blamed directly on the shameful treatment of colored people by white men. It is indeed a depressing feeling to know that instead of improving their relations with the colored people of the world in many instances citizens of the same country and in others allies the U. S. Government insists on making them worse by carrying the U. S. Jim Crow and discrimination systems all over the map.

The treatment of Negroes by our own government is one of the strongest arguments in favor of those who say the so-called democracies are full of stuff and nonsense.

Hastie Explains How U.S. Air Force Keeps Itself Lily-White

FEB 13 1943

Lists 5 Men Given Run-around, Says U.S. Losing Respect of Axis, Democracies Whom We try to Lead

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON

In a second statement showing how the U.S. air force is keeping itself lily-white, Dr. William H. Hastie, recently resigned civilian aide to the Secretary of War, this week lists five expert flyers who were turned down by the government because of their color.

FEB 13 1943

The flyers that were refused include:

James L. H. Peck, a fighter pilot in the Spanish civil war, and one of America's best known authors in military and civilian aviation;

Fred H. Hutcherson, working for Canada flying American-made planes to England;

Gilbert Cargill, who was ordered to Maxwell Field, reported for work and was flatly turned down at the front office;

FEB 13 1943

Charles Ashe, who suffered the same fate as befell Mr. Cargill at Maxwell Field;

Robert Terry, who had been rejected as an army pilot months before.

Peck Still a Young Man

Mr. Peck, although a veteran in the field of aviation, is a man in his early thirties. Mr. Hastie says of him:

"Had he been white, the only question would have been whether the army or the navy could have grabbed him first. But, being colored, he doesn't have to worry about the navy at all. And the army has been more than deliberate in consideration his application."

FEB 13 1943

Speaking of Mr. Hutcherson, Mr. Hastie avers:

"He is young in years but old in flying experience. When I met him last spring he was working in Canada, flying American-made planes to England. He had just delivered his sixth bomber to England in command of a white crew and returned to Canada.

"He later came to Washington and spent several days going from office to office, trying to get action. He felt that he was getting nowhere, so he went back to Canada.

FEB 13 1943

He Can Remember 369th

"If it is any consolation to him, he can remember that in the last war there was a whole colored regiment which the American Army did not want. But the 369th went on and did its fighting with the French, who were glad to have it. And it came back with battle honors such as few regiments of any army could match."

Continuing, Mr. Hastie said:

"One day last December a colored civilian pilot received the following telegram from the army air forces:

" 'You are authorized to report to Maxwell Field or service pilot training. Stop. You must have clear release from present employment.'

"There was nothing unusual about this message. The air forces are recruiting large numbers of civilian pilots, many of them over age for combat flying or lacking the physical perfection required of the combat pilot.

"Taken for a Ride"

"These men become army flyers and perform the many essential flying missions, other than combat, which the army requires. But two of the men who received such directions to report for training were colored. They were Cargill and Ashe who reported to Maxwell Field, but never got any farther than the front office.

FEB 13 1943

"They were told bluntly that no provision was made for training colored men. It is still not clear what special provision is necessary. They did not even get a refund of their train fare. They just got a ride.

"Probably Cargill and Ashe did not know that Terry had been rejected as an army service pilot months before.

"Certainly, they did not know that the Air Command is handicapped by that type of mentality which cannot picture a colored pilot flying a plane into a strange field, sitting down to dinner with other flyers, taking temporary quarters with them, then flying off on another mission.

Segregation Seen as Hitch

"Of course, it just isn't possible to segregate a man who is working as a service pilot. So, we have no black service pilots.

"Colored specialists of various kinds have received similar treatment. The few colored air units do not require many specialists. And the colored specialist, in military contemplation, can exercise his skill only for other colored persons.

FEB 13 1943

"One colored applicant is told in November, 1942, that "at the present time there are no further vacancies available for the training of colored aviation cadets for service as ground officers as the quota for the coming year has been filled.

"To another applicant, the air command explains in greater detail:

FEB 13 1943

> Reference is made to your letter of October 20, 1942, requesting information relative to training facilities, with the army air forces for colored meteorologists.
>
> There are at present no colored air force weather groups, nor are any contemplated in the near future. However, there is now one colored meteorologist attached to a colored air force fighter group, and six others in training who will be attached to colored fighter groups upon graduation.
>
> It is believed by the army air forces that the above mentioned seven colored meteorologists will take care of their needs for quite some time.

FEB 13 1943

FEB 13 1943

This Doesn't Mean You

"Yet, on January 8, 1943, the War Department published the following announcement:

> To fill the urgent need for more than 1000 meteorologists in the air forces, men between the ages of 18 and 30, inclusive qualified for meteorological training, will be certified for voluntary induction into the army as aviation cadets in meteorology.

FEB 13 1943

"This may not make sense, but it is understandable. Weather may be black, or it may be fair, but the skin of the man who makes the weather calcuation has to match the skin of the flier who uses the information.

"At a press conference on November 19, 1942, the Secretary of War explained that relatively less colored men would be in the air forces than in some other branches of the army because of the particular skills required in aviation.

" 'There are some branches,' he said, 'which require specialists and for which the number of men has to be determined by the number and capacity of the recruits who are available for it.'

FEB 13 1943

"Unquestionably the secretary spoke in good faith. But on the record the air command does not want all the colored specialists who are available.

FEB 13 1943

"Until we abandon this stupid notion that colored specialists can work only for and with other colored persons, James Peck and Fred Hutcherson, and potential colored service pilots and meteorologists will continue to be wasted.

FEB 13 1943

"And, so long as we tolerate such vicious nonsense, we can be respected neither by the forces of fascism which we condemn nor by the forces of democracy which we assume to lead."

PROBE OF RACIAL CLASHES IS URGED

CHICAGO, June 20—(AP)—A mass meeting of Chicago Negroes urged Sunday that President Roosevelt issue an executive order under his emergency war powers outlawing what they termed "discrimination, segregation, humiliation and unlawful killing of Negro soldiers and civilians" in race clashes.

The meeting, held under auspices of the National Negro Council, asserted in a resolution that race conflicts in some Southern Army camps were causing a "dangerous effect on the morale of the American people and irreparable undermining of the total and unified war effort."

To investigate and report on these race conflicts, the meeting urged that President Roosevelt appoint several representatives, including Bishop David Henry Sims, First Episcopal District of the A M. E. Church, Philadelphia, and Dr D. V. Jemison, president of the National Baptist Convention, Selma, Ala.

The National Negro Council claims to represent some 5,000,000 Negroes in the United States and includes representatives of the National Baptist Convention, the African M. E. Bishop's Council and the National Negro Insurance Association.

Deny Discrimination In Seattle Snow Removal

MAR 20 1943

WASHINGTON. — Denying that there was discrimination in the recent use of Negro troops for snow removal in Seattle, Wash., Major General J. A. Ulio, adjutant general of the War Department, told the NAACP this week that the commanding general of the Northwest section had utilized for this detail the most available troops "who happened to be colored."

"The storm in Seattle was of such an extent as to seriously interfere with all activities pertaining to the operation of military installation and defense as well as its civilian activities . . . the commanding general of the 39th Army Aircraft Artillery Brigade utilized white troops and their equipment to assist in restoring the region of

Bremerton Navy Yard and Seattle to normalcy while the commanding general of the Seattle port of embarkation utilized all troops available to him regardless of color in operation of the port and in clearing the snow and ice from that vicinity to permit the proper operation of the port.

MAR 20 1943

"The action taken by military authorities in the Seattle area was necessary to prevent a complete cessation of work in a large number of defense activities particularly aircraft manufacturing plants and shipbuilding yards.

"It does not appear," Ulio concluded, "that there was any discrimination against Negro troops in this case."

MAR 20 1943

For the cleaning of snow in the streets of downtown Seattle Negro troops were brought from Fort Lewis, 60 miles away. No white soldiers were detailed for this work.

MAR 27 1943

ROCKVILLE CENTER, N. Y.—Telegrams were sent this week by Mayor Edgar T. Beamish to President Roosevelt, War Manower Commission McNutt and Governor Dewey, requesting an investigation into charges that Negroes have been refused entrance to Nassau County defense schools. The Beamish wires read:

"I have received a petition signed by 200 Negro residents of Rockville Center who declared they are qualified but have been refused entrance to Nassau county defense schools to learn defense work. The Negroes also claim that some of them have attended the school and passed their tests, but have been refused employment in Nassau County defense factories."

Negro M Ps Pulled Off Duty In Dallas

MAY 8 1943

Dallas, Texas. — Negro MP's were pulled from the Hall and Thomas street area and from Dallas entirely this week after patrolling the area with a commendable record for more than two months.

Army officials commented upon the clean record of the short-lived patrol duty carried out by the soldiers who successfully kept order without any major disturbances, in contrast with the hectic situation of flare-ups before their placement.

The reason for the removal of the Negro MP's army officials contend is because presently there are very few Negro soldiers at Hensley Field and they cannot be spared from detail. Further it is quite unlikely that a great number will be stationed there again. In the event that more are stationed here Negro MP's will resume their duty, officials stated.

Another primary reason for the pull is that there are not many Negro soldiers in this area now, according to officials.

Saturday night white MP's detailed to patrol the Hall and Thomas area were met with many rebuffs as many soldiers sought to resist them and fights with them were evident and frequent.

Inducted in Aviation Cadet Unit 'By Mistake'

Kansas City Call Kansas City, Mo.

Discharged When Race Is Discovered

Lincoln U. Instructor and Two Others

FEB 26 1943

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo.—(ANP) — Faces are still red in the headquarters of the 7th Service command in Omaha after three Negroes, one of them a Lincoln university professor, were inducted as privates along with 2,000 whites, into an aviation cadet unit at Jefferson Barracks, Mo. The mistake was rectified only when the three were given speedy honorable discharges and placed in the air force enlisted reserves.

The Lincolnite who had a taste of democracy in the army is Stewart B. Fulbright, an alumnus and a French instructor here until Jan. 31, when he entered Flight "B" of the 1,166th Technical School squadron at Jefferson Barracks. He was gone 10 days before returning to the university to resume his teaching duties.

3 In By Error

FEB 26 1943

Telling of his experiences last week, Mr. Fulbright said: "I thought it strange that I was the only Negro in a group of over 2,000 aviation cadets and I later found out that there were three of us there by mistake."

The others to whom he referred were Wendell R. Smith, of Des Moines, and Charles L. Smith, of St. Louis.

FEB 26 1943

Unfamiliar surroundings didn't phase Pvt. Fulbright. He met no difficulty in going through the processing period along with the white men with whom he had been placed.

FEB 26 1943

"I can sincerely say that during this processing (mental, physical and orientation tests, interviews and drilling), no discrimination was shown toward me," he said. His white companions accepted him in their conversation and in horseplay and the flight sergeant was especially kind, he asserted.

Pvt. Fulbright ate in a Negro mess hall at his own request, not on orders, but one of his Negro confrers who ate in the general mess was alleged to have been told by a kitchen police officer that "We don't allow N...... to eat in here."

FEB 26 1943

All Three Discharged

The day following that incident, according to Pvt. Fulbright, Pvt. Wendell Smith was transferred from Squadron 1,167, which is an aviation cadet unit, to Squadron 917, a Negro unit of enlisted men. Unlike the Lincolnite, he had not been permitted to go through the processing, but on Feb. 6, he, too, was notified that he would be discharged.

FEB 26 1943

The third Negro soldier, Pvt. Charles Smith, was on a 10-day convalescent furlough at that time, observed Pvt. Fulbright, who also saw strange things within the confines of an army post. However, the day this Pvt. Smith reported for duty he was given an honorable discharge also.

When informed on February 8 that he was to be discharged, Pvt. Fulbright didn't know what to think. The reason given him was that "the Omaha office (headquarters of the Seventh Area command), made a mistake." He was given the honorable discharge and permitted to keep his uniform, but he's still subject to the air reserves, according to a notation typed on his discharge. It took two more days to complete the army routine of issuing the discharge papers.

FEB 26 1943

With more than enough money to pay his own fare back to Jefferson City without waiting for the army's five-cent-a-mile allowance from the post to his home, Pvt. Fulbright came here on February 10.

FEB 26 1943

On the train he began to wonder. He knew he had passed the mental test with a score of 108. He knew he had had no trouble with the white men in the company to which he was assigned. But he's been discharged!

Senate To Probe Race Discrimination In Army

The Informer

April 17,

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — The senate committee on military affairs will hold preliminary hearings into the charges of racial discrimination in the armed forces preparatory to the appointment of a five-man subcommittee to understand a full-dress investigation into the matter.

Informer

Result of Resolution

This is the procedure which will be followed as a result of a resolution introduced in the senate last Thursday by Sen. Sheridan V. Downey (D.) of California calling upon that committee to conduct a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the status of the Negro and other minority groups in the armed services as well as the WAACS, WAVES, SPARS, and marines, women's auxiliaries.

Houston, Tex.

Introducing his resolution Sen. Downey declared on the floor that complaints of violations of the nondiscrimination provisions of the Selective Training and Service act of 1940 had been made by responsible persons, notably William H. Hastie, the civilian aide to Secy. of War Henry L. Stimson who resigned in protest, which complaints have created "anxious concern among large segments of our people."

The senator made it clear in his remarks that he is not now attempting to judge the veracity of the charges but rather to point out the intent of the President and the legislation establish selective service that the objective be attained without racial discrimination. He pointed out that Negroes are greatly restricted in the armed forces, particularly in the air corps.

April 17, 1943

"By the end of this year there will be more than one million Negro Americans serving their country in our armed forces," he told the senate. "They will represent more than 10 per cent of all Americans under arms. Their heroism, their loyalty is unquestioned. The records of such Negro heroes as Dorie Miller at Pearl Harbor offer living testimony of the will of the Negro people to defend the heritage of freedom and democracy which is the birthright of all Americans.

April 17, 1943

Essential

"It becomes vital to the successful prosecution of American's war of survival that the morale of the Negro Americans in our armed forces and of the 12,000,000 more who are working on the home front, be not impaired by failure of any government agency to live up to the letter and spirit of existing laws against discrimination. It is essential that there be full and unhindered use of all America's manpower in the conduct of the war."

Sen. Robert Reynolds (D.) of North Carolina is chairman of the military affairs committee. It is customary that when a committee is to be appointed in accordance with a resolution, the sponsor is generally consulted on its membership. Sen. Downey was expecting to leave for the West Coast where he was scheduled to delve into manpower problems in California. It is therefore unlikely that the sub-committee will be appointed before his return about May 8.

The specifications of the resolution call for the committee to ascertain the extent to which there has been compliance with the racial discrimination clause of the Selective Service and Training act of 1940, the nature and extent of any practice in the organization and placement of personnel which acted to exclude Negroes from particular branches of the armed forces either on land, at sea or in the air; the extent to which advancement of Negroes in the ranks of commissioned officers has been limited: the extent to which the armed services are failing to utilize the full professional and technical skills of Negroes; and the relation of the system of segregated units to the effective utilization and appropriate placement of persons on the basis of individual competency and merit.

The resolution empowers this special sub-committee to carry on hearings, aided by a subpeona power, throughout the 78th Congress whether it be in session or recessed or adjourned.

Article 'Debunks' Stimson Release

FEB 6 1943

By SIDNEY WALKER
Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4—Officials of the War Department who recognize that its Negro policy is indefensible and patently unfair are apparently making some efforts to meet criticism which has developed since the first of the year and reached its climax with the resignation of Judge William H. Hastie.

FEB 6 - 1943

The first step was to transfer Col. Frederick "Jim Crow" von Kimble from the Army Air Force school at Tuskegee.

The second step, not fully confirmed, was to lay aside plans for setting up a jim crow officer training school for Negroes in the Air Force at Jefferson Barracks, Mo.

The third step took the form of a somewhat amusing release given to the press by Secretary Stimson at his conference last Thursday. This press release reminded reporters of the song Todd Duncan has made famous, "I Got Plenty of Nuttin' an' Nuttin's Plenty for Me."

FEB 6 - 1943

In obvious answer to criticisms of the Air Force, the release began with information to the effect that the program for training Negro combat aviators is to be expanded and that a Group is to be formed, composed of one squadron now being trained and two new ones in the process or organization. This group, the statement read, is to be provided with all the supporting services, not only those of the Air Corps, but of other arms and services such as Signal Corps and Quartermaster Corps. The release added:

FEB 6 - 1943

"Negroes are being trained throughout virtually the entire Technical Training Command of the Air Forces, as well as at the Air Forces Officers' Training school at Miami.

The rest of the press release reminded how widespread is the use of the Negro soldier in the army at home and in the expeditionary forces and of the large number of colored administrative employees in the War department, 9,569 out of a total of 47,644.

This press release was amusing because it contained absolutely nothing new and was so obviously planned to create an impression. Reporters read it, laughed, then felt sick at the stomach.

REVEALS HOW HE

HAD BEEN IGNORED

FEB 6 - 1943

By WILLIAM H. HASTIE
(Recently Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4—Reactionary policies and discriminatory practices of the Army Air Forces in matters affecting Negroes were the immediate cause of my resignation as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War.

FEB 6 1943

The Army Air Forces are growing in importance and independence. In the post war period they may become the greatest single component of the armed services. Biased policies and harmful practices established in this branch of the Army can all too easily infect other branches as well. The situation had become critical. Yet, the whole course of my dealings with the Army Air Forces convinced me that further expression of my views in the form of recommendations within the Department would be futile. I, therefore, took the only course which can, I believe, bring results. Public opinion is still the strongest force in American life.

FEB 6 19

To the Negro soldier and those who influence his thinking, I say with all the force and sincerity at my command that the man in uniform must grit his teeth, square his shoulders and do his best as a soldier, confident that there are millions of Americans outside of the armed services, and more persons than he knows in high places within the military establishment, who will never cease fighting to remove every racial barrier and every humiliating practice which now confront him. But only by being at all times a first class soldier can the man in uniform help in this battle which shall be fought and won.

When I took office, the Secretary of War directed that all questions of policy and important proposals relating to Negroes should be referred to my office for comment or approval before final action. In December, 1940, the Air Forces referred to me a plan for a segregated training center for Negro pursuit piolts at Tuskegee. I expressed my entire disagreement with the plan, giving my reasons in detail. My views were disregarded. Since then, the Air Command has never on its own initiative submitted any plan or project to me for comment or recommendation. What information I obtained, I had to seek out. Where I made proposals for recommendations, I volunteered them.

SEGREGATED SCHOOL BROUGHT CLIMAX

This situation reached its climax in late December, 1942, when I learned through Army press releases sent out from St. Louis and from the War Department in Washington that the Air Command was about to establish a segregated officer candidate school at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, to train Negro officers for ground duty with the Army Air Forces. Here was a proposal for a radical departure from present Army practice, since the officer candidate training program is the one large field where the Army is eliminating racial segregation. Moreover, I had actually written to the Air Command several weeks earlier in an attempt to find out what was brewing at Jefferson Barracks. The Air Command replied as late as December 17, 1942, giving not even the slightest hint of any plan for a segregated officer candidate school. It is inconceivable to me that consideration of such a project had not then advanced far enough for my office to have been consulted, even if I had not made specific inquiry. The conclusion is inescapable that the Air Command does not propose to inform, much less counsel with, this office about its plans for Negroes.

But the reactionary policies and discriminatory practices of the Air Forces are much more serious than the matter of ignoring my office. It should be understood that from the beginning the Air Command did not want Negro personnel. Resistance bred of that attitude has been met ever since. Moreover, even now the Air Command views the use of the Negro as an "experiment" designed to determine whether he can do this or that in the field of aviation. This attitude is the result of wholly unscinetific notions that race somehow controls a man's capacity and aptitudes. The tragedy is that by not wanting the Negro in the first place and by doubting his capacity, the Air Command has committed itself psychologically to courses of action which themselves become major obstacles to the success of Negroes in the Air Forces.

AVIATION SQUADRONS ONLY LABOR UNITS

The Negro program of the Air Forces began some two years ago with the organization of several so-called "Aviation Squadrons (Separate)". These units now greatly increased in number, were organized to serve no specific military need. They have never had a defined function. Except as individual commanders on their own initiative have found some military function for particular small groups of men, the characteristic assignment of the "Aviation Squadron (Separate)" has been the performance of odd jobs of common labor which arise from time to time at air fields. There are no equivalent white organizations. "Aviation Squadrons (Separate)" would never have come into existence except for the necessity of making some provision for Negro enlisted men in the Air Forces. Reluctant to use Negroes at all, the Air Command started off on the wrong foot by organizing some Negro labor units, while every effort was being made to recruit white volunteers with mechanical ability for skilled service.

Somewhat later, in order to provide enlisted technicians for the new air base at Tuskegee, a few Negro soldiers were accepted for technical training at Chanute Field where a large school is maintained. The men were well received and did excellent work. I urged the importance of continuing such training of Negroes in this existing unsegregated school. But the program stopped with the first group. The Air Forces then made efforts to set up segregated technical training at Tuskegee or elsewhere. Difficulties were encountered. Meanwhile, successive classes of Negro pilots were being trained, but no technical schooling of supporting ground crew members was in progress. Thus, even the segregated program got badly out of balance in the effort to effect its extension. The prospect is that in 1943, even with a tardy resumption of technical ground training, Negro pilots will be ready before and faster than adequate numbers of trained ground crews are available.

SERVICE PILOTS REJECTED

The Air Forces also are rejecting Negro applicants who wish to become weather officers in other highly specialized technical fields. A few such men were trained for Tuskegee. But for a period of more than six months, all qualified Negro candidates have had their completed applications returned to them with the information that the Air Forces need no more Negro weather officers. The Air Forces, however, do need large numbers of additional weather officers so badly that white volunteers are being solicited and accepted, despite a general policy against voluntary enlistments in the Army. Yet, it is unthinkable to those in authority that a Negro officer can fill such a position except at Tuskegee. The same situation exists in armament and engineering, both ground specialties for which the Air Forces have been accepting cadets generally, but refusing Negroes.

To date, all Negro applicants, a number of them well and fully qualified, for appointment as Army service pilots have been prejudiced. Two applicants were actually instructed to report for training. They did so but were sent home as soon as it was discovered that they were Negroes. I am advised that this matter is receiving further study. The simple fact is that the Air Command does not want Negro pilots flying in and out of various fields, eating, sleeping and mingling with other personnel, as a service pilot must do in carrying out his various missions.

AVIATION FUTURE IN DANGER

Negro medical officers in the Air Forces are getting only part of the special training in aviation medicine which is available. They are not admitted to the principal school of aviation medicine at Randolph Field. Even the branch school program in which it is represented that Negro officers share without discrimination is in fact discriminatory. Many white officers enrolled at branch schools of aviation medicine have the opportunity of full time resident study. The Negro officer is permitted to commute periodically from his home station at Tuskegee for work at the Maxwell Field branch school. Such grudging partial tender of makeshift schemes may be expected to continue unless a genuine change of racial attitude and policy occurs in the Air Command.

While Negro trainees and cadets at the Tuskegee Air Base have done well from a strictly technical point of view, they have suffered such demoralizing discrimination and segregation that, in my judgment, the entire future of the Negro in combat aviation is in danger. Men cannot be humiliated over a long period of time without a loss of combat efficiency.

Specifically, Negro and white officers serving at Tuskegee in the common enterprise of training Negroes for air combat have separate messes. They are not permitted to have quarters in the same building. Separate toilet facilities have been provided. If the group of white officers at Tuskegee insist upon this and I have no evidence that they do—they are psychologically unsuited to train Negroes for combat. If they do not so insist, the racial attitude of the local commander or of higher authority is all the more apparent.

POLICE DISARMS SOLDIER-GUARD

Despite original design to advance Negro officers and to place them in posts of administrative responsibility at Tuskegee as rapidly as they should qualify, that design is not being carried out in the post administration, except in the station hospital.

Early in the history of the Tuskegee project, a Negro soldier guarding a warehouse was disarmed and arrested by civilian authorities because he had challenged a white civilian. From then on friction continued. A new commander was appointed. He disarmed Negro military policemen, assigned to patrol duty in the town of Tuskegee. A recent member of the Alabama state police force was assigned to Tuskegee as an Army officer with duties related to his civilian experience. The Negro soldier was embittered, but the prejudiced community was somewhat mollified.

Fundamentally, it seems to me the Air Command has either failed to comprehend or failed to care that its policies and practices are tending to tear down rather than build up the pride, dignity and self respect which Negro soldiers, like all other soldiers must possess if they are to achieve maximum combat efficiency. Military men agree that a soldier should be made to feel that he is the best man, in the best unit in the best Army in the world. When the Air Command shall direct its policies and practices so as to help rather than hinder the development of such spirit among its Negro soldiers, it will be on the right road.

Army Air Force Policy Criticized In Courier Poll

FEB 6 1943

Colored American citizens showed deep resentment this week about humiliations which have been heaped upon them by the United States government in refusing to allow race youths the opportunity which others are receiving in the Army Air Force.

Typical comments voiced in the current Pittsburgh Courier Bureau of Public Sentiment Poll were:

"We hang our heads in shame that our own government could deny us the opportunity to fight for America . . . Is America really going to jeopardize chances of victory in order to continue the luxury of race prejudice? . . . The government seems to be hesitant to make the decisions which are necessary to all citizens in the war program."

9 OUT OF 10 SAID "NO"

This week's question, presented to a country-wide cross section of Negro citizens, was:

"DO YOU BELIEVE THE UNITED STATES ARMY AIR FORCE HAS BEEN FAIR TO NEGROES IN THE TRAINING OF FLYERS?"

91.9% said "NO."
5.2% said "YES."
2.8% were uncertain.

Recent revelations concerning the treatment of youths at the Tuskegee Air base were most amazing to the citizens. Many stated that it conclusively demonstrated the failure of a jim-crow setup in a democratic country. The problems existing at Tuskegee, they said, could certainly be no worse than those which would be encountered if all men were integrated into the Air Force without regard to race.

The greatest resentment expressed by the citizens was: "Since the men at least have demonstrated that they can fly in battle, when are they going to see some action?"

Conclusive demonstration was evident that men and women are anxious to do their part in the total war effort which our country is engaged. They want to "fight for America."

Race Discrimination Denied at Lincoln Base

Lincoln, Nebr., Oct. 23 (AP).—S. C. Waugh, president of the Lincoln Chamber of Commerce, said today he has written Secretary of War Stimson on behalf of the chamber that "we have at all times been impressed with the complete fairness accorded every soldier" at the Lincoln Air Base and that "at no time has any discrimination whatsoever been brought to our attention."

Charges of discrimination have been made by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

WHO'S NEXT AFTER HASTIE

JAN 30 1943

Now that Judge Hastie is resigning as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, who will take his place?

We predict that the Administration will not easily find a Negro of Judge Hastie's calibre to take this post because most Negroes of intelligence, character and group loyalty know why he left the job, agree with his reasons for leaving and could not bring themselves to feel comfortable in the place he has vacated.

Judge Hastie was chosen for the post because of his ability, his experience, his reputation as an opponent of color discrimination and segregation, and because of his NAACP connection.

JAN 30 1943

He ran up against the stonewall determination of the Army to handle the Negro "problem" in the plantation and levee camp manner, and after laboring with the Augean stables of racial proscription for a season he resigned when he saw he was making no headway.

Will his successor be any more successful?

What Negro can do a better job in this post than Judge Hastie, and what Negro is willing to try?

Indeed, in view of what has happened in the Army since 1940, it is questionable whether anything worthwhile can be accomplished as civilian aide of fundamental advantage to Negroes.

JAN 30 1943

We may be entirely wrong and we hope we are, but it is difficult to see how a Negro in this position with all his superiors maintaining or inaugurating racial segregation can accomplish anything of value.

Hastie Says Tuskegee Air Field Unnecessary

MAR 4 - 1943

47a

NOTE—In the following statement, William H. Hastie, who recently resigned as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, in protest against shortcomings of the military aviation program as it affects Negroes, discusses some additional aspects of racial discrimination and segregation in the Army Air Forces.

By WILLIAM H. HASTIE

THERE IS NOT now and never has been any good reason for the segregated training of Negro flyers at Tuskegee. There are two stages in the training of a soldier to be an Army flyer. The first stage teaches the new cadet how to fly, using small light aircraft adapted to the training of a beginner. This part of the program is carried out by private operators who contract with the Army to give preliminary flying instruction to aviation cadets. The private contractor furnishes the field and the instructors, while the Army selects and assigns the cadets, prescribes the course of instruction and supervises training. There are a great many such contract schools scattered in various sections of the country.

MAR 4 - 1943

The cadet who successfully completes the elementary flying course at such a school is next assigned to an Army field for further basic and advanced training. From this point on, the Army takes complete charge of the training program.

MAR 4 - 1943

SEGREGATION NECESSARY

There was no need to segregate Negro cadets in either stage of training. Newly appointed Negro cadets could have been assigned to beginning classes at any one of the many contract schools just as white cadets are assigned. In fact one of two Negro cadets were so assigned by mistake. But when they arrived for training, arrangements were quickly made to reassign them to Tuskegee. Similarly in the more advanced training, Negroes who had completed the primary course could have been sent to the various Army flying training centers. But the Air Command was determined to separate Negro and white cadets at every stage of training.

Tuskegee Institute was awarded a contract to provide Army primary training for Negro Army aviation cadets. Under this contract the Army enlisted and appointed a small group of Negro cadets every few weeks and sent them to the Tuskegee contract school where Negro instructors employed by Tuskegee Institute gave elementary flying training under Army supervision. Incidently, this caused some confusion because Tuskegee Institute also has a civilian pilot course which is not connected with the Army. Some young men enrolled in this civilian course under the misapprehension that by doing so they were getting into Army aviation.

CONFUSION AT PRESENT

MAR 4 1943

For the more advanced training of Negro cadets, the Army invested millions of dollars in the construction of a new Army Air Base for Negroes located a few miles from the town of Tuskegee. Tuskegee Institute has no connection with this Army field or with the advanced training conducted there. However, as to this also there has been some confusion and misunderstanding in the public mind.

But why in the name of common sense should all of this elaborate special machinery be set up to train Negro flyers It was expensive. It caused a delay of six months or more in the beginning of flying training for Negroes. It was not flexible, since it was adapted only to the training of Pursuit Pilots. Only by setting up Pursuit Polits. Only by setting additional Negro training centers for bombardment and observation, or by abandoning segregated training could the program be broadened.

MAR 4 1943

The idea of a separate training base for Negro pilots is indefensible, if Negroes are actually to be an integral part of our combat Air Forces. It is not possible to train flyers in one small area as foot soldiers can be trained. Even in training men must fly from field to field. After a flyer is commissioned, his flying in this country will necessarily take him in and out of a large number of flying fields.

NOT PRACTICAL

If he goes into combat abroad one thing is certain. He will not just fly out of a Jim-Crow base with his own Negro unit and fly back again. Even infantrymen traveling on their own two feet get scattered in combat. How much more are aviators bound to get into unexpected places and undergo regrouping from time to time during the course of a campaign. It is simply impossible to maintain racial segregation of pilots in a combat area. The Air Command must know this.

Since such contacts and mingling are unavoidable, the only sensible thing to do is to prepare men for them by providing interracial associations in training such as they are bound to have later on. If we want white and colored flyers in combat to get along well with each other, the best plan is to build mutual understanding and self-respect by training them together from the time they begin learning to fly. The worst plan is to keep them apart until they are forced together under the stress of circumstances in combat. Prejudice is based on ignorance. Let men get acquainted with each other in training and there is no great problem of their harmony later on.

MAR 4 - 1943

All of this seemed simple and obvious to me. The Air Command, however, cannot see it. The Air Command is not even influenced by the fact that the Ground Forces have been training white and colored officer candidates together with excellent results ever since the beginning of the present Army expansion.

MAR 4 - 1943

There are none so blind as those who do not want to see. And the Air Command just does not want to see the advantages of training white and colored flyers together. I believe this blindness will continue until public criticism and condemnation of the segregated training policy becomes so strong that it can no longer be ignored.

"Did Not Withdraw From Levy Case," Says NAACP

The NAACP refuted this week the Associated Negro Press release which stated that the NAACP had withdrawn from the case of Sergeant Alton Levy.

"This is incorrect in two respects," the NAACP wire to all weeklies read. "The NAACP has never formally entered the case and could not therefore have withdrawn. In fact the NAACP still has the case of Sgt. Levy under investigation."

Levy, a white soldier, court martialed and serving four months, said in letters to friends that he was being penalized because he protested the treatment of Negro soldiers at a camp near Lincoln, Nebraska.

SECOND THOUGHTS

JAN 30 1943

By S. I. HAYAKAWA

Hungry Soldiers

THIS IS a story worth retelling. It is told by one of four Negro soldiers on a train, being transferred from a southern to a northern camp. There were five white soldiers on the train also, one of them a sergeant.

S. I. Hayakawa

All were pretty hungry, and when the train stopped in a town in southern Indiana, the white soldiers managed to run out and get a sandwich. The Negro soldiers also went out, but nobody would serve them.

Back in the train, they got into conversation with the white soldiers and told them what had happened. The white soldiers were angry that their comrades-in-arms had been slighted. The sergeant was especially angry. As they got to the next town, the sergeant took command. "We're here 20 minutes," he said. "Now, we'll all go together. Do just as I say."

JAN 30 1943

The rest of the story I shall repeat in the Negro soldier's own words. "This town was larger than the other and there was a good sized restaurant on the corner. The sergeant looked in the windows a minute, then he said: 'We'll go in and sit at two tables. Come on.' We went in and sat down. Everything was pretty quiet because everybody was staring at us. The man came over.

"The sergeant said, 'We're on the train and only have a few minutes. Can you hurry our orders?' The man asked, looking at us, 'You all together?' The sergeant said, 'Yes!' The man said, 'Those colored boys can't eat in here.' The sergeant said, 'We're all soldiers and we're all hungry.' The man said, 'I can't help that. I'll serve you white soldiers, but I won't serve those ——.' The sergeant got up. He said, 'Come on, boys!' The man said, 'I'm sorry, but ——.' The sergeant said, 'Go to hell!' Nobody else said anything.

The Second Restaurant

"WE STOOD on the sidewalk for a while. Then the sergeant pointed to another place down the street. He said, 'See that place. We're going in there and get something to eat. Let's go!' We all fell in behind him. The sergeant walked straight to the counter and as many of us as could took stools. There weren't many people in the place. Nobody moved to serve us."

"The sergeant called, 'Service, please! We're in a hurry!' They were looking at us. The man said, 'You niggers get back. We can't serve you here!' The sergeant got up. I never saw such a white face. He took some bills out of his pocket and laid them on the counter. We stood up too. Then he said, 'Okey, boys, grab!'

JAN 30 1943

"W edid — sandwiches — pies — doughnuts — cakes — anything in sight. The man yelled and the woman screamed. But we were out of there in two shakes and down the street. The man ran out after us yelling for the police. But, by the time a crowd had collected at the station and the police were coming up, the train was beginning to move. The brakeman came running back. He asked, 'What's going on here?' Pete said, 'Haven't you heard — there's a war going on!' One of the white soldiers hollered, 'Sure — and we're fighting it!'

"Everybody laughed at that. The sergeant didn't say anything. He looked pretty upset. The next morning we got into Chicago where we changed trains. I've often thought about that young sergeant . . . I hope he's been promoted."

Common Sense

JAN 30 1943

THIS STORY is part of an article written by a Negro soldier who signs himself "Staff Sergeant John Henry." It appears in the January issue of what I think is the best liberal magazine in the United States, "Common Sense," edited by two fearless, handsome, and brilliant young men from Yale, Alfred Bingham and Selden Rodman.

Bingham and Rodman are true believers in democracy, and so are all the excellent authors whom they engage to write for "Common Sense."

Zealots Still Plotting

It doesn't seem possible to head off those racial equality groups who are determined to use the war as a means of promoting their sinister ends.

Even in McNutt's manpower movement the hands of these zealots is plainly discernible in provision No. 3, wherein this language is used:

"Place workers on the basis of their qualifications and without discrimination as to race, color, creed, sex, national origin or, except as required by law, citizenship."

That language obviously is borrowed from the executive proclamation under which the unmourned part white and part black "fair practice" board was named some months ago, and the zealots undoubtedly have in mind what they hoped to accomplish at that time, which is to break down Southern segregation laws.

The intervention of such stalwart advocates of white supremacy as former Governor Dixon of Alabama and former Governor Talmadge, of Georgia, caused this "black and tan" fair practice board to fold up before the designs could be carried into execution but what is happening now proves that the zealots were not discouraged by this rebuff. They still are determined and it is going to take the most determined opposition on the part of the Southern people to keep them from accomplishing their designs.

If under the provision quoted above the manpower distributors decide to send colored teachers into white schools, or colored stenographers or bookkeepers into offices where white persons are employed exclusively at this time, what is to be done about it?

Southern representatives should look into this latest move of the race-mad zealots to put over their plot in the name of patriotism.

SABOTAGE

By William I. Cummings

the Plant Protection Head, who phoned the Fire Chief and told the latter to put the Negro applicant to work. After three hours of fingerprinting, photographing, other general preliminaries, we see kindly, middle-aged Deputy Chief Merrill talking to Walker in his office.

The Deputy Chief chats pleasantly with Walker giving the new employe his instructions. There is the buzz of the phone. Fire Chief Davis' office calling the office of Deputy Chief Merrill. Listening at the phone for a few seconds, the Deputy Chief's face suddenly became contorted into strange facial expressions. Walker becomes suspicious. His heart beats faster.

WALKER SUSPICIOUS

The Deputy Chief hangs up. "Excuse me, Mr. Walker," he sighs heavily as he walks reluctantly into the adjacent room from which his superior had called.

"I'm right," Walker concludes. They're discussing me.

Walker remains motionless, the blank look on his face belying his thorough instinctive understanding of the situation.

"Mistake? he asks. "Why I have all my credentials. I'm ready for work. How can there be a mistake?"

Merrill doesn't answer.

The anger within him too great to be suppressed, Walker erupts:

"Tell me, isn't the mistake that I'm a Negro."

Merrill looks guilty:

"Well, we never had a Negro in the department before."

Walker gritted his teeth:

"May I talk to Fire Chief Davis," he requests.

"He's busy." Merrill replies.

"I'll wait," Walker says doggedly.

TIME TICKS AWAY

The time ticks away. The two men face each other, the one defiant, tight-lipped, the other apologetic, embarrassed.

Thirty minutes pass. Fire Chief Davis comes out of his office, unable to withstand the siege any longer.

The Fire Chief begins to explain.

Walker cuts him short:

"Isn't it because of my race."

This gets it.

The Fire Chief replies defensively:

"You're inexperienced."

"Your other men were inexperienced when they began."

"Well you see, Mr. Walker," the chief says. "If you must know the truth, we never have Negroes in our department and we can't have a department with Negroes and whites working together."

"I see them working in the yard." Walker counters.

"But not in the Fire Department. It wouldn't be expedient to put Negroes on the job and I won't do it."

The argument continues, but Walker remains calm, adamant. The Chief argues unsucessfully, tries to get the Negro applicant to leave. Knowing he would violate a hiring clause by leaving, Walker sits tight. Finally the Chief gives in:

WALKER IS CALM

"All right, I'll check you in, but you can't work. Since you're here I'll let you make time today and you can walk around the yard as if you're employed."

Half an hour later Walker pounds his beat. The fire alarm sounds.

Thousands of lives and millions of dollars at stake. The government needs as many ships as possible and fast. Fire will destroy them. Fire is hitler's friend.

The yard is in flames. Men run with long hoses. They must put it out. It gains momentum. It spreads. Look! It is near that brand new destroyer.

Work fast! Don't let it spread. Fire Chief Davis is red in the face. He isn't thinking about hitler or the loss of ships He's worried about his job, his responsibility to the shipyard.

He looks about the yard. He spurs his men on. Walker is one of his men, the Negro he is paying to loaf.

"I can't call him," he thinks. "I might have to keep him afterwards. Let's fight this fire alone -- we white folks."

Walker watches in readiness, awaiting his orders. The flames ride to the sky. The orders never come.

NEGRO DESCRIBES ARMY PREJUDICES

Knoxville Native Resigns as Aide to Stimson

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31 (AP)—William H. Hastie, Negro civilian aide to Secretary of War Stimson, said today he had resigned in protest against "discriminatory practices of the army air forces in matters affecting Negroes."

He recalled in a statement that a training center for Negro pilots had been established ~~at~~ Tuskegee University in Alabama over his protests against segregation. Since then, he said, adequate provisions have not been made for ground troops to work with qualified Negro pilots.

'Negro Pilots Unwanted'

"The simple fact," he commented, "is that the air command does not want Negro pilots flying in and out of various fields, eating, sleeping and mingling with other personnel, as a service pilot must do in carrying out his various missions."

Hastie, dean of law at Howard University here, said that when he took office "the Secretary of War directed that all questions of policy and important proposals relating to Negroes should be referred to my office for comment or approval before final action."

"In December, 1940, the air forces referred to me a plan for a segregated training center for Negro pursuit pilots at Tuskegee," he said. "I expressed my entire disagreement with the plan, giving my reasons in detail. My views were disregarded. Since then, the air command has never on its own initiative submitted any plan or project to me for comment or recommendation.

"But the reactionary policies and discriminatory practices of the air forces are much more serious than the matter of ignoring my office. It should be understood that from the beginning the air command did not want Negro personnel. Resistance bred of that attitude has been met ever since."

Specialized Men Rejected

Hastie, a native of Knoxville, Tenn., asserted also that Negro applicants for assignment as weather officers or officers in other highly specialized technical fields were rejected, although the air force needs "large numbers of additional weather officers so badly that white volunteers are being solicited and accepted, despite a general policy against voluntary enlistments in the army."

CIO Brands Racism Drag on War Effort

[The following statement was issued last week by the committee on racial discrimination of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, set up at the fifth convention of the CIO held in Boston in November, 1942. It consists of: James B. Carey, chairman, and secretary-treasurer of the CIO; Willard S. Townsend, secretary, and president of the United Transport Service Employees; James J. Leary, secretary-treasurer of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers; Ferdinand Smith, secretary of the National Maritime Union, and Boyd L. Wilson, member of the executive board, United Steelworkers of America.]

The existence of discrimination against colored people and other minorities is not only a continuing blot on American democracy, but even more seriously a drag on the total mobilization of all our people needed to win the war against Axis slavery.

JAN 30 1943

Every war industry and plant in the country is crying for more manpower, desperately needed to keep the weapons of war rolling out to the offensive fighting fronts of our armed forces and our allies.

JAN 30 1943

Colored Americans are as anxious as any to work for victory, just as they are fighting for victory in the army and the navy. To allow employers or any other agencies to bar them from jobs is worse than unjust—it is an active help to Hitler.

The CIO, in setting up the committee on racial discrimination at its November convention, moved to implement in industry and government the policy it has always held to in its own ranks—of absolute opposition to discrimination in any form, and of complete equality of opportunity for all.

In Line with F.D.'s Order

This policy has been made national in the President's Executive Order No. 8802 and in the setting up of the Fair Employment Practice Committee. The CIO concurs fully in these steps as it concurs in every move to promote national unity for winning the war.

At the same time, we must point out that the job of wiping out racial discrimination is far from complete, and at the present rate of progress will scarcely be completed in time to make full answer to the needs of all-out war or to the needs of a people's peace.

Too often mere lip-service is given to the principle of equal opportunity. Too often an employer or a whole industry, ordered to stop discriminating against colored workers, has evaded the order by offering token employment to a handful in place of opening jobs to all who are qualified.

JAN 30 1943

Victory requires the full effort of every person in this country and in the United Nations. Many millions of people among our allies are looking to our country to end inequalities that hold back a speedy United Nations' victory.

NAACP Claims Soldiers Must Rise Hours Earlier To Do Mental Task

MAR 5 - 1943

Washington, D. C.—Why are Negro soldiers required to rise an hour earlier than white soldiers at Camp Wheeler, Georgia? the Washington Bureau of the N. A. A. C. P. demanded this week of Secretary of War Stimson.

Reveille is sounded at 5:30 A. M. for colored soldiers only. Upon rising they clean their own barracks and mess halls, after which they are required to clean the toilets used by white soldiers. White soldiers at Camp Wheeler rise at 6:30 A. M.

City Council Protests Jim Crow in SPARS

"Daily Worker" New York, N.Y.

The City Council yesterday adopted a resolution r questing the Mayor and the Board of Estimate to resto special investigators to the Juvenile Aid Bureau of the P lice Department and add to the probation officer personn of the Children's Court as a means of combating increasir child delinquency.

JAN 3 - 194

Also adopted was a resolution of Councilman A. Clayton Powell calling on the mayor, the Board of Estimate and the Board of Higher Education to bring pressure on Navy officials to permit Negro women to enlist in the SPARs, women's branch of the Coast Guard.

Hunter College buildings, owned by the city, have been leased to the Coast Guard as a SPAR training center. Inasmuch as persons of all nationalities pay taxes for the upkeep of the Hunter College buildings, the resolution says, the city should insist that no racial discrimination should be permitted there.

JAN 3 - 1943

The Council also received a report from Comptroller McGoldrick estimating that budgetary accruals would amount to only $2,950,000 by June and urging the councilmen to defer action on legislation to increase wages of low-paid city employes.

CONSIDERABLE DEBATE

The child delinquency resolution was adopted only after considerable debate and numerous roll calls on a minority report by Councilman Meyer Goldberg, which was not accepted because it was considered merely a repetition of the majority report on child delinquency.

The report urged the mayor to set up a special committee to study the war-time child delinquency problem.

Councilman Peter V. Cacchione, Brooklyn Communist, said that the city should seek federal funds under the Lanham Act for maintenance of nurseries to care for children of mothers in war industry.

He criticised the mayor and members of his staff for accepting a decision that New York is not a war industry center and is therefore not entitled to the money.

"We've got to accept New York City as a war industry city," he said, pointing out that hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers are working directly in war plants and war industry.

JAN 3 - 1943

CACCHIONE SPEAKS

Earlier in the meeting, during a debate on three measures asking for improved subway facilities, Cacchione charged that the city had no overall transit plan to relieve train overcrowding.

He argued that the city should follow the example of Los Angeles and Bridgeport, Conn., and get agreement on staggering working hours and thus spread the transit load more evenly.

Cacchione has a resolution in committee calling for study leading to adoption of such a plan.

Vice-Chairman Sharkey, while not commenting on the Cacchione resolution, said he agreed with Cacchione and added that the transportation system "is bogging down."

All in German Territory Must Register, Himmler Orders

"New York Times" N.Y. N.Y.

Heinrich Himmler, Gestapo chief, has issued an order for the registration of all Negroes in Reich territory, the Swedish weekly Trots Allt said in an article reported to the Office of War Information yesterday.

FEB 2 - 1943

"The decree states that local authorities must register all Negroes, mulattoes and quadroons and report the results immediately to the office of the Chief of Reich Security," Trots Allt said.

"The decree is addressed to all police authorities. There can be no doubt what will happen after their registration, as Negroes are treated as all 'inferior races.'

"The office mentioned in the decree is the same one that handles Jewish deportation and property confiscation. Apparently there are no longer many Jews or gypsies left in Germany and the Germans are now forced to find new objects of their racial policy."

Negroes Hit Gag On Marcantonio

"Daily Worker" N.Y. N.Y.

JAN 27 1943

The refusal of the House to approve the nomination of Rep. Vito Marcantonio, to the House Judiciary Committee, made by the Committee on Committees, "is a definite blow to the war effort," the Negro Labor Victory Committee declared here yesterday.

"It represents a capitulation to the alliance of the Tory Democrats from the South and reactionary Republicans from the North who are determined to block all efforts of the War Administration to effect full national unity." The statement continued:

"It is clear that the real issue at stake is the fight of the American people to extend democracy by abolition of the poll tax; elimination of the fascist practice of lynching, and to protect the democratic rights of all American workers, which fight Congressman Marcantonio has consistently championed.

JAN 27 1943

TORIES LED OPPOSITION

"It is no surprise that the opposition to the nomination of Mr. Marcantonio was led by Messers. Dies of Texas, Woodrum of Virginia, Rankin of Mississippi and Barry of New York, who, by their opposition to everything that is decent and democratic, represent the forces of the domestic fascists whose position in Congress is entrenched by the un-American poll tax.

JAN 27 1943

"We sincerely hope that those members of the House of Representatives who showed that they place the welfare of our country first, by supporting the nomination of Mr. Marcantonio to the House Judiciary Committee, such as: Speaker Rayburn, Representatives Doughton of North Carolina, Cooper of Tennessee, Lynch and Celler of New York—will continue their efforts to break the power of the reactionary alliance in Congress and thus hasten the invincible unity of our nation for victory. In this undertaking, they will have the support of the overwhelming majority of the American people."

Negro War Department Official Resigns In Huff

WASHINGTON—(AP)—In protest against what he termed the "reactionary policies and discriminatory practices" of the Army Air Forces, William H. Hastie has resigned as civilian aide to Secretary of War Stimson.

Hastie, Negro dean of law at Howard University here, said in announcing his resignation Sunday night:

FEB 1 - 1943

"The simple fact is that the air command does not want Negro pilots flying in and out of various fields, eating, sleeping and mingling with other personnel, as a service pilot must do in carrying out his various missions."

FEB 1 - 194

Ever since he protested in 1940 against setting up a segregated training center for Negro pilots at Tuskegee University in Alabama, Hastie said, the air command has ignored him. This, despite his assertion that when he took office Secretary Stimson directed that all questions relating to Negroes be referred to him for comment or approval.

Prejudice or Fear?

JAN 2 3 1943

Dear Sirs: I have been a resident of the South for seven months, and I object strongly to any representation of anti-Negro prejudice as an expression of the white man's struggle for survival. That is specious "reasoning." We are creating deplorable conditions and then blaming the colored man for becoming the victim. In the same way we are making an education difficult for him to obtain and then accusing him of being stupid and ignorant.

JAN 2 3 194

I hear constantly the statement that the Negro is innately inferior to the white, and so he doesn't deserve anything better. Is the superior white man afraid of the inferior Negro? Is that why the whites won't let the colored establish a USO at Camp Tyson? An anticipated 4,000 Negro soldiers have no place to go for something to eat or to spend their leisure time. But these troops will become objects of vicious criticism when trouble breaks out.

The Race Problem

The smoldering bitterness of U.S. Negroes against segregation in the services flared into flame again last week. This time the fuel was laid by respected onetime Federal Judge William H. Hastie, dean of Howard University Law School. Explaining this week why he had resigned as Negro civilian aide to the Secretary of War, he charged the Army Air Forces was discriminating against Negroes.

FEB 8 1943

When the 99th (Negro) Fighter Squadron was formed, Lawyer Hastie insisted that it should not be segregated from white outfits, either in training or operation. It was. In the conflict between the ethical right of the Negro soldier and officer to be treated like anyone else, and the practical impossibility of doing it in the face of existing prejudice, the Air Forces had chosen the practical way.

But Judge Hastie went further. He charged that the Air Forces had failed to train enough civilian technicians, had given enlisted men of the 99th jobs of common labor. Furthermore, said he, these and other acts of discrimination had been carried out without being submitted to him for comment or approval, as had been specified when he was appointed.

Now the Army has decided to organize other Negro squadrons, but Judge Hastie declared that the training of their technical crews is likely to be far behind the training of pilots. Meanwhile, Negro pilots already qualified are hindered in training because the Army Air Forces is unwilling to let them take cross-country flights which might set them down on fields where they would get the privileges of the officers' club.

By speaking his piece, Judge Hastie had put his finger on an Army-wide problem that already has resulted in many a round of fisticuffs and occasional disorder and insubordination. Although long-standing white prejudice against the Negro could not be dissolved by Government fiat, Judge Hastie's airing did his cause no harm.

WMC Hearing Postponement Is Protested

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23 (AP)—The postponement by Paul V. McNutt of a hearing on alleged discrimination against Negroes in the railroad industry was protested unanimously by the committee on fair employment practice of the War Manpower Commission.

The committee was scheduled to hold the hearings, but McNutt, the War Manpower chairman, postponed them indefinitely, explaining that action of another nature would be taken on the matter.

The committee announced it had recommended "strongly" that the hearings, originally scheduled to be held here Jan. 25-26, should be "held as soon as possible." At the same time, committee officials announced the resignations of Dr. Malcolm S. McLean, chairman; Col. David Sarnoff and Mark Ethridge, Louisville, Ky., newspaper executive.

What the Negro Wants

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal.

After I finished high school, college was my next thought. I was interested in music and, because of the southern-style democracy which exists in this city, I could not enter our University of Louisville. So I had to spend extra money in order to study music; extra money that could have been added to my family's supply of war bonds and stamps.

I enrolled in a Southern university. It was in this southern city that my friends and I saw city busses and street cars marked, "Colored Race to the Rear." It was in this city that I saw colored soldiers, boys who were giving their lives to their country, mistreated, laughed at and pushed to the rear in all cultural and social advantages.

FEB 6 - 1943

It is sometimes asked whether the United Nations haven't enough problems without bringing in that of the Negro? Unfortunately the united Americans have given the Negro no alternative. Our problem must be presented now. After the war, in the light of precedent, the Negro will lose his ephemeral importance. Who then will champion the cause of the Negro? I do not think that the problem of the Negro is the most important one in America today, but surely it is the most important to Negro America. I feel that the problem of the United Nations and the problem of the American Negro cannot be separated. In the problem of the American Negro one sees a repudiation of all for which the United Nations profess to fight. For the Negro to see this now with the consciences of white peoples on the side of right the world over and to have them in a receptive mood to hear Negro petitions should mean significant gains for the Negro.

In retrospect, we look upon the Negro of the World War I. He, too, was a very important fellow. Many of these Negroes never came back. They died "to save democracy." The Negroes of World War I. contributed their all for something which later proved illusory.

FEB 6 - 1943

Now, the Negro is being placated once more by promises of post-war world equality. To the thinking Negro, however, the probability of such an absolute thing is hardly credible. The Negro does not expect miracles; he simply wants the fundamental rights of man. He wants the repeal of the poll-tax in Mississippi and other states, even if a Mr. Bilbo in the Senate does filibuster.

Negro Resigns Federal Position

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19. (AP)—The resignation of William Hastie, Negro civilian aide to the secretary of war, was disclosed yesterday. Hastie declined to say why he was resigning or what he expected to do.

"I wish to state my sincere appreciation for the measure of friendly support and cooperation which my office has received from the press," he said in a statement. "I shall have no further or amplifying statement to make until after my official duties shall have terminated" at the end of this month.

Hastie was born in 1904 at Knoxville, Tenn., and is a graduate of Amherst College and the Harvard law school. He has been on leave as dean of the Howard University law school here since he joined Secretary Stimson's staff Nov. 1, 1940, as an adviser on Negro affairs. Hastie was federal judge in the Virgin Islands from 1937 to 1939.

Negro Aide In Stimson's Office Discrimination Quits Charging

FEB 1 - 1943

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.—(AP)—William H. Hastie, negro civilian aide to Secretary of War Stimson, said today he had resigned in protest against "discriminatory practices of the Army Air Forces in matters affecting negroes."

He recalled in a statement that a training center for negro pilots had been established at Tuskegee Institute in Alabama over his protests against segregation. Since then, he said, adequate provisions had not been made for ground troops to work with qualified negro pilots.

"The simple fact," he commented. "is that the air command does not want negro pilots flying in and out of various fields, eating, sleeping and mingling with other personnel, as a service pilot must do in carrying out his various missions."

FEB 1 - 1943

Hastie, dean of law at Howard University here, said that when he took office "the secretary of war directed that all questions of policy and important proposals relating to negroes should be referred to my office for comment or approval before final action."

"In December, 1940, the air forces referred [illegible] a plan for a segregated training center for negro pursuit pilots at Tuskegee," he said. "I expressed my entire disagreement with the plan, giving my reasons in detail. My views were disregarded. Since then, the air command has never on its own initiative submitted any plan or project to me for comment or recommendation. Whatever information I obtained, I had to seek out. Where I made proposals or recommendations, I volunteered them . . . .

"But the reactionary policies and discriminatory practices of the air forces are much more serious than the matter of ignoring my office. It should be understood that from the beginning the air command did not want negro personnel. Resistance bred of that attitude has been met ever since."

He described negro ground troops assigned to aviation as "so-called 'aviation squadrons (separate)' " and said they "have never had a defined function." They are assigned, he reported, to "odd jobs of common labor which arise from time to time at air fields. "The units," he continued, "would never have come into existence except for the necessity of making some provision for negro enlisted men in the air forces."

FEB 1 - 1943

Hastie said that "a few" negroes were accepted for ground force technical training at Chanute Field, Ill., and "did excellent work" but that training stopped with the first group.

"The air forces," he continued, "then made efforts to set up segregated technical training at Tuskegee or elsewhere. Difficulties were encountered. Meanwhile, successive classes of negro pilots were being trained, but no technical schooling of supporting ground crew members was in progress. Thus, even the segregated program got badly out of balance in the effort to effect its extension. The prospect is that in 1943, even with a tardy resumption of technical ground training, negro pilots will be ready before and faster than adequate numbers of trained ground crews are available."

He aserted also that negro applicants for assignment as weather officers or officers in other highly specialized technical fields were rejected although the air forces needs "large numbers of additional weather officers so badly that white volunteers are being solicited and accepted, despite a general policy against voluntary enlistments in the Army."

Jim Crow Is Target of Many Assembly Bills

JAN 24 1943

By Sender Garlin

(The Worker Staff Correspondent)

ALBANY.—Increasing interest on a statewide scale in the whole question of Negro rights for the effective prosecution of the war is indicated by a number of developments in this capital city during the past 10 days.

On Jan. 11. Assemblyman Robert Crews, Brooklyn Republican, introduced a resolution to memorialize Congress to enact legislation outlawing the poll tax system now prevailing in eight Southern States. The Worker, N.Y., N.Y.

On the same night, Assemblyman Hulan Jack, Harlem Negro Democrat, sponsored a sharply-worded resolution assailing the poll tax and calling for the Legislature to urge Congressional enactment of HR 7, Rep. Vito Marcantonio's bill.

JAN 24 1943

SCORES DIES COMMITTEE

At the same time Mr. Jack called upon the Legislature to urge the discontinuance of the Dies Committee which, he charged, "has continued since Pearl Harbor to foment disunity and distrust among all classes of our people and to sow suspicion of our Allies."

Last Tuesday, Senator Charles Perry, Harlem Democrat, introduced a bill prohibiting discrimination because of race, color or creed in any store where goods are sold or any house, apartment building or other rentable living quarter.

Assemblyman Julius Gans, Bronx Democrat, has proposed an Anti-Discrimination Bill which would bar state agencies from advertising in any newspaper which prints racial or religious qualifications in its want ad columns.

WOULD BAN HATE ADS

JAN 24 1943

A similar bill, sponsored by Assemblyman William T. Andrews, Harlem Negro Democrat, would prohibit the insertion of advertisements for employment in newspapers, magazines or other publications, discriminating because of race, creed or color. The Worker

Several days later Andrews introduced a resolution scoring the cancellation of railroad hearings by the Fair Employment Practice Committee on orders of War Manpower chief, Paul V. McNutt. New York, N.Y.

How strong the movement in defense of Negro rights for the war effort is growing is indicated by the fact that in this city the Albany Ministers Conference composed of Protestant clergymen and Jewish Rabbis has already endorsed the anti-Poll Tax bill, and the State Conference of Ministers is understood to be taking similar action.

DEWEY STATEMENT

Developments have reached a point where Gov. Thomas E. Dewey felt impelled to issue a statement this week which revealed that he was quite aware of the feeling among the Negro people as well as the general population, especially since the suppression of the FEPC hearings by Mr. McNutt.

In his statement the Governor recalled that pursuant to the State Constitution and the legislative enactments it is the declared policy of New York State "that there shall be no discrimination or segregation because of race, color or creed in the public schools and colleges or other institutions serving the public."

JAN 24 1943

Mr. Dewey therefore called upon the State War Council of New York State to "express to the War and Navy Department of the U. S. and to the War and Navy Committee of the War Manpower Commission its solemn conviction that any departure from the recognized policy of the State of New York of equality of opportunity for all its citizens to enter the colleges and universities in this State regardless of race, color or creed, is inimical to the best interest of its citizenry and to their participation in the war effort."

WOMEN DEMAND JOBS AT B-M-P AIRPLANE PLANT

Birmingham, Ala.—Thirteen hundred Negro citizens—ninety percent of them women—joined in a demand to the Bechtel-McCone-Parsons Airplane Modification plant that the company immediately discontinue its policy of refusing to hire Negro women in the local plant, and urged an increase in the number of Negro men employed.

APR 15 1943

The action came at a mass meeting on April 1 at the great Sixth Avenue Baptist church here, called by the Citizens' Committee for Jobs and Job Training. The meeting was called, it was explained, after negotiations between the Citizens Committee and representatives of the company had made no headway against the stubborn refusal of the company to begin the training of Negro women.

William Hastie Makes Statement

In the following statement, William H. Hastie, who recently resigned as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, in protest against the shortcomings of the military aviation program as it affects Negroes, discusses some additional aspects of racial discrimination and segregation in the Army Air Forces.

FEB 1 9 1943

It was not until March, 1941, that the Army Air Corps began accepting applications from Negroes for aviation cadet training. The actual instruction of Negroes to be flying officers did not begin until several months later. But even then, and to this day, there was and is only one type of combat aviation—namely, pursuit flying—for which the Air Command will train a Negro.

How did it happen that the training of Negro aviators was started in the field of pursuit flying? It is common knowledge that grave doubts were expressed from the beginning as to whether the Negro was capable of making good as a combat aviator. The Air Command described and still describes the training of the Negro in aviation as an "experiment." Yet, in the face of this expressed skepticism, the Air Command saw fit to begin with the training of Negroes for pursuit flying, the most difficult type of combat aviation. The single pilot in his pursuit ship has the most exacting of air tasks, handling his fast plane, manouvering it at terrific speed in actual combat, mastering the technic of accurate and properly directed fire in aerial dog fights, and exercising split second judgment in unexpected situations and emergencies. Why was the Negro, whose ability was in doubt, not started off with observation flying, or in bombardment where co-pilots and other crew members assist each other and share and divide responsibility?

Only the men who made the decision know the answer. They may have reasoned that through pursuit flying Negroes would demonstrate their ability to perform any air combat task. Fortunately, it seems to be working out that way. They may also have reasoned that Negroes were less likely to succeed in pursuit flying than in somewhat less exacting work. Yet, in all fairness it should be said that the best of facilities and thoroughly competent instructors were provided for the segregated training program for Negro pilots. And the man in the field who started this training did so with enthusiasm and determination to make it a success.

Statistics already released by the Air Command show that, during the first year of Negro pursuit pilot training, 42 per cent of the Negro trainees successfully completed their course and earned their wings as pursuit pilots. During the same period 59 per cent of white aviation cadets who entered training qualified as flying officers. Of course the number of Negroes was small and the statistics are therefore not conclusive. More important is the fact that Negro candidates have no opportunity at any stage of training to be assigned to some other branch of combat flying, if they seem not to be well adapted to pursuit work. The Negro cadet must become a pursuit pilot or nothing. White cadets are sorted out and placed according to their apparent aptitudes. Under these circumstances, the fact that 42 per cent of the Negroes who had the physical and educational qualifications for aviation made the grade in the most difficult assignment is a significant accomplishment.

Beyond the fact that the Negro must have the ability for pursuit flying, or else not fly at all, he must meet the special physical specifications of the pursuit pilot. If he is too tall or too heavy for pursuit flying, he cannot be an Army flyer, however competent he may be for some flying job other than pursuit work.

In wasted manpower, it is difficult to say how much is being lost by imposing such restrictions upon the Negro. It seems probable that some 200 Negro pursuit pilots will earn their wings in 1943. But the Air Command has never undertaken a campaign of publicity or promotion designed to get young Negro men with superior training into flying training. When the Air Forces set up their college reserve program, no Negroes were wanted. The small "Negro quota" was already filled for a year in advance. So, while the Ground Forces were welcoming Negro college men into their college reserve, the Air Forces refused to accept them. Even earlier the Air Corps had undertaken the recruiting of groups of men from the individual college campus who would go into training as a unit with the group spirit and enthusiasm developed through their association at college. The Negro was excluded from this also. Thus, only the Negro who went forward on his own initiative, determined despite hell and high water to be a combat flyer, ever became an aviation cadet. Even then, he was accepted only within limited quota restrictions and for one type of training.

Within the past two months, restrictions upon the acceptance of volunteers in the army have been extended to aviation cadets. Apparently, aviation cadets will be chosen almost exclusively from men already in the Army. A new problem faces the Negro. He must apply for aviation cadet training through his commander and his papers must survive a journey through military channels. It remains to be seen whether his application will be encouraged and facilitated to the same extent as the application of the white soldier. In this connection, one recent experience is disturbing. For more than a year the Air Command has been selecting young soldiers, high school graduates, to be taken from the ranks and trained to become enlisted pilots. They become master, staff and technical sergeants with flying rating. So far as I have been able to discover, Negro enlisted men have not been accepted in this program. How different will the situation be now that both prospective flying officers and prospective enlisted pilots will be selected from the ranks of the army?

Two hundred Negro pursuit pilots a year is something more than token representation. Certainly, 200 pilots can make a big difference in almost any of the present theatres of war. Yet the failure of the Air Command to encourage or even permit the full participation of the Negro in flying training and service prevents the number of Negro pilots from being several times 200 per year. If the Air Command should decide to use Negro flying officers and enlisted men without racial restrictions, 1000 pilots would be a conservative estimate of annual production.

Of course there would be serious practical difficulties in developing segregated training fields and segregated organizations of many various types in such an expansion. From a military point of view all of this new segregated set up probably would not be worth the time, expense and diversion of personnel. But if the war lasts long enough, it is not too much to hope that those in authority will realize that their insistence upon strict racial segregation in aviation training and organization is a real hindrance to the ultimate objective of success in battle.

MR. HASTIE QUITS AS ARMY AID IN PROTEST

FEB 1 1 1943

MR. WILLIAM H. HASTIE, Dean of the Howard University Law School, who has been serving as Negro Civilian Aid to Secretary of War, Henry L. Stimson, has resigned the post with the War Department in a protest against "discriminatory practices of the army air forces in matters affecting Negroes." He has given out a statement to the effect that the training center for Negro Army pilots at Tuskegee, Alabama, was established over his protest. He contends that adequate provisions have not been made for ground troops to work with qualified Negro pilots.

In his appointment to the post it was understood that Secretary Stimson was to direct all questions of policy and important proposals relating to Negroes to Mr. Hastie's office for comment or approval before final action. At the outset of plans for the base at Tuskegee he expressed his entire disagreement with the plans and gave his reasons in detail. They, of course, were disregarded. Since then the air command has not on its own initiative submitted any plans or projects to Mr. Hastie for comment or recommendation.

His statement has also brought out the fact that Negro applicants for assignments as weather officer or officers in other highly specialized technical fields were rejected although the air forces need "large numbers of additional weather officers so badly that white volunteers are being solicited and accepted, despite a general policy against voluntary enlistment in the army.

In a general summary Dr. George A. Singleton in the Christian Recorder has well stated:

"On the side of the Allies fight the United States. This nation has been southern in opinion and attitude from the beginning. The entire military establishment, and even the Congress are either doughface or southern. This means that they would win the war, but with segregation, jim-crow and discrimination. So we fight to preserve 'The American Way of Life.' The very thing not worth presenting, and which is already in the course of ultimate extinction, in spite of reactionary die-hard bourbons who pose as American pat[illegible]

The Negro is in this war as a loyal citizen, segregated in the uniform of his country, expendable in defense of the flag, insulted daily by those who think themselves superior because their skin is white—he fights, bleeds, dies for complete citizenship rights. He will not fail the government in the hour of trial and prays that the government will not fail him."

Says School Gets 'Mess of Pottage' and Air Force Has 'Valuable Accomplice'

MAR 25 1943

BY WILLIAM H. HASTIE

NOTE: The following statement by William H. Hastie describes and criticizes a new development in the army air program as it affects Negroes. Although Judge Hastie has completed his recent series of statements on the air forces, he considers this new and most recent development to be a matter which should receive public attention everywhere.

The Army Air Forces have just announced a new program of five months academic training in selected colleges to be given to soldiers before they begin army flying training. The men will be taught by the college faculties and will live on the campus. Over a hundred schools all over the country have been selected to provide this preliminary college training. But eligible Negro soldiers are to be segregated and all of them sent to Tuskegee Institute to study physics, mathematics, history, English and Geography. Men from all parts of the country, men with varying educational background, a large number of them already graduates of first rate liberal arts colleges, must be sent to Tuskegee Institute for five months of undergraduate training, just because they happen to be colored.

Even if Tuskegee were an outstanding liberal arts college, which it is not, this newest and wholly unnecessary Jim Crow scheme would be inexcusable. In all the circumstances the plan is outrageous. The time has come when the unholy alliance between Tuskegee Institute and the Army Air Forces must be publicly denounced and condemned. Let there be no mistake. Tuskegee is rendering no valuable service to the war effort in this latest step in its effort to concentrate a black aviation program on and around the Tuskegee campus. With callous indifference to the best interests of the Negro and to the importance of democracy in the war effort, Tuskegee Institute is looking out for Tuskegee. The school gets its mess of pottage and the Air Force have a willing and valuable accomplice in their design of keeping Negro soldiers out of all unsegregated colleges.

Hundreds May Be Affected

Several hundred Negroes may be affected by this scheme almost immediately. Early in March the Air Forces called to active duty the entire waiting list of several hundred qualified Negro Aviation cadet applicants. I am sure of this because of my personal acquaintance with several of the men who were near the bottom of the list and have been called to duty. These are the men who, after the usual preliminary processing, face the prospect of five months undergraduate study at Tuskegee before they begin aviation training.

It still remains to be seen what will be done with these men after they finish five months of college study at Tuskegee Institute. A report was sent from Tuskegee to a leading newspaper that some of these men are to become bombardiers and navigators. There is no apparent truth to this report. I can find no evidence from any source of any plan to train Negroes for bombardment aviation. It seems to me that someone has tried to take the curse off of this latest Tuskegee outrage by circulating the false report that new opportunity is being provided for Negroes in the field of bombardment aviation. The whole thing smells very bad.

What About Applicants?

There is one further question which we must ask and continue to ask until an answer is given. What about new Negro applicants for aviation cadet training now that the waiting list is exhausted? I do not know of any plan of the Air Forces for accepting or using additional Negro applicants. Will they be accepted? If so will they go on a waiting list to remain there until 1944? I know from experience that the Air Command makes piecemeal special plans for Negroes to meet the emergency at hand and then lets the matter drop until another emergency arises. There is grave danger, unless the public keeps the issue constantly alive, that after the group called to duty in March, no additional Negro aviation cadets will be trained for a long time to come.

WE UNDERSTAND IT ALL NOW

FEB 4 - 1943

In the stand against segregation and discrimination taken by Judge Hastie, civilian aid to the secretary of War, prior to the time he took the job, the Bystander has been puzzled for many months over his failure to do anything about the flood of protests that have come from all directions about the mistreatment of Negroes in the armed services.

The statement issued by him at the time of his resignation showing that not only were his suggestions for intigration of Negroes into armed service ignored but the situations came to the place where nothing involving the Negro was submitted to him.

Mr. Hastie said that when he took the job the understanding was that all policies concerning Negroes in the service were to be cleared through his office; that he would be at liberty to make suggestions for improvement.

Now, of course, we understand Mr. Hastie's job was set up to appease the Negro with the hope htat he could be used to indice the race to take any kind of treatment without protest. A man with backbone and a desire to see that his group got a square deal just could not hold such a place.

It is perfectly plain that in spite of any protestations of fair mindedness on the part of Secretary Stimson and his staff, the fact remains that those people who oppose a fair dea for the Negro dictate the policy of dealing with the Negro, or their views are so far respected, even though undemocratic, it amounts to just that.

No man of intelligence would have followed any other than the cause of Judge Hastie At last he has demonstrated to his superiors that the job was not so enticing and remunerative to keep him from protecting against a policy which he thought unfair. It will be interesting to watch the reaction in official circles.

WHERE THE TROUBLE LIES

FEB 4 - 1943

Discussing the race question with a leading business man in Des Moines last week, he said he thought the Negro was putting too much effort in the job of earning his rights when that same energy should be used to help win the war; that these things might well be felt until after the war. The man admitted that he had never hired Negroes in his plant prior to the war but now he was hiring almost a hundred and that their work was satisfactory. They were getting along fine.

The Bystander agrees that the Negro should do his part to the limit to help win the war; to do otherwise would brand him a traitor. But we believe also that a man has the same right to free himself from the injustices he suffers now as he has to help free somebody else. There is no sense in postponing his fight for freedom when he knows that people have forgotten promises of this kind in th past and are quite liable to do th same thing in the future.

This gentleman was reminded that the emancipation proclamation was a war measure; that he himself had hired no Negroes before the war; that to deny the Negro his right lessened his morale and this prevented him from doing a full job of help winning the war.

We are certain that this business man states the views of many influential people who having never felt the impact of segregation, discrimination and other injustices, measure minority groups by their situation. They have had little contact with the Negro, know practically nothing of his ambitions or his training. They know that somewhere in the constitution we find the statement that all men are created equal: they no doubt have read or heard that the Bible speaks of the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God and that all is well.

True, this is a good place to begin but we must not stay there. No nation or race will get anywhere by just waiting for things to happen. Somebody must get out and fight to the end that these truths are made a part of our daily life. And that is why the Negro and many of his friends don't propose to wait until the war is over to secure for the Negro the type of justice and fair play to which he is entitled.

ONCE BEGUN, HARD TO STOP

APR 15 1943

Sometime ago, a few liberal minded individuals conceived the idea that it would be a fine thing to form an army division of white and black Americans, thus demonstrating that the two races can fight as well as work together. The war department was not for the idea. Naturally they would take this position for the success of the undertaking would have disproven their theory of segregation.

Recently, a group of loyal Japanese Americans asked that they be given authority to form a unit to fight the Axis. We understand this has met with favor.

And this week, the Americans of Serbian descent have asked President Roosecelt to permit them to form a volunteer battalion to fight the Axis.

The Selective Service organization does not seem to know what it wants to do about draftees now, but if every racial group is allowed to form a special battalion or division in order to prove his loyalty we shall have a conglomeration of racial units seeking to uphold the loyalty of a race rather than strong units of fighting men seeking to uphold the loyalty of the citizens of the United States.

We have enouh organizations already which have a tendency to intensify racial solidarity rather than American loyalty. They ought to be eliminated rather than increased and the army is one of the last places where thev should not survive.

Army Air Forces Discriminatory Practices Caused His Resignation, Judge Hastie Says In Statement

FEB 6 1943

New York Age
New York, N. Y.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Hitting out at "reactionary policies and discriminatory practices of the Army Air Forces in matters affecting Negroes" which were the cause of his resignation as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, former Judge William H. Hastie on Monday released to the press his reasons for leaving the post.

Three weeks ago, Judge Hastie announced that his resignation had been handed in to the Secretary of War to become effective January 31st and said that he would not issue a clarifying statement on the cause of his resignation until after he had left the post.

Cleatring up speculation as to his reasons for resigning, Judge Hastie issued the following statement:

"Reactionary policies and discriminatory practices of the Army Air Forces in matters affecting Negroes were the immediate cause of my resignation as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War.

"The Army Air Forces are growing in importance and independence. In the post-war period they may become the greatest single component of the armed services. Biased policies and harmful practices esablished in this branch of the Army can all to easily infect other branches as well. The situation had become critical. Yet, the whole course of my dealings with the Army Air Forces convinced me that further expression of my views in the form of recommendations within the Department would be futile. I, therefore, took the only course which can, I believe, bring results. Public opinion is still the strongest force in American life.

"To the Negro soldier and those who influence his thinking, I say with all the force and sincerity at my command that the man in uniform must grit his teeth, square his shoulders and do his best as a soldier, confident that there are millions of Americans outside of the armed services, and more persons than he knows in high places who will never cease fighting to remove every racial barrier and every humiliating practice which now confront him. But only by being at all times a first class soldier can the man in uniform help in this battle which shall be fought and won.

Fought Segregated [illegible]

"When I took office, the Secretary of War directed that all questions of policy and important proposals relating to Negroes should be referred to my office for comment or approval before final action In December, 1940, the Air Forces referred to me a plan for a segregated training center for Negro pursuit pilots at Tuskegee. I expressed my entire disagreement with the plan, giving my reasons in detail. My views were disregarded. Since then, the Air Command has never on its own initiative submitted any plan or project to me for comment or recommendation. What information I obtained, I had to seek out. Where I made proposals or recommendations, I volunteered them.

"This situation reached its climax in late December, 1942, when I learned through Army press releases sent out from St. Louis and from the War Department in Washinton that the Air Command was about to establish a segregated officer candidate school at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, to train Negro officers for ground duty with the Army Air Forces. Here was a proposal for a radical departure from present Army practice, since the officer candidate training program is the one large field where the Army is eliminating racial segregation. Moreover I had actually written to the Air Command several weeks earlier in an attempt to find out what was brewing at Jefferson Barracks. The Air Command replied as late as December 17, 1942, giving not even the slightest hint of any plan for a segregated officer candidate school.

"It is inconceivable to me that consideration of such a project had not then advanced far enough for my office to have been consulted, even if I had not made specific inquiry. The conclusion is inescapable that the Air Command does not propose to inform, much less counsel with, this office about its plans for Negroes.

Says Negroes Not Wanted

"But the reactionary policies and discriminatory practices of the Air Forces are much more serious than the matter of ignoring my office. It should be understood that from tse beginning, the Air Command did not want Negro personnel. Resistance bred of that attitude has been met ever since. Moreover, even now the Air Command views the use of the Negro as an "experiment" designed to determine whether he can do this or that in the field of aviation. This attitude is the result of wholly unscientific notions that race somehow controls a man's capacity and aptitudes. The tragedy is that by not wanting the Negro in the first place and by doubting his capacity the Air Command has committed itself psychologically to courses of action which themselves become major obstacles to the success of Negroes in the Air Forces.

"The Negro program of the Air Forces began some two years ago with the organization of several so-called "Aviation Squadrons (Separate)." These units, now greatly increased in number, were organized to serve no specific military need. They have never had a defined function. Except as individual commanders on their own initiative have found some military function for particular small groups of men, the characteristic assignment of the "Aviation Squadron (Separate)" has been the performance of odd jobs of common labor which arise from time to time at air fields. There are no equivalent white organizations . "Aviation Squadrons (Separate)" would never have come into existence except for the necessity of making some provision for Negro enlisted men in the Air Forces. Reluctant to use Negroes at all, the Air Command started off on the wrong foot by organizing some Negro labor units, while every effort was being made to recruit white volunteers with mechanical ability for skilled service.

"Somewhat later, in order to provide enlsted technicians for the new air base at Tuskegee, a few Negro soldiers were accepted for technical training at Chanute Field, where a large school is maintained. The men were well received and did excellent work. I urged the importance of continuing such training of Negroes in this existing unsegregated school. But the program stopped with the first group. The Air Forces then made efforts to get up segregated technical training at Tuskegee or elsewhere. Difficulties were encountered. Meanwhile, successive classes of Negro pilots were bein trained, but no technical schooling of supporting ground crew members was in proress. Thus, even the segregated program got badly out of balance in the effort to effect its extension. The prospect is that in 1943, even with a tardy resumption of technical ground training, Negro pilots will be ready before and faster than adequate numbers of trained ground crews are available.

Negro Specialists Rejected

"The Air Forces also are rejecting Negro applicants who wish to become weather officers or officers in other highly specialized technical fields. A few such men were trained for Tuskegee. But for a period of more than six months, aill qualified Negro candidates have had their completed applications returned to them with the information that the Air Forces need no more Negro weather officers. The Air Forces, however, do need large numbers of additional weather officers so badly that white volunteers are being solicited and accepted, despite a general policy aainst voluntary enlistments in the Army. Yet, it is unthinkable to those in authority that a Negro officer can fill such a position except at Tuskegee. The same situation exists in armament and engineering, both ground specialties for which the Air Forces have been accepting cadets generally, but refusing Negroes.

"To date, all Negro applicants, a number of them well and fully qualified, for appointment as Army service pilots, have been rejected. Two applicants were actually instructed to report for training. They did so, but were sent home as soon as it was discovered that they were Negroes. I am advised that this matter is receiving further study. The simple fact is that the Air Command does not want Negro pilots flying in and out of various fields, eating, sleeping and mingling with other personnel, as a service pilot must do in carrying out his various missions.

"Negro medical officers in the Air Forces are gettin only part of the special training in aviation medicine which is available. They are not admitted to the principal school of aviation medicine at Randolph Field. Even the branch school program in which it is represented that Negro officers share without discrimination, is in fact dsicrimatory. Many white officers enrolled at branch schools of aviation medicine have the opportunity of full time resident study. The Negro officer is permitted to commute periodically from his home station at Tuskegee for work at the Maxwell Field branch school. Such grudging partial tender of makeshift schemes may be expected to continue unless a genuine change of racial attitude and policy occurs in the Air Command.

Negro Cadets Demoralized

"While Negro trainees and cadets at the Tuskegee Air Base have done well from a strictly technical point of view, they have suffered such demoralizing discrimination and segregation that, in my judgment, the entire future of the Negro, in combat aviation is in danger. Men cannot be humiliated [illegible] a long period of time without a loss of combat efficiency.

"Specifically, Negro and white officers serving at Tuskegee in the common enterprise of training Negroes for air combat have separate messes. They are not permitted to have quarters in the same building. Separate toilet facilities have been provided. If the group of white officers at Tuskegee insist upon this—and I have no evidence that they do—they are psychologically unsuited to train Negroes for combat. If they do not so insist, the racial attitude of the local commander or of higher authority is all the more apparent.

"Despite original design to advance Negro officers and to place them in posts of administrative responsibility at Tuskegee as rapidly as they should qualify, that design is not being carried out in the post administration, except in the station hospital.

"Early in the history of the Tuskegee project, a Negro soldier guarding a warehouse was disarmed and arrested by civilian authorities because he had challenged a white civilian. From then on friction continued. A new commander was appointed. He disarmed Negro military policemen assigned to patrol duty in the town of Tuskegee. A recent member of the Alabama state police force was assigned to Tuskegee as an Army officer with duties related to his civilian experience. The Negro soldier was embittered, but the prejudiced community was somewhat mollified.

"Fundamentally, it seems to me the Air Command has either failed to comprehend or failed to care that its policies and practices are tending to tear down rather than build up the pride, dignity and self-respect which Negro soldiers, like all other soldiers, must possess if they are to achieve maximum combat efficiency. Military men agree that a soldier should be made to feel that he is the best man, in the best unit in the best Army in the world. When the Air Command shall direct its policies and practices so as to help rather than tghe development of [illegible] hinder the development of such spirit among its Negro soldiers, it will be on the right road."

FORMER CIVILIAN AIDE ANSWERS WAR DEPARTMENT; BLASTS ENTIRE SEGREGATION SETUP

Editor's Note: The following is a further statement of William H. Hastie, former Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, occasioned by an answer recently made by the War Department to charges of racial discrimination in the Air Corps.

The Plaindealer
Kansas City, Kan.
APR 16 1943

The Associated Federation of Churches has released to the press recent correspondence between its Civic Affairs Committee and the War Department concerning issues which caused by resignation as Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War. I regret that portions of the War Department's statements are misleading and inaccurate.

I am astounded that the War Department in substance denies the enforced segregation of Negro and white officers at Tuskegee. Even in the construction plans for the Tuskegee Air Base separate quarters and separate eating facilities were provided for white and colored officers. Similar separation was planned for white and colored enlisted men. I protested against these plans and the Air Corps refused to change them. During the summer of 1942 after the planned segregation had actually been put into effect, I protested again and was told that this segregation at Tuskegee was in accord with established policy and existing customs, and that it would not be changed. These communications were all in writing and should be in the War Department files. I cannot understand the present denial of the well-known and notorious fact.

Concerning Negro administrative officers at the Tuskegee Air Base, the War Department states that "as Negro officers become qualified they will be advanced according to their ability." But the record shows a consistent policy of advancing white administrative officers, who have no exceptional qualifications, and restricting Negro administrative officers to subordinate positions. I have heretofore refrained from citing specific cases to avoid possible embarrassment to any of the officers themselves. But now that the discrimination is publicly denied, I believe cases should be cited. Nothing except racial discrimination can explain the retention of an experienced Negro chemical warfare officer in a subordinate position while a white officer of considerably less experience was made Post Chemical Warfare Officer. This case is made more glaring by the fact that the Negro officer had demonstrated his studious application to his specialty by writing an elementary handbook on the subject of Chemical Warfare. There can be no explanation except racial discrimination for the refusal to assign a veteran and experienced Negro officer of the finance department to the responsible position of Post Finance Officer after he had been detailed to Tuskegee, or the assignment of a Negro officer to supervise the post restaurant when he was sent to Tuskegee because of his unusual and outstanding experience in organized recreation and physical education. When a white Lieutenant fresh from a CCC camp advances rapidly to be a Lieutenant Colonel and second in command at the post, one must ask why a Negro Lieutenant also fresh from commanding a CCC camp and actually trained by the Army for an Adjutant's work, finds himself, nearly two years later, merely a Captain serving as Provost Marshal. Certainly racial discrimination is shown when not one of the half dozen Negro graduates of the Adjutant General's School, now stationed at Tuskegee, has been assigned to an Adjutant's duties in Post Headquarters. There can be no question that race has been a large factor in promotions in the post administration.

It is ridiculous that the War Department now explains that the use of Negro service pilots is "under study." This matter has been "under study" for a year. The real trouble as I have already pointed out is the practical impossibility of working out a Jim Crow plan for using service pilots.

The Department also states that sufficient Negro weather officers and meteorologists are now in training for the present Negro fighter group. So far as I know, this means seven Negro weather officers. Yet the War Department has, within the past few weeks, expanded its plan for training a thousand weather officers to the training of ten thousand such specialists. The few Negroes who were trained all finished near the top of their classes. Yet they and men like them cannot be used to fill any of the prospective ten thousand vacancies. This, of course, is because they would have to make weather calculations for white pilots.

The suggestion of the War Department that Negroes are trained only for single engine pursuit flying and not for bombardment "because of the technical and other features present in flying" is sheer nonsense. The single engine pursuit pilot has the most difficult and exacting aerial task. The fact is that the Air Forces do not propose to give the Negro any greater opportunity in flying than they are forced to give.

The excuse now advanced for restricting technical opportunity as mechanics, radio men, etc., is that a much smaller percentage of Negroes than white pass the mechanical aptitude test. But in 1941 and 1942 when white volunteers by the thousands were allowed to qualify for technical training,, Negroes were being rejected, not because they were incompetent but because they were colored. The fact that fewer Negroes than white were qualified was no excuse for excluding the Negroes who could qualify. I understand that very recently the Air Command has begun seeking qualified Negroes in various non-technical units to be transferred for technical training and assignment. This, of course, is an important and gratifying new development.

APR 16 1943

The history of the Aviation Squadron (Separate) belies present War Department claim that these units were established to "provide a place for men in the Air Forces who do not have the qualifications for more technical work." The first ten of these units were authorized back in 1940. They were then the only Negro units of any type in the Air Corps. They were set up in order that it could be said that Negroes were in all branches of the Army. Men were assigned to them without regard to technical ability or lack of it. If the Air Forces are now going to take the well-qualified men out of these units and assign them to technical training, this will be a new and forward step. But up to the present time, there has never been an effort to prevent the assignment of men with superior qualifications to these labor units.

APR 16 1943

In summary, although there have been some recent improvements, the practices and policies of the Air Corps are still very bad, far worse than the new War Department statement would lead the public to believe. In this connection, it is to be regretted that Under Secretary of War Patterson, a man of great integrity but who has little personal knowledge of and no supervision over the Air Training Program, should be used as the mouthpiece for the misleading statement which has found its way into the press.

SENATE TO PROBE RACE DISCRIMINATION IN ARMY

The Plaindealer Kansas City, Kan.

APR 16 1943

Washington, April 16. (ANP)—The senate committee on military affairs will hold preliminary hearings into the charges of racial discrimination in the armed forces preparatory to the appointment of a five-man subcommittee to undertake a full-dress investigation into the matter.

This is the procedure which will be followed as a result of a resolution introduced in the senate last Thursday by Sen. Sheridan V. Downey (D) of California calling upon that committee to conduct a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the status of the Negro and other minority groups in the armed services as well as the WAACS, WAVES, SPARS, and marines, women's auxiliaries.

Introducing his resolution, Sen. Downey declared on the floor that complaints of violations of the non - discrimination provisions of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 had been made by responsible persons, notably William H. Hastie, the civilian aide to Secy. of War Henry L. Stimson who resigned in protest, which complaints have created "anxious concern among large segments of our people."

The senator made it clear in his remarks that he is not now attempting to judge the veracity of the charges but rather to point out the intent of the President and the legislation establish selective service that the objective be attained without racial discrimination. He pointed out that Negroes are greatly restricted in the armed forces, particularly in the air corps.

"By the end of this year there will be more than one million Negro Americans serving their country in our armed forces," he told the senate. "They will represent more than 10 per cent of all Americans under arms. Their heroism, their loyalty is unquestioned. The records of such Negro heroes as Dorie Miller at Pearl Harbor offer living testimony of the will of the Negro people to defend the heritage of freedom and democracy which is the birthright of all Americans.

"It becomes vital to the successful prosecution of America's war of survival that the morale of the Negro Americans in our armed forces and of the 12,000,1000 more who are working on the home front, be not impaired by failure of any government agency to live up to the letter and spirit of existing laws against discrimination. It is essential that there be full and unhindered use of all America's manpower in the conduct of the war."

APR 16 194

Sen. Robert Reynolds (D) of North Carolina is chairman of the military affairs committee. It is customary that when a committee is to be appointed in accordance with a resolution, the sponsor is generally consulted on its membership. Sen. Downey was expecting to leave for the West Coast where he was scheduled to delve into manpower problems in California. It is therefore likely that the sub-committee will be appointed before his return about May 8.

APR 16 1943

The specifications of the resolution call for the committee to ascertain the extent to which there has been compliance with the racial discrimination clause of the Selective Service and Training Act of 1940; the nature and extent of any practice in the organization and placement of personnel which acted to exclude Negroes from particular branches of the armed forces either on land, at sea or in the air; the extent to which advancement of Negroes in the ranks of commissioned officers has been limited; the extent to which the armed services are failing to utilize the full professional and technical skills of Negroes; and the relation of the system of segregated units to the effective utilization and appropriate placement of persons on the basis of individual competency and merit.

APR 16 1943

The resolution empowers this special sub-committee to carry on hearings, aided by a subpoena power, throughout the 78th Congress whether it be in session or recessed or adjourned.

Informed of the senator's resolution, Judge Hastie commented that "public hearings of the facts is in the best tradition of the American way of doing things."

Visiting Women Are Required to Carry Health Cards

By ALFRED A. DUCKETT
[Exclusively for AFRO-AMERICAN]

JUN 12 1943

SAVANNAH, Ga. — Here is how the "white supremacy" city of Savannah, Ga., is sabotaging the war effort and undermining the morale of colored soldiers of Camp Stewart in order to maintain the status quo.

The first thing you see when getting off the train in Savannah is a large, dingy waiting room divided into two sections. One is marked "For Colored People Only." The other section, "For White Only."

There is a glass enclosed lounge and reading room for "white soldiers," and one in the rear for "colored soldiers."

Can't Use Lavatory

There are three lavatories. One is "for white women only," the second is "for white men only," and the third is "for colored people." And the third lavatory was out of order when your correspondent got into Savannah and when he left.

The situation of the lavatories is a fair indication of how things work in and around Savannah for America's black fighting men.

Vice Drive

The city is conducting what is cynically called a "vice drive." Health cards are issued to women, attesting that they are not infected with venereal disease. While ostensibly this drive is directed toward the whole citizenry, actually it is an audacious plan to intimidate colored troops.

Colored soldiers and their female companions are stopped on Savannah Streets. The woman is asked to show her health card. If she has one, everything is fine. If she hasn't, regardless of the excuse—regardless of whether or not she is a wife, mother or sweetheart visiting the soldier and unaware of the vice drive, she is promptly arrested.

Women arrested are examined for venereal disease. If found to be infected, they are sent to a farm on the outskirts of the town for examination. If found to be perfectly healthy, the city of Savannah, in order to avoid suits for false arrest, charges the victim with disorderly conduct and fines her $10.

Women Asked to Stay Away

The Savannah Branch of the NAACP under brilliant Dr. Ralph Gilbert, has just recently made representations with the police department, pointing out that innocent women are thus being subjected to criminal records.

This is the reason why colored soldiers at Stewart are none too anxious to have the folk back home visit them. They are unwilling to have their mothers, wives or girl-friends subjected to this peculiar twist of Georgia justice.

Brutality of Police

Civilian police of the city of Savannah have bad blood for colored soldiers. No better evidence of this can be found than in the admission of Commanding Officer William Ochs of Camp Stewart that he had been forced to take measures to have a Savannah policeman suspended for brutally beating a colored sergeant who had a stellar record at the camp.

There are two places for recreation for the colored troops in the city. One is the USO center, run by the Catholic Community Service Society and presided over by Herbert Farley. This is located at 902 W. Thirty-sixth Street. The Savannah Soldiers' Service Society is located on Thirty-seventh Street and Geechie Road.

Citizens Have No Rights

Savannah police recognize no civil rights in so far as colored people are concerned. One Camp Stewart soldier related his visit to a young lady in the city. The couple was seated on the porch, the girl's mother sleeping in the house. It was about ten o'clock at night and a police car drove up, two officers inside.

The policemen entered the house and proceeded to conduct a thorough search on the grounds that "someone had told them" that the residents of the house "handled numbers." This unorthodox procedure is part and parcel of the abortive vice drive.

This being Savannah, there is naturally segregation and discrimination throughout the city, in the movie houses, taxicab service and every other phase of life.

The Bus Problem

Among the more serious problems which bedevil colored soldiers is that of transportation. Camp Stewart is forty-three miles from Savannah. The only connecting link is the Greyhound Bus Terminal, which transports the men to Hinesville where they take the B & M bus for a distance of several miles.

The Greyhound offices have ticket windows for white and for colored. There is one man handling tickets for both, and colored people invariably wait until all whites have been taken care of, regardless of whether or not the whites arrive last.

The Ticket Window

The writer all but missed an afternoon bus to the camp one day because of this vicious system. When I arrived at the ticket window there were two whites at the "white" office. By the time the ticket-seller had finished with them, ten or twelve more had collected, and my constant demand to be waited on and reminder that my bus was just outside was studiedly ignored.

Very often colored soldiers on furloughs or short passes are thus delayed in returning to camp on time. Stiff penalties are dished out by the camp when soldiers overstay their leave several hours and no consideration is made for the transportation conditions nor has there been any attempt on the part of camp officials to correct them or devise means of their own.

Penalized Five Days

One colored sergeant of the 846th who has no other mark on his record, was penalized five days of confinement for being six hours late purely as a result of the transit conditions. Private John Brown of the Headquarters Battery of the same regiment was ordered off a bus by a Greyhound driver to make room for a white passenger.

For White Soldiers

As to the B & M bus line, the company has a terminal on Bull and Liberty Streets in Savannah. A colored officer walked into the terminal recently where he found white soldiers lounging about, reading. He was approached by one of the employees of the company who asked what he wanted.

"I'd like to get some information about the bus schedule," the lieutenant said.

"This place is for white soldiers, not for n-----s," the employee replied. "Get out."

Army Could Help

While the policy of the bus company is not controlled by camp officials, soldiers at Stewart feel that something could be done by post officials to remedy conditions. Usually there is one bus for colored, four for white soldiers leaving the camp. Camp officials say that the strength of colored troops is forty per cent of the camp. This ratio, then, would certainly indicate that they are not getting the "equal opportunity" which Southern "liberals" are always advocating as an excuse for segregation.

Alleged Winking

There is also the old bugaboo of whites suspecting that colored men are interested in their women. A Southern soldier was arrested early in May for allegedly waving and winking at a white woman who passed in a car. He was given three months in the Savannah prison.

In light of these conditions, as one of the colored soldiers expressed it:

"On week ends, when we are given passes to leave camp, we hardly know whether or not to go to Savannah. We don't know which is worse—staying on the grounds, or taking a chance on running into all kinds of jim crow and possibly serious trouble."

Segregation In Armed Forces Is Attacked

Journal and Guide

Says South Is Unable To Provide Equal Facilities

Norfolk, Virginia

MAY 29 1943

RICHMOND, Va., (ANP) — Dixie race prejudice is being spread through out the nation by the south itself, Dr. Broadus Mitchell, noted white liberal and lecturer in economics at New York University, told Richmond's Committee on Constitutional Rights at its annual meeting on May 13.

Dr. Mitchell, son of Dr. S. C. Mitchell of the University of Richmond, also blasted race segregation in the armed forces in his address entitled "Race Discrimination in Wartime."

Members of the committee include distinguished persons of both races, among them Virginius Dabney, noted white editor, and Arthur P. Davis, and President J. M. Ellison of Virginia Union University.

Describing himself as "a southern expatriate and refugee from the south," Dr. Mitchell spoke of the impatience and stupidity of war and of the Negro's progress since the Civil War. However, this progress was not as great as that of some immigrants who came here from Europe at the rate of 1,000,000 a year and whose descendants are now indistinguishable from the general run of the population.

The speaker asserted "segregation is nothing but discrimination," and as long as the races are separated in the south there will be discrimination because the south is financially unable to furnish equal facilities.

The Negro shuns aggressive action because this may lead to race riots which, horrible as they may be, are "trifling as compared with what we're doing in the name of freedom," Dr. Mitchell declared, adding that "we fight Hitler because of the way he treats the Jews and Catholics, but we continue to assign a large percentage of our population to a disagreeable role."

DRAFT UNEMPLOYMENT

Race troubles in New York and elsewhere were blamed on the restlessness of young Negroes with 1-A cards in their pockets "who aren't called to service because jim crow regiments can't be formed fast enough, and can't find jobs because employers won't hire persons of their draft status."

The only non-jim crow war service is in officers training camps where Negroes and whites eat, sleep, study and drill together, without friction, he asserted.

"There are now more than 450,000 Negroes in the armed forces, with some 60,000 or more abroad," declared Dr. Mitchell. "But most of these are in labor battalions. Negroes captured by Rommell in North Africa were armed only with picks and shovels. Only recently has the Navy opened combat services to Negroes, but this service is aboard jim crow boats.

"The air force was closed for a long time, and when the doors were opened 50 were accepted and trained for pursuit work at Tuskegee. None has seen actual combat because somebody neglected to train ground crews for them."

In the auxiliary services, only the WAACs accept Negroes and these are segregated. Despite the need for nurses, only 200 colored women have been commissioned he averred, because there is a hesitancy about commissioning a Negro woman.

UNSCIENTIFIC IGNORANCE

"The USO practices segregation," Dr. Mitchell went on, "but the unkindest blow of all is the segregation of Negro blood in blood banks. This is the result of unscientific ignorance, because there is no difference between the blood of a healthy Negro and a healthy white man."

The CIO drew praise for its liberal attitude toward Negroes, and the speaker said it is doing much to break down southern segregation by organizing southern white men and Negroes into the same unions.

"The south has lived by exploitation, and the drive to do away with the benefits of the Farm Security Administration is led by the lords of the land, who do not want anything that will better the position of those who do their work for them," he charged. In this way the south is imposing its prejudice on "the entire nation," asserted Dr. Mitchell.

Army Jim Crow Draws Fire

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.

JUN 10 1943

— By B. M. PHILLIPS

CHICAGO — America's celebration of the Fourth of July reveals to the colored soldier more than anything else the injustice and cruelty to which he is the constant victim, Colden Brown of New York City told the March-on-Washington Convention Friday.

Speaking during the Town Hall meeting on "Jim Crow in Uniform," Mr. Brown, who is chairman of the Winfred Lynn case committee, said:

"America, your celebration to the colored soldier is a shame, your boasted liberty an unholy license, your national greatness swelling vanity, your shouts of rejoicing empty and heartless, your denunciation of fascism brass-fronted impudence, your prayers, hymns, sermons, and thanksgiving, with all your religious parade and solemnity, are to him mere bombasts, fraud and deception, a thin veil to cover up crimes that would disgrace a nation of savages."

Discusses Lynn Case

In discussing the Winfred Lynn case, Mr. Brown told the convention that Mr. Lynn's refusal to serve in a segregated army is important. The fight will be taken to the Supreme Court this fall.

If the Supreme Court rules agaist Mr. Lynn, he said, it will in effect, say to thirteen million colored people that America does not believe in the principles for which we are allegedly fighting.

If, on the other hand, the Supreme Court agrees with Winfred Lynn that he should not be forced to serve in a jim-crow army, it will mean, Mr. Brown pointed out, that the army, navy and their auxiliary services must end segregation and admit all persons without regard to race, color and creed.

Vincent Baker of NYC, director of the National Modern Trend Movement, told the convention that if Americans are to get aroused over the slaughter of their troops by the Japanese they should also get emotional over the slaughter of colored American troops in U.S. army camps.

Discrimination of Soldiers In Alaskan Camp Investigated

Washington Tribune
Washington, D. C.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—An investigation by the Wad Department of the treatment of Negro troops stationed in Alaska was sought this week by the NAACP.

In a letter to Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, the NAACP stated that it had received from a number of sources reports alleging that Negro troops in Alaska are victims of widespread discriminatory treatment.

One allegation has it that Negro troops are confined to camp and have been denied passes to visit some Alaskan cities. It is asserted that this condition has extended far beyond any quarantine period and is an established practice.

It is also reported that the men are discriminated against within Army camps in that they are segregated into a theatre "for colored" and refused service at post exchanges except one designated "for colored."

~~Army~~ Court Martial Way Denounced

BY VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS

Tribune
Chicago,

Savannah, Ga.)—A strongly worded resolution was directed last week to the Veterans of Foreign Wars national encampment in New York by the Charles L. Hunt post, No. 2024; roundly scoring the army court martial policy and segregation and discrimination practiced by the army command and civilians against Negro soldiers.

Calling the recent court martial of Col. William Colman, former commander of Selfridge Field, Michigan "outrageous and a "travesty upon justice" the resolution said that "millions of Americans are concerned with the type of leadership in our army if high ranking officers could indulge in drunkeness while on duty, especially if intoxication were to be used as an excuse for the wanton shooting of a private soldier." For his crime of shooting Pvt. Willie McRae, Colman was merely reduced to the rank of a captain.

Negroes are alarmed over the policies of the army with respect to Negro troops which allows them to be "abused by our white commanding officers" and by civilians in many sections of the country, despite the fact they are in the "uniform of the United States" and pledged to fight for democracy stated the paper.

The resolution, presented to the national body by Lt. Col. Louis Johnson, was signed by Dr Clarence Payne, Lester Milsap, Otho B. Kerr, Thomas Miller, and Johnson. Declaring that the whole army policy of segregation is wrong the resolution pointedly asked:

"What excuse is the war department giving for training our famous 8th regiment for over two years and then refusing to send them to the front? What reason is given that the 3rd division which, according to the inspector general's office, has been trained up to modern standards for battle remaining on these shores? They lie in semi-activity at Fort Huachuca. Why are hundreds of Negro medical officers assigned to non-medical posts, as sanitary engineers to combat mosquitoes or dredge swamps, when many of them according to high standards of medical science should be rendering service according to their ability in the hospitals and field stations of the nation?

"Why is it that high ranking Negro field officers are kept in innocus positions where their voice of command is stiffiled reduced to an insufficient whisper? Why is it that our northern boys are sent to southern camps and refused not only the protection of the civil authorities, but also that of military authorities, under whose service many of them serve by necessity? Why is it that from all portions of the country come reports and letters from our soldiers that they are not being fed well? Why is it that 90 per cent of the Negro troops on foreign soil are used as labor battalions?"

Terming the general army set up as regards Negroes "a pattern of discrimination and humiliation and violation of every sense of decency toward a people whose trusting faith in the destiny of their country has never been questioned," the resolution urged all whites and Negroes to indicate their protest to the President, and the chiefs of staffs of the army and navy. If this is too much to ask of the men who form our policies at home "what evidence have the darker nations of the world to believe that justice will be administered to them" concluded the paper.

Soldiers Segregated At Hospital

Defender
Chicago, Ill.

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — (ANP) — The Northington General Military hospital here last week yielded to pressure from irate white citizens and instituted a system of jim crow among its soldier-patients.

Victims of this practice are 30 soldiers recently arrived from the station hospital at Fort McClellan, Ala.

Specifically the charges are that Negro patients have been:

1. Piled into separate wards; 2. Denied use of latrines used by whites; 3. Roped off in mess halls; 4. Barred from the P.X. (post exchange) except for a brief hour during the day.

When the soldiers first arrived here they were accommodated without segregation, but immediately towns people began nasty mutterings and army authorities succumbed to their demands.

Negro army personnel also complain that while boarding the train en route here from Fort McClellan they were herded into the sooty, dingy, squeaky, day coach, but that white patients were allowed to travel in comfortable Pullman coaches. The treatment accorded the soldiers at Northington is similar to that at the station hospital at Fort McClellan where they are segregated in wards, and denied joint accommodations in the board meetings, Red Cross recreation center, and mess halls.

NAACP Calls on FDR To Review Levy Case

Prejudice May Have Figured In Conviction, Official Declares

By JAMES A. WECHSLER
PM's National Editor

PM
New York, N. Y.

PM Exclusive

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People today urged President Roosevelt to review the record of the court-martial which resulted in conviction of Alton Levy, former union organizer.

In a letter to Roosevelt, Roy Wilkins, NAACP assistant secretary, stressed the disclosure that the presiding officer of the court had declared, 48 hours prior to the conviction, that Levy was innocent of the charges. He was subsequently convicted "without the introduction of new evidence," Wilkins pointed out.

"The case as it now stands is bound to give the public the impression that the Army command will find a way to punish a soldier who makes critical comment of the mistreatment of Negroes in the Army," the letter said. Wilkins cited Levy's background as a labor organizer, his former connection with the Socialist Party and "the fact that he is a Jew" as ground for "suspicion that the court-martial was dominated by prejudice."

Pardon Urged

He added:

"Certainly if the facts are as they are generally publicly reported, the conclusion is inescapable that the record of the court-martial should be carefully examined to determine if it is a proper case for the exercise of the pardoning power on the grounds:

"1. That Alton Levy did not receive a fair trial.

"2. That there was not sufficient evidence upon which to predicate a finding of guilt."

Army Denial

Wilkins' letter dispelled earlier published reports that the NAACP had decided not to intervene in the Levy case. Since Aug. 16 Levy has been serving a four-month term at hard labor at the Lincoln (Neb.) Air Base after being convicted of circulating "slanderous" rumors about the commanding officer and "false statements" about mistreatment of Negroes.

Responding to inquiries from PM on the case, the War Dept. denied Friday that Levy's concern over treatment of Negroes was involved in the case. It asserted investigation had shown no basis for charges of mistreatment and that Levy had admitted he had not raised the issue with his commanding officers.

Meanwhile, the Workers Defense League, which initiated the campaign in Levy's behalf, disclosed today it had received a response to its protests from Maj. Gen. Myron C. Cramer. Cramer declared that Levy "had a fair trial" and that "the evidence supports and warrants the findings of guilty and the sentence."

Reply Challenged

Challenging this reply Morris Milgram, executive secretary of the WDL, cited the brief submitted to the White House last week by Leon Despres, Chicago attorney, as "answering every point in Maj. Gen. Cramer's letter." Milgram said:

"Despres' brief shows that Levy's conviction was highly irregular, that the evidence warranted neither the finding of guilt nor the sentence, and it shows the importance of the Negro issue in the case. Once the court announced the finding of not guilty, justice demanded an acquittal."

Milgram cited Section 78D of the Army Manual for Courts-Martial which provided that the court may reconsider a finding before it is announced, but presumably not afterward.

CIO Local Accuses Ford Of Job Bias

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

DETROIT, Sept. 2 — (ANP) — Charges that the Ford Motor company is violating the President's order prescribing discrimination in the employment of Negroes were made last week by the Ford Local 600 (CIO) in a brief filed with Fr. Francis J. Haas, chairman, FEPC.

"The present policy of refusal to place Negro applicants is in fact a contributing factor to the 'racial tenseness' of which the Ford management is apprehensive," stated the document. It charged further that the company is "pursuing a policy deliberately aimed at denying jobs to hundreds upon hundreds of Negro workers, a large number of them trained at skills sorely needed in war production in the Rouge plant."

The union also accused the motor company of aggrevating the housing shortage, transportation, and food situations by hiring migrant labor it had advertised for in Kentucky and Tennessee newspapers while denying work to available Negroes.

Army Hits 'Sawdust Trail' On Question Of Jim Crow Practices Hurting War Effort

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

OCT 2 1943

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30—The United States Army has hit the sawdust trail on the question of race. Army officials, of course, will not admit this. They would say that the Army is engaging in business as usual and that there never was any cause for alarm about treatment of Negroes and other racial minorities in the Army. But evidence continues to pile up to prove that high ranking officials in the War Department and General Staff officers in the Army have come to realize that jim-crow practices in the army hold back the war effort.

The latest concrete evidence of the above statement is found in the publication by the Army War College Library on September 10 of a selected bibliography on race relations, intended for circulation among and the education of the officer personnel. The whole tone of this document is set by its publication of an article from the August issue of the Infantry Journal, which states:

"Sometimes the prejudice against Negroes flares up in the Army. It is not a problem, however, in a camp where it is well understood that a soldier in the United States uniform is a soldier, not a white or Negro, Christian or Jew, rich man or poor, but a soldier, and as such is worthy of respect."

LIST BOOKS FOR ARMY OFFICERS

After publishing this excerpt from Infantry Journal the Army War College publication lists a series of books and magazine articles which it urges Army officers to read as being "of timely and professional interest to all army officers."

Marked in the list as "very important articles on race relations" are articles in the August and September 1943 issues of Scientific Monthly by Dr. Wilton M. Krogman and Dr. Robert Redfield of the University of Chicago. These are some typical excerpts from the articles recommended by the Army for reading by its officers.

From Dr. Krogman's article: "In recent years German anthropologists have, as we know, advanced preposterous claims of Nordic or 'Aryan' superiority. Such claims have no basis in fact."

From Dr. Redfield's article: "When the rise of the cotton industry induced Southern leaders before the Civil War to stop apologizing for slavery and to begin defending it, it was asserted that the Negro lacked the native intelligence to be more than a slave. It was said the low skull of the Negro pressed upon his brain and prevented him from becoming intelligent.

SUPPORT PREJUDICE THROUGH SCIENCE

"It was not, of course, the Negro's skull that pressed upon him. It was slavery and ignorance that pressed upon him. But the skull got the blame. The skulls always do. When people have prejudices it is convenient to support them by referring to the will of God or the wisdom of science."

It can be stated on good authority that this action by the Army War College is neither the first nor the last step to be taken by high army officials to change racial attitudes of its officers towards Negro troops. For example, at the beginning of the building up a large army through peace time conscription the stock reply of high ranking army officials to demands for an end to army segregation was "that the army was not engaged in sociological experiments and that segregation of troops had furnished the only practical way of army life." It is significant that a few weeks ago, however, in response to a question from The Pittsburgh Courier, Assistant Secretary of War John J. McCloy described training prospects for Negro bombardiers and navigators and three times in a 150 word written answer stressed the fact that the Negro troops would be trained together with white soldiers.

SOME PERTINENT FACTORS

Through investigation of discontent among Negro soldiers conducted by Brigadier General Benjamin O. Davis, Sr., and Truman K. Gibson, civilian aide to the Secretary of War, constructive criticism by the Negro press, the existence of a pending Senate resolution to investigate Army jim crow practices introduced by Senator Sheridan Downey of California, are thought to have been some of the factors which have convinced War Department officials of the need for basic corrections in the treatment accorded Negro soldiers.

Mistreatment of Negro enlisted men by white officers, failure to promote Negro officers, slowness of sending Negro troops into actual combat, and widespread and bitterly resented lack of transportation and recreational facilities for Negro enlisted men quartered in Southern camps, represent the most frequent type of complaints reaching officials here.

The concern shown by Army officials over these complaints has been marked in recent weeks. Negro newspapermen have been invited to conferences with Major General Surles of the Army Public Relations Office. Other Negro leaders have made recommendations to the Army. Promotions of competent Negro officers—still too slight to be called a trend—have occurred. And finally this latest attempt to condition the thinking of tens of thousands of white officers having command of Negro troops is significant.

Army Officials We Don't Need

The Northwest Enterprise
Seattle, Washington

SEP 29 1943

A colonel went to the University of Maryland recently to address the faculty and others in reference to a course of instruction the university was instituting for army students. When he had completed his explanation of the course to the faculty, one of its members asked the colonel if Negro army students were going to be admitted to it. The colonel replied with a leering smile, "No. We don't have enough trees around here to hang 'em from."

Then the colonel guffawed along with some of the faculty members, who thought that the high army officer had made a good and appropriate crack about Negroes. Of course, some of the faculty resented the colonel's joke; in fact, a few of them were outraged. However nobody took the colonel to task for his insult of 13,000,000 U. S. citizens.

This story is significant and important because it emphasizes once more the attitude of many white Americans toward their colored brothers. It indicates how difficult it will be for anybody to effect racial amity and understanding in this country.

It goes without saying that the superior colonel should have been reported to the War Department and immediately dismissed from the army for his vile statement about Negroes. If, for example, this officer were assigned to command Negro troops it is plain to see just what kind of officer he would make. Unfortunately, he is similar to many white officers who do command Negro troops and who have made a mess of it.

We hope that the War Department transfers every officer from the command of Negro troops whenever it determines that he is biased or prejudiced. Meantime, the War Department must not wait until serious trouble arises involving Negro troops before doing so. Of course, the Department really should fire every officer who refuses to accept and treat Negro soldiers as equal to any other in every respect.

It is a sad note on our so-called fight for the fabled Four Freedoms when a colonel in the U. S. Army goes out of his way to insult persons comprising one-tenth of the nation. It goes to show that we have entirely too much work to do at home ot bring democracy to the people before we talk about taking it abroad. In fact, no sane people anywhere else in the world should want the U. S. brand of democracy. It is often as putrid and vicious as fascism.—Amsterdam News.

Negro Press Roused At Army 'Directive'

Daily Worker
New York, N.Y.

By Eugene Gordon

SEP 4 1943

The Baltimore Afro-American, a leading Negro newspaper, was shocked and angry as it exposed this week a "directive" on Negro soldiers by Brigadier General E. A. Stockton, commanding officer of Camp Stewart, Ga.

Camp Stewart is the place where Negro troops, breaking under the pressure of months of indignities, were recently disciplined for insubordination. The Afro-American's publication of the "directive" casts additional light on the soldiers' discontent.

The "directive," according to the paper's Savannah (Ga.) correspondent, "is a 12-page mimeographed pamphlet" titled "An Educational Program for Colored Troops" and is in three parts, all equally insulting to the Negro people: (1) a general outline, (2) material for a talk to officers of Negro organizations and (3) material for a talk to Negro troops.

It was supposedly sent to "brigade, group and battalion commanders" and to all officers of Negro troops.

Urban League Head Accuses Memphis USES Of Bias

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

SEP 4 1943

MEMPHIS, Sept. 2 — (ANP) — While war industries in the Memphis area are daily pleading for workers, the local United States Employment Service office is practicing job discrimination against Negro applicants, Benjamin R. Bell, executive secretary of the Memphis Urban charged this week.

Secretary Bell in support of his charges pointed out that almost daily, other workers are imported from neighboring states and cities, including white women workers, while thousands of Memphis Negroes are denied war work, and deliberately restricted to the menial tasks of maids, floor sweepers, janitors and common laborers.

FILE COMPLAINT

Victims of the local USES discriminatory practices were urged by Bell to file their complaints with the Urban league office.

"The seriousness of the situation is reflected in the frustration and disappointment of hundreds of Negroes, both male and female, who are forced to do menial jobs at lower wages which affect their family, religious, home and health life." Bell said "Meanwhile, industry in Memphis through the white press cries daily for badly needed war-workers."

[illegible] AND CUSTOM

The [illegible]-American quotes the "directive" as saying that the laws of Georgia provide for segregation, "which means different place for colored and whites," adding that "where the law leaves off custom continues."

"Thus, there are separate schools, different places to sit on trains and buses, different hotels and cafes, and so on. Whether or not they did this where you came from, and no matter what you think about it, it is your duty to do exactly what the law says and to accept the customs of the people while you are in Georgia."

General Stockton in his preachment to the Negro soldiers tells them, according to the story, that the law "means about the same as the Golden Rule: 'Do unto others as you would have them do unto you.'"

Quotations from the "directive" continue:

SEP 4 1943

"Be polite and respectful in any talk you have with white people.

"You are in the South. Things have been as they are in the South for a long time, and they will probably continue to be that way for a long time.

"If you start any arguments or disturbances you will get nowhere, settle nothing, and get yourself into trouble.

WHEN IN ROME . . .

"It was a pretty smart man who said: 'When in Rome, do as the Romans do.'"

The General is quoted as telling white officers in command of Negro troops to talk on the subject covered in the "directive" at least once every eight weeks.

Some of the Negro troops, the officers are told, will come from Howard University and from Tuskegee, but, "for the most part, colored soldiers are less able to assimilate knowledge rapidly and accurately."

He adds that because of this "fact" the officers must be "extremely patient," for "the psychology of many colored people is such that they will say they understand when they don't. . . . Some colored people are more like children than any other people in their degree of emotional development."

Apparently aware that restrictive and oppressive treatment might result in outbreaks, the General advises his officers, says the story, "to know what your men are doing and thinking all the time." And here is how:

SPIES AND STOOGES

"The [illegible] helpful thing is constant observation. . . . You can use your S2 Section. . . . Select as secret agents qualified and patriotic men. Instruct these men carefully and secretly. Give them code names and have them MAIL their reports to you except in emergencies.

"Develop an unwritten SOP for times of stress, a procedure to secure safety of your command quietly and calmly. With respect to arms and ammunition, vigilance should never be relaxed.

"Examine reading matter appearing among your men. Some of it, often innocent appearing, may be seditious and highly inflammatory."

The Negro press, carrying stories of mistreatment of Negro troops in the South, is barred from most camps as "seditious and inflammatory."

The Afro-American story declares that "in their talks to soldiers, Camp Stewart officers are instructed to remind them that they were once slaves [illegible] could be sold or given away, seized for debt, or sold down the river. Slaves "had no vote, couldn't tell their story in court, or lawfully marry." They "could be punished or killed by the master." They "had no chance to read or write."

THE NEW SLAVERY

Nevertheless, according to this newspaper expose, General Stockton's "directive" declares that "most slave-owners were good-hearted Christians, who liked for everybody around them to be happy." The slave-owners were, "as a rule, good to their slaves."

The reason for all this reminder of slavery days seems to reveal itself in the following paragraph of the General's "directive" to the soldiers:

"Where [illegible] slave had practically no rights, you now have as many rights as anyone under the law."

The story goes on:

"General Stockton advised officers to tell their men that there is no discrimination in the Army. By 'no discrimination' he said he means that everybody got the same pay, the same food, medical care, barracks, movies and service clubs."

He told the men further:

"Some of you may not understand why you can't go everywhere white folks go in Georgia. It's because the law says so."

And if you think that's bad, the General says, imagine what it would be if Hitler came. Hitler would, according to the Afro-American story quoting the General, destroy the Negro. Georgia only segregates him. So:

"'Accept [illegible] customs of the people while you are in Georgia.

"'Be polite and respectful . . with white people.

"'In short, remember your manners.'"

Rallies Behind Jewish Soldier Who Hit J. Crow

Atlanta, Georgia

WASHINGTON (A N P)—Court-martailed and given four months in jail, stripped of his stripes and fined to boot all because he objected to the dirty break Negroes are getting in camp, Sergeant Alton Levy of the Lincoln [illegible] base, Lincoln, Nebraska, has received the support of the NAACP and the International Ladies Garment Workers union in an appeal that has been made to Secretary Henry L. Stimson, it has been learned.

The young Jewish soldier, a former organizer for the ILGWU in New York, was punished about three weeks ago when he was called on the carpet by army officals at the Lincoln base to make explanation of a set of chargs that were made against him.

LETTER TO FRIEND

In the words of Sergeant—now Private Levy, written to a friend:

"The lieutenant colonel cleared his throat and then said, 'Sergeant Levy, you are charged with a very serious offense and before you answer any questions you are to know that we have sworn statements concerning certain remarks attributed to you.'

"What he read were statements allegedly made by me to 'witnesses.' There were remarks about the general and his wife, about the running of the post, about Lincoln, Nebraska, politics and the effect of it upon the post, about the Negroes and the way they are mistreated and a host of others. What seemed to be causing the greatest concern were my statements about the handlng of the Negro situation. The only statements I made around here were about the handling of the Negro troops."

ASSIGNED TO NEGRO UNIT

Actually, Levy was finally assigned to the Negro quarters of the camp where he was put in charge. He remained in that section because none of the other white officers wanted the detail. He tried to train the Negro troops and to improve their illiteracy. His sympathy is what brought him into disfavor.

His conviction before the court-martial is said to have been based upon the testimony of a white WAC who reported to have had dates with soldiers at various times. She is said to have turned in six of them, of which five were obviously Jewish.

The NAACP has become interested and in seeking a rehearing by Secretary Stimson.

Court Martial Called Blunder In Sentencing Private Over Dance Mate

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., (ANP)—Hiding its actions under the convenient cloak of "military code, regulations and tradition," a court martial last week ordered a white aviation student at the U. S. Army pre-flight training center located at West Virginia University to be deprived of one month's pay. The reason the flying cadet danced with a "colored girl in view of those present" while attending a dance in the Morgan Hotel ballroom.

Captain Walter C. Troutman, commander of the 48th College Training Detachment, who ordered the court martial and penalty, however, has been overruled by the Eastern Flying Command at Maxwell Field, Montgomery, Ala., and the sentence ordered vacated.

Story Well Guarded

News of the incident which occurred November 5, has been closely guarded by military censors, although personnel at the encampment knew of the affair. So well was the story guarded that this mining community and even university officials were ignorant of the development.

Pvt. Herman P. Suiter, 25, of Louisville, was accused of "willfully and wrongfully to the prejudice of good order and military discipline" conducting himself "in a manner to bring discredit upon the military service by dancing with a colored girl" in public. The incident allegedly occurred at the hostelry where a dance was being held. Suiter is said to have invited the girl, Miss Dorothy Johnson, an employe of the hotel, to dance with him. When Miss Johnson accepted, the two took a turn around the floor.

Suiter, who completed [illegible] five months' training last week along with 60 other cadets of the 300 stationed here, has been transferred to Nashville for assignment elsewhere.

Case "Improperly" Handled

Captain Troutman, a former football player at the University of Georgia, admitted the case was "improperly" handled by him. "The only issue with me,' 'he said, "was Pvt. Suiter's action in bringing an uninvited person who was improperly dressed to the party. But the whole case is now closed and there's no sentence against the boy." The commander added he would have acted similarly had the girl been white.

Case Is Placed Before Secretary Of War Stimson

Daily World

Atlanta, Georgia

WASHINGTON, DEC 7 1943 — (SNS) — The oase of Pvt. Rieves Bell, who was beaten by four white men in Starksville, Miss., because he would not take off his uniform, and who was sentenced to three and one-half years in the state penitentiary by a Mississippi court, has been placed before Secretary of War Stinson by the Washington Bureau of the NAACP.

Pvt. Bell who was attached to a Quartermaster Battalion at Fort Myles Standish, Massachusetts, was on furlough and was visiting his parents in Starksville.

TALKING TO GIRLS

The record shows that on his first evening in town he was standing on the street corner cahtting with two colored girls when four white men passed by. One of them pushed Pvt. Bell, but Bell said nothing. A second push was given him and he was asked, "Where did you get that uniform?"

Bell replied that Uncle Sam had given him the uniform, whereupon he was told, "Take off that soldier suit." Naturally Bell refused and a scuffle ensued in which one of the white boys calims to have been cut by the soldier.

Bell was arrested and jailed. Military police entered into the case but did not take Bell into military custody.

GIBSON CONFUSED

Pvt. Bell's commanding officer was notified of his predicament but still the military authorities did not take charge. An examination into the case was made by Truman K. Gibson, Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, who told the NAACP there was some confusion about the notification to military authorities.

The next news was that of Bell's conviction and sentence to three and one-half years in prison. The NAACP letter to Secretary Stimson states:

"We understand that the War Department has already taken the position that all soldiers are to be tried by military tribunals, and that only for very [illegible] reasons will they be [illegible] to civilian authorities. In view of the fact that military policemen were at the scene of the arrest, and the commanding officer of Fort Myles Standish had notice of this man's detention, may we inquire why the military did not take jurisdiction n this case?"

Military Hospital Adopts Jim Crow

TUSCALOOSA, Ala.—(ANP)—Thirty soldiers sent from For McClellan hospital last week were jim crowed at the Northington General Military Hospital, allegedly at the insistence of white citizens.

The men, though treated democratically on arrival, allegedly were later separated in wards roped off during mess, denied use of regular latrines, and barred from the post exchange except for one hour daily.

Army personnel traveling here from the fort report jim crow railroad tactics are still used. Treatment at Northington is similar to that at Fort McClellan's hospital, where eyewitnesses say discrimination is widely practiced.

Gibson Blames Segregation for Unrest Among Colored Soldiers

Washington Tribune   Washington, D. C.

JUL 10 1943

By TRUMAN K. GIBSON, Jr.
Acting Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War

I have been seriously concerned by the many recent reports of violence involving Negro military personnel. The varying accounts in the Negro press about the incidents have sometimes given them a darker shade thereby increasing racial tensions, causing great anxiety among relatives and friends of [illegible] men in Army camps throughout the South and also adversely affecting the morale of many soldiers. I realize a contributing factor is a lack of real information.

It is not my purpose to minimize any of these incidents. They all are deplorable. Their underlying causes call for vigorous action through every means that may aid in their eradication. But some of the reports are so utterly without foundation in fact that I have decided to informally share with you such information as is available at Camp Stewart, Georgia and Camp Van Dorn, Mississippi, about the occurrences.

The Fourth Service Command is conducting an investigation of Camp Stewart. The disturbance there on the night of June 9 is being investigated by a board of officers. Lieutenant Colonel Maurice Moses, a Negro officer, is a member of the board of inquiry. Until these investigations are completed, it will be improper for me to comment upon their subject matter. However, in the affair Colonel Moses acquitted himself with distinction. The colored officers generally held their men together.

Brigadier General Benjamin O. Davis and Lieutenant Colonel Davis G. Arnold, of the Inspector General's Office, made an inspection and investigation at Camp Stewart during the period from May 17 to 21. Their investigation and inspection resulted from numerous letters written by some of the military personnel to various newspapers, organizations and individuals and referred to the War Department.

Dissatisfaction and unrest among the colored military personnel at Camp Stewart was found to be due in large measure to the segregation laws of the State of Georgia and the restrictions imposed upon Negroes in the South.

The only nearby town large enough to afford colored soldiers at Camp Stewart any substantial entertaiment and recreational facilities is Savannah, about forty-three miles from the camp. The first source of trouble is encountered when colored soldiers use the Savannah bus line.

All the complaints of colored military personnel at Camp Stewart was the subject of conferences between the representatives of the Inspector General's Office and the higher officers of the Training Center and Post commands.

The principal complaints related to the inadequacy of the Savannah bus line to accommodate colored soldiers at the rush hours and discrimination against Negroes in the use of buses. The failure to provide overnight lodgings and meals at reasonable prices. in Savannah for colored soldiers, as compared with facilities of this nature which are available for white soldiers; abusive language and unnecessary roughness on the part of civilian police and possibly the Military Police in Savannah, and the State law having for its purpose the checking of venereal diseases whereby women accompanied by colored soldiers are frequently arrested if they cannot produce health certificates.

The War Department is very much interested in ways and means of remedying the situation at Camp Stewart with regard to the colored complement. Before the recent outbreak certain steps had been taken to improve the situation. An increased effort was being made to obtain additional entertainment and recreational facilities for colored troops when off the post. Pass privileges were being staggered so as to prevent overcrowding of transportation facilities between Camp Stewart and Savannah and overcrowding of the entertainment and recreational facilities in Savannah and adjacent towns. Colored military police are beinig employed at entrucking points in greater numbers.

The 364th Infantry regiment has been involved in several prior disturbances. The intra-racial fight at Phoenix, Arizona, in which several persons were killed was the most serious.

The situation at Camp Van Dorn is more difficult. It needs further study before there can a determination of what corrective and disciplinary measures should be taken. Magnifying the situation, however, is not helpful. Nor should approval in any way be given to riotous conduct on the part of the military unit which has been the center of the disturbances.

Since the arrival of this particular unit at Camp Van Dorn there have been a series of incidents on the post of a disorderly nature. On one occasion, a number of men from this organization visited Centreville and marched around the town in formation, using indecent and profane language. Civil police, aided by a number of deputized citizens armed with shotguns, arrested this group. Upon arrival of the military police officer, upon his orders, these men immediately dispersed and returned to camp.

As far as the information in this office shows, one soldier (not three as reported by one newspaper) was killed by a law enforcement officer outside the post. He was Private William Walker. According to the report of the investigation, he was accosted by a military policeman because he was improperly uniformed and had no pass; that following a brief argument, Private Walker assaulted the military police and was attempting to take his pistol, when the county sheriff arrived on the scene.

The sheriff reported that upon his arrival the military police was on his back in a "jeep" with Private Walker on top of him. Upon seeing the sheriff, Walker allegedly jumped out of the car and made a lunge for him and, upon refusing to halt when ordered to do so, he was shot and killed by the sheriff.

The company to which the soldier was assigned threatened to break into the supply room for rifles and ammunition. Colonel John F. Goodman, the commanding officer, ordered the firing pins removed from all rifles and an officer guard placed over all supply rooms in the regiment. One company did storm a suppdy room and obtained a number of rifles before arrival of company officers. All of the rifles except two have been found.

A short time later a crowd of several hundred members of this unit assembled near the regimental exchange. A colored riot squad from the Military Police Detachment of the camp was forced to fire into this group in an attempt to stand them off. Private Raymond Johnhson was wounded by this gunfire. The timely arrival of Colonel Goodman and Captain Elmer P. Gibson, colored chaplain, was perhaps the only thing that prevented serious bloodshed.

The offenders in this unit will be disciplined; the better elements, recognized. At the same time every effort will be made to get at the causes of unrest. It is recognized by responsible War Department officials that the punishment of Negro soldiers involved in disturbances of this kind is no permanent solution to the problem of preventing mutinous conduct which no Army would tolerate. By factual reporting of each incident I believe that the Negro press con con- that the Negro press can con- Department and at the same time We have a common interest in folks back home.

I am certain you recognize the general and serious extent of the rapidly increasing racial tension. We have a common inttrest in doing what we can to check this dangerous tendency.

For your information, I have just been advised that the Army intends to assume jurisdiction over Privates Richard P. Adams, John W. Bordenave and Lawrence Mitchell. This case you will recall arose out of a charge by a white girl in Louisiana that these men had raped her in a military reservation. They were convicted and sentenced to death. The Supreme Court recently reversed the sentence because the Federal district court in which the case was tried lacked jurisdiction. The present action of the Army forestalls a trial in the Louisiana State Court.

Army Jim Crow

Our Jack McManus received a V-Mail letter yesterday from Louise Levitas, who used to be his assistant in our film-reviewing department. Miss Levitas joined the American Red Cross some months ago and now is in Australia. Here's what she said:

"Today I went out to meet a hospital train—boys who were hungry for news from back home. One thing I noticed: Negro and white wounded together in the same trains, playing cards together, and on one bunk, a white boy from Alabama—his accent so thick that you could photograph it—and a colored soldier from Jersey. When men have been through war together their whole prejudices seem to vanish and it's as if they never existed."

Louise has something there. The War Dept., which is hog-tieing a large part of the human American productive resources and harming itself by Jim Crow discrimination in the Army, ought to take notice.

I agree with Louise that the terrors of war make prejudices vanish, but that's the hard way to cure them. The prejudices would not be so bitter, anyway, and there wouldn't be so many of them if the Army didn't enforce its Jim Crowism on the colored soldiers who are fighting for this country along with the whites. The War Dept., of course, insists that it doesn't discriminate against the Negro. But ask any colored soldier, or any white soldier who has ever put in so much as five minutes at a camp where colored soldiers also are billeted and you will get the straight answer.

The War Dept. is in a position to do more by one single, simple move than any other single agency I know of to improve the morale of our Negro population, to allay the dangers of such racial outbreak as in Mobile, Los Angeles, Newark, Beaumont, and Detroit, and to increase our fighting strength. All the Department would have to do would be to create a volunteer mixed Army unit—it doesn't even have to be a large one—of white and Negro Americans and demonstrate that this is a democratic Army not ruled by Jim Crow. That simple step would mean more to the Negroes whom I know and have talked to than almost any other single step that can be taken. Men don't have to suffer and die to become tolerant.—JOHN P. LEWIS.

Seamen Expose Bias In U.S. Maritime Service

Defender
Chicago, Ill.

NEW YORK—Point-blank charges, backed by affidavits, were made this week by 10 graduates of the United States Maritime Service Training Station, that, despite their fitness and qualifications, they were told by officials that the only jobs open to them aboard ships, were as messmen and galley attendants.

Target of the men's charges were the USMS, the War Shipping Administration and at least one maritime union. The USMS training station is located at Sheepshead Bay.

Violate President's Orders

In a letter, signed by the 10 Negro graduates and sent to the National Maritime Union, names, dates, places and circumstances are listed which reveal flagrant violations of President Roosevelt's Executive Orders 8802 and 9406, which specifically prohibit "discrimination in essential industries."

The seamen filing the affidavit are Henry H. Williams, Lubin E. Spencer Jr., James E. Bray, Wilton O. Cooper, Alvin A. Watson, Richard J. Stribling, Bryon R. Smith, Chester L. Edward, Sam A. McClellan and Booker T. Brooks.

The letter was sent to the NMU because, they said: "We feel that this condition is none of your making and we appeal for your help in combating this evil situation. One of the tenets of your organization is that there shall be no discrimination because of race or color on ships carrying crews from your union."

"Ship Only As Messmen"

After graduation from the USMA trainng school as ordinary seamen, the marine workers relate that they were quartered at the Chelsea hotel awaiting jobs, but that after five weeks of idleness they decided to act. Spurring their decision was the knowledge that successive classes had been graduated from the school and shipped to various vessels, to other stations, and to the Great Lakes. Shipping authorities informed them they could ship only as messmen.

A spokesman for the NMU stated that efforts are being made to correct the situation that is directly opposed to the principles of the leading union organization of seagoing men.

Some of the discriminations listed in the sensational charges that: "On or about June 29, 2:30 p.m., two men of M. O. Cooper's section which came out June 22, were the last men left, were shipping out. Cooper asked Ensign Brinker why he was not shipped with his classmates as others of a later class were being sent to that particular job. The answer he received was, 'Those men were going out through the Seaman's Pacific union (SUP) and that union did not accept colored.'

White and Colored Lists

"Yeoman Ball was on a deck July 11, 6 p.m., when he was asked by Bray, Ball and Brooks how they stood on the list for shipping out. He took them to the B. deck and to the shipping deck. Looking at the files he told them that Bray was first, Bell eighth and Brooks tenth. When asked if they had those high numbers why had they not been shipped when others who had come after them to the station had been shipped. Yeoman Ball replied, 'There are two separate lists, one colored and one white.'

"July 13, 3:30 p.m., Bray was in the hall of B deck, and was spoken to by Lt. Shookly. 'Bray, you have been here a long time. Why don't you ship out as a messman?'

July 13, 2 p.m., Cooper and Williams were approached by Chief Petty Officer Rothman and were asked, 'How long have you been here? What are your ratings? Well, we have three openings for messmen and there is only one in the house. Would you ship out as messmen?' Five minutes after this conversation a call over the public address system brought at least five messmen to the shipping desk.

"Lt. Sather (Chaplain) on July 14, about 3 p.m., said, 'You fellows still here?' Answered by Cooper and Bray, 'Yes, still here." The chaplain, 'Oh! Want to ship out as admirals instead of messmen'."

War Dept. Still Ignores Questions on Levy Case

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—The War Dept. has still failed to issue its promised reply to questions on the court-martialing and conviction of Alton Levy.

On Sept. 29 PM queried the Department on protests growing out of Levy's trial. He is a former organizer for the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, AFL, and is now serving four months at hard labor at the Lincoln (Neb.) Air Base.

A spokesman for the Department said that detailed questions would have to be submitted in writing to Adjutant-General James A. Ulio. This was done. A week ago PM was assured that answers to the inquiries were being prepared. Last Friday it was stated that the response might be ready within 24 hours.

So far no reply has been issued.

Answers to one of the questions—the specific charges on which Levy was tried—have emerged from other sources. Leon Despres, Chicago attorney who entered the case at the request of Levy's father, revealed that the youth was tried and convicted on three counts: two involving allegedly slanderous remarks about his commanding officer, the third allegedly "false statements" about treatment of Negroes at the Lincoln Air Base.

The War Dept. has not officially released any information on the case. Meanwhile, new disclosures have raised a number of new issues, including the revelation that the presiding officer at the court-martial, speaking for the Court, expressed belief that Levy was innocent just 48 hours before the verdict of guilty was returned.

Here is the text of PM's unanswered inquiry to the War Dept.:

Adjutant-General James A. Ulio, War Dept.,
Pentagon Bldg.,
Arlington, Va.

Dear Gen. Ulio:

I have been informed by Col. Hughes' office that certain questions relating to the case of Alton Levy must be submitted to you in writing. Levy, who is stationed at the Lincoln, Neb., Air Base, was court-martialed in August, reduced from the rank of sergeant to private and sentenced to four months at hard labor. The charge has been publicly made that Levy was punished primarily because of protests he made at staff conferences over alleged mistreatment of Negro soldiers. Could you give us any information on the following questions related to this case:

1. What were the specific charges on which Levy was tried and convicted?
2. Has any inquiry been made with regard to the treatment of Negro soldiers at this base to determine whether statements attributed to Levy were true?
3. Col. Hughes' office informed us that the full court-martial proceedings are secret. Is there any way in which we can obtain access to the testimony on which Levy was convicted?
4. Did the issue of the treatment of Negro soldiers at the Base figure in the proceedings and, if so, was any testimony obtained from the Negroes themselves?
5. What was the locale and personnel of the Army Service Command which reviewed and sustained the court-martial?

In view of the public interest which has been manifested in this case, we would be very grateful for an answer to these inquiries at your earliest opportunity.

Sincerely,
James A. Wechsler, National Editor

Harlem Citizens Blast Bias In WAVES, SPARS

Defender
Chicago, Ill.

JUN 5 1943

NEW YORK — A wave of protest has followed the recent assertion of Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox that Negro leaders favor barring colored women from enlistment in the naval and coast guard reserves, the WAVES and SPARS.

A formal blast, denying the statement, came this week from the City-Wide Citizens Committee on Harlem, which is holding a series of meetings on problems affecting Negroes.

Some time ago the committee sent a letter signed by Algernon D. Black, co-chairman, to Mr. Knox, asking for clarification of the Navy Department's policy with respect to the recruiting of colored women.

On March 5, say the committee members, Mr. Knox answered that the Women's Reserve "shall be composed of women trained and qualified for duty in the shore establishment of the navy, to release male officers and enlisted men of the naval service for duty at sea."

The letter added: "The navy does not have any substantial body of Negro men available or qualified for general service at sea. There is no occasion to replace Negro enlisted personnel by Negro women enlisted in the Women's Reserve."

Paragraph Stirs Protests

Secretary Knox closed his letter with the paragraph that has stirred the "tempest in a teapot," and which stated: "This program is necessarily experimental, but it is not discriminatory, and it has received the approval of Negro organizations and the Negro press generally."

JUN 5 1943

Later, in reply to letters sent to Negro leaders and representative organizations, the City-Wide committee received an avalanche of messages criticizing the assertion made by Mr. Knox.

Councilman Adam Clayton Powell said the Knox statement was "entirely erroneous." He stated that while it is true that the WAVES was established to relieve male officers and enlisted men of the naval service for duty at sea, "it does not say that these men must be supplanted by whites only."

Channing Tobias, senior secretary, Y.M.C.A. National Council, said that Mr. Knox's letter was a "classic illustration of subterfuge and evasion."

Lester B. Granger, executive secretary of the National Urban League, asserted:

"The statement of Secretary Knox that the navy department's program is 'necessarily experimental,' and has received the approval of Negro organizations' certainly does not express the opinion of the National Urban League. Neither does the League approve the over-timid and frequently contradictory policies which the navy department has instituted."

Members of the committee said they would continue the protests and call upon navy department officials to abolish discrimination against both Negro men and women in its services.

Reveals Soldiers Brutally Treated

Pittsburgh, Pa. Courier

APR 3 1943

47d

WASHINGTON, D.C., April 1—(ANP)—Graphic eyewitness stories of brutality by white officers toward Negro soldiers in the Southern Pacific area of war were told this week to the Associated Negro Press by Chaplain Luther Marion Fuller, who has been called back here to face court-martial proceedings, allegedly for certain of his efforts in behalf of colored soldiers which violated Army rules.

HITS ATTITUDES OF OFFICERS

Rev. Fuller, a prominent Eastern pastor before joining the armed forces as a chaplain with the 24th Infantry at Fort Benning, Ga., and who saw action in the South Sea Islands combat zone just below the Solomon Islands, spoke particularly of the attitude of their white officers to members of a coast artillery, anti-aircraft regiment. This is the same group which, when assigned to guard duty in Pennsylvania shortly after American entry into the war, awoke one morning to find notices on the bulletin boards threatening death to those who became over-friendly with white women.

At the same time the chaplain said he had observed that those white commanding officers who read Negro newspapers and thus were able to understand what the Negroes felt, were the fairest in their treatment of colored soldiers.

PRAISES PRESS

"One of the finest pieces of work that the Negro press has ever done (and this is putting it very conservatively), is uncovering the great wrongs and injustices heaped upon the Negro soldiers in the U. S. Army," said Rev. Fuller. "During the entire period of my service, colored soldiers, both at home and abroad, have said that the Negro papers are their source of comfort and inspiration.

"All of the officers in regiments where we have served and who read the Negro papers and tried to understand the colored man and the conditions under which he is laboring and striving, were always men who treated the colored soldiers in a kind and just manner. At Fort Benning, a certain commanding officer was seen reading The Pittsburgh Courier, the Afro-American, Chicago Defender and other Negro newspapers on every Saturday or Monday mornings when we went to his office.

"There was another commanding officer at the same post who, it is said, would never allow a Negro newspaper to come into his office, and we can truthfully say that the Negro soldiers in his regiment were always in the dog house.

LISTS COMPLAINTS FROM SOLDIERS

"We went from Fort Benning to New York City, to California and then to the South Sea Islands with a certain coast artillery (AA) group. In this latter regiment we never saw a white commissioned officer reading a Negro newspaper at any time and, according to the enlisted men's own testimony, this regiment was one of the worst governed and administered, and cruel and abusive in regard to treatment of the soldiers, and the least trained of all the Negro regiments in the Army.

"An enlisted man said: 'The white officers of this regiment have been so cruel and abusive in their treatment of Negro soldiers from Fort Bragg, N. C., to the South Sea Islands that the latter have little or no respect for their superiors." Still another enlisted member of this organization said: 'Our white commissioned officers treat us more like work horses, lower animals, than like real soldiers.'

APR 3

"In fact, this chaplain was told by some of the natives on that island where this regiment was stationed that some of these white officers said that 'those n——r soldiers are really our slaves and we brought them over here to work for us and for you and you shouldn't associate with them at all.'

"In our opinion, the whole trouble with that unit is that the Negro soldiers in the South Sea Islands are fighting two battles and two wars—one against the Japanese and an even greater war against the green-eyed monster, race prejudice, the latter being a disease that has spread through the whole body of humanity and is contrary to all the teachings and convictions of Christianity, science, democracy and common sense.

FOUND FRIEND OF MR. PRATTIS

"A commanding officer from Mississippi told the chaplain that Mr. Prattis of The Pittsburgh Courier was one of his best friends and is one of the finest colored men that he has ever known. This officer reads the Negro newspapers every week. He has eight more years to serve before his retirement, and he said that after that time he intends to go back to Mississippi and devote the remainder of his life trying to make conditions much better for Negroes. This chaplain has never heard any officer from Massachusetts, New York or any other Northern State make any such statement concerning Negroes.

"At the same time, the Army is ruined with handkerchief-head noncommissioned officers who will bow the knee to Baal and sell their race down the river to any and all prejudiced commanding officers just for a promotion. We have found this trouble in every regiment we have served. Many white officers still like tattletales and stooges in their regiments and somehow this type of soldier is made a non-commissioned officer regardless of his ignorance, stupidity and inefficiency, while other enlisted men who are worthy of promotion must remain as buck privates in the rear rank. This is not hearsay, but we know it to be true from actual experience here at home and abroad, especially in that coast artillery regiment, and can prove it."

DISCRIMINATION IS RIFE AT AIR BASE, NAACP PREXY SAYS

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

ST. PAUL, Minn. — (ANP) — Charges that soldiers stationed at the army air force technical training command at Sioux Falls, S. D., are addressed as "nigger" and "boy" by superior officers, denied service in restaurants and hotels, barred from USO Centers and othewise discriminated against were made in a report last week by the Rev. Clarence T. R. Nelson, pastor of Camphor Memorial Methodist Church and Associated Negro Press Correspondent, to the regular meeting of the local branch N. A. A. C. P.

47d

Rev. Nelson, who is also president of the St. Paul branch NAACP, recently returned from the South Dakota city where he made a two-day investigation of soldiers' complaints at the invitation of friendly whites "who wanted to do something about the unfavorable conditions faced by Negro soldiers in the Sioux Falls community."

Although there are four Negro instructors at the air base, the minister said Negro soldiers are not being given technical training but are used as "flunkies and menials."

JUL 30 1943

CROWD HEARS REPORT

The largest meeting of the year sat stolidly in the Hallie Q. Brown Community house while Rev. Nelson delivered his bitter report that revealed evidence to indicate that Col. Cote, commanding officer had demanded of white business men and public officials that Negro soldiers be discriminated against.

JUL 30 1943

"When a white captain went out to the Drake Springs, municipally owned swimming pool, and saw several Negro soldiers and white civilians there, he complained to the supervisor in charge who paid no attention to the protest," said Rev. Nelson.

JUL 30 1943

"The enraged officer then went to the chief of police with his complaint, declaring that such would cause a riot. The chief of police and the mayor held a conference with the air base authorities and the mayor issued an order prohiting the Negroes from using the swimming pool."

JUL 30 1943

Soldiers in the area can get service only at the Rose Room and Twenty Century Club, a restaurant and cabaret operated by Negroes, the K. and K. department store, the Wine Sweet shop, and the Sports Bowl, a recreational center, stated the pastor. One soldier who demanded he be served was ordered from a restaurant with a black jack, he added.

While in Sioux Falls, Rev. Nelson said he attended an interracial meeting of Methodist young people and listened to ten-cent store clerks tell how they had been instructed by their managers to "just let them sit" when Negroes asked for accommodations. Southern white soldiers, it was learned, had told business men they would lose their trade if they "served Niggers."

"When a Negro soldier went to his commanding officer and requested an order for a pair of shoes he was told, 'Boy, where I come from, only mules and bosses wear shoes,' informed the NAACP leader. "He did not get the shoes."

Rev. Nelson said that Negro sergeants cannot give orders to white privates who have been told by camp authorities they do not have to take orders from superiors in rank if they happen to be Negroes.

"Negro soldiers complain of the lack of recreational facilities since they are not permitted into the two large, well equipped USO centers in Sioux Falls," said the minister, "but go to the jim crow USO in the basement of the little St. John's Baptist church. They say they are not welcomed into the service club on the post.

"Most of the Negro soldiers came from eastern states, notably New York and New Jersey, and protest against the various discriminations they suffer both on the military reservation and in the community."

Rev. Nelson said he asked a soldier how he liked the district and the soldier replied, "Mister, there isn't much difference between here and in Georgia." The soldier is a native of Georgia.

That steps to correct the untenable situation in a country pledged to fight for world-wide democracy were being taken, was indicated by the action of a group of fair-minded whites who set up machinery with the aid of colored citizens for a local branch NAACP.

"We Are Soldiers Of Misfortune" Is Complaint Of Many Servicemen

Amsterdam News New York, N. Y.

JUN 5 1943

47d

We are soldiers of a democracy. We fight, we die for democracy, yet we do not enjoy the rights and privileges of a democracy. Who are we? We are the Negro, soldiers taken from our homes and spread over this vast land of the free and home of the brave. As good soldiers, we have no complaints, but as Americans and human beings we have nothing but complaints. Every day we hear flag wavers over the radio, and to hear them one would think America is one heaven on earth, and if he is white, he is right, but the Constitution calls for a government of the people, for the people and by the people, and for the benefit of those who don't know it, Negroes are people. Ever since the Negro has been in Amercia, he has been the victim of the unjust and inhuman treatment that drove the founders of America from their homes in Europe.

Until now Negroes as a whole have not been given a chance to make any great contribution toward the building of our democracy but now we are being called on to make one of the greatest sacrifices that human beings are ever called to make and that is we are being asked to give our lives cheerfully in the defense of democracy. We are not given the chance to make our choice of offering our lives or sitting back and saying "What has democracy done for me or my people." Although we are not given that chance we would not want it. We want to make as many sacrifices as any other American and as the result we want to be treated as all other good Americans.

Hear of Four Freedoms

When we hear or read of the Four Freedoms, every race, creed or color is spoken of except he Negro. Everywhere we go throughout the Southern States we run into so many silly prejudices and discriminations against our people until our minds become so confused until we sometimes wonder if this Democracy or hyprocracy is really worth dying for. We all know that Rome was not built in a day, but the people of Rome worked hard until it was built. Are we really working hard to make democracy true? Let us take a few facts and see.

In less than four years, our nation has demanded the drafting of nearly ten million men. This was done with very little complications. In less than four years our government has changed the course of the lives of one-hundred and thirty million Americans. Yet in the seventy--odd years since the abolition of slavery, we Negroes are still not freemen.

Everywhere we go throughout the South, although we wear the uniform of our government's Armed Forces and are doing our best in the defense of democracy, we are treated worse than the enemy alien. A great man once said "a nation half-slave or divided could not survive." That statement still holds true and our nation is still divided between the North and the South. When we build a house on a weak foundation, it soon collapses, but if we continue to build our nation on principles that are wrong in the sight of God, it too shall soon collapse. American soldiers take an oath and swear to defend democracy against all its enemies—Naziism, Fascism and everything that stands against democracy.

All Is Fascism

Race hatred, Jim Crowism, segregation and the belief that one race is superior or better than another is Fascism. We have this within our own country. I do not feel we have found that depressions and hardships and other unjust treatments have driven men to revolt and commit crimes that they knew were wrong in the sight of God. Let us not have this happen here.

JUN 5 1943

One of our greatest Presidents, Theodore Roosevelt, once said "that any man that is good enough to offer his life for his country, is entitled to a square deal from that country. He should ask no more and he should take no less."

Being a Negro soldier and having come in contact with other Negro soldiers, many of whom are now in many different countries, throughout the world, I know that what I have foresaid are their thoughts. So before, we start cleaning house for the people of the outside world, let us clean ours a little more thoroughly.

Exploited Negroes, Whites Rejecting Old Hate Policy

Pittsburgh Pa. Courier

"This is a war for change- the equality of peoples and nc over the world are affirming Negro, too, in America is affi the rights fundamental to all men shall no longer be denied him." These are the words of J. Saunders Redding, author of an article in the March issue of "Atlantic" which explores the deep change which has been taking place in the mind of the Negro toward the racial situation in the South.

SIGNS OF AWAKENING

And the sound of that voice avowing change, says Mr. Redding, is dreadful to the white South. Such incidents as the following were cited by the author to prove the awakening of Southern Negroes: "An old Southern-trained Negro college teacher of sociology was replaced by a Negro trained at Chicago — "Negro students revolted because they thought one of their white teachers incompetent and prejudiced"—"A chain grocery store was boycotted because it employed an all-white staff in a Negro neighborhood in Atlanta" — "Clinton Clark, a Louisiana Negro, organized the bi-racial Louisiana Tenant Farmers and Sharecroppers Committee" —"Ben Mangum, a white man, did the same thing in Mississippi."

MISTRUST LIBERALS

Leadership in the South which was meant to be effective for progress in a world in which black would remain forever unequal to white, has been refuted to a great extent, writes Mr. Saunders, and in its place men are rising who are not "entirely dependent upon the Naval Ensign, and a passenger aboard a Northbound Southern Pacific Railway train at the time she was reportedly murdered.

Funds to aid in defense of the accused man who will plead "not capricious will and largess of white men."

In the process of these changes, the writer feels that Negroes have begun to mistrust the proclaimed good-will of the articulate Southern whites, "even the liberals."

"Some Southern liberals are aware of this," he says, "among them Jonathan Daniels, who implies that the awakening is due to the fact that the white liberals, like the old Negro leaders, have been asleep, leaving the Negro to his own devices.

"It should be no secred even to the reactionary that the Negro's awakening is also the depressed white man's awakening. The depressed white man in the South is awaking only to discover that both he and the Negro were drugged by the same mystical potion of hate, of race struggle, of playing poor laboring black against poor laboring white.

BI-RACIAL UNIONS

"John Temple Graves, a liberal from Alabama, cites an important figure. He says that there are 30,000 Negro members of the CIO in Alabama. What he does not say is more important: that a large percentage of these Alabama Negro union members are in bi-racial locals, and that some of these locals have some Negro officials."

Mr. Redding warns his readers not to draw false inferences as to the present fullness of this awakening. A Georgia governor, he says, can still arouse cheers from the whites by declaring: "I am proud to be called the champion of White Supremacy." A Negro college president is still called "boy." A politician can still be popular by stating that the Negro has a place—"at the back door."

FEB 27 1943

"But it becomes less the custom for Negroes in the South to accept that place, t grin and bear it, for though the majority has never heard of the Northern Negro "agitators' or the 'racial' Negro press, or CIO, or the Delta Co-operatives, or FEPC, they have heard that we are fighting a war for something and they have felt the cosmic stirring of the little peoples," is the opinion of the author.

NOT THE NORTH

He continues: "It is not the hatch of Northern Negro 'agitators' pushing the country closer and closer to an interracial explosion," as Mr. Dabney said in the January Atlantic. It is thought in the white South to be the hatch of the Negro North because the Negro South has forgotten is 'place' and is not acting like the Negro South. The voice seems to come from the North because the North has always been the mouth to cry change—and the Negro North has always been the tongue of the black South.

"The South has long been insulated. Resistance to change is one of its chief regional characteristics. Since change comes hard in the South, the South could not know, or chose not to know, what was happening in the North and to the Negro.

OLD LEADERS WEAK

Redding analyzes this new approach and its consequent new leadership thusly:

"It is a leadership created from a complex of conditions arising in the South—the weakness of the old leaders, the inertia of those old leaders (white patrons), the labor activity along bi-raical lines and the development of class consciousness."

Ten or twelve years ago this would have been impossible, says the author—but now the sentiments on race policy and race action are being expressed without previous consultation with the "white advisers."

"There is no refuge in conservatism," he concludes, "the road lies ahead and we built it."

Sir: In reading articles in newspapers about racial disturbance throughout your state, and how you would like for there to be harmony among the peoples of this state, I can't help but offer my opinion of the whole rotten mess.

This state might just as well be a barbaric country as far as colored soldiers are concerned, and I think that I personally would be a lot safer in a cage of lions than to be in a state as undemocratic as this.

This is not only my opinion and knowledge, but the opinion and knowledge of all those who are forced to be trained in a hell hole, as we have found this to be. They talk about not wanting Negro troops here, but they're doing me no favor. I'd be happier anywhere in the world, but Mississippi.

Fuller Trial to Reveal Discrimination in Army

JUL 17 1943

The trial of Chaplain Luther M. Fuller before a Board of Reclassification of the United States Army, Wednesday, July 13, 10:30 a.m., at 50 Broadway, brings to public attention the shameful way in which Negro chaplains are treated in the army.

Chaplain Fuller will go before a board of not less than five commissioned army officers, one of whom will be a chaplain, one a line officer, and one who will be from the Medical Corps. Most of the board members will be seniors in rank to the chaplain on trial.

The purpose of the meeting is to determine where Chaplain Fuller will best fit in the service and, if no such place is found, he may be discharged from the army without honor.

REFUSES TO RESIGN

The opportunity was given Chaplain Fuller to resign, but he refused on the grounds that his cause was just, and he demanded a hearing. Attorney W. C. (Judge) Hueston of Washington, D. C., and First Lt. Henry I. Fernandez of the 372nd Infantry Regiment will represent him as counsel.

This case, according to Chaplain Fuller is a typical example of what may happen to any Negro chaplain who refuses to be an "Uncle Tom" and tolerate the discrimination perpetuated against himself and the colored soldiers he serves. A Negro chaplain receives the same jimcro treatment that a Negro soldier suffers. His rank means nothing to those white men who refuse to respect his person.

Chaplain Fuller got into difficulties by preaching in the army what he preached in his pulpits, namely, that all men are equal in the sight of God and men, and that Negro soldiers should demand their rights as Americans.

The recent action by the National Baptist Convention when it voted to refuse to endorse its members for the chaplaincy shows the general sentiment of the Negro ministry.

JUL 17 1943

Chaplain Fuller was charged with bringing to this country from the South Seas letters which described the unbelievable abuses Negro soldiers underwent in that war area.

These charges could not be substantiated. It was also charged that he incited the men under him to believe that all white officers mistreated them. This the chaplain also denied.

JUL 17 1943

Because such men as Fuller refuse to submit to segregation, ingenious methods of conspiracy are exacted against them and attempts are made to have denominations withdraw their endorsements of these ministers for military service.

It is an understood fact that the Army accepts jimcro in all its departments, so as Negro chaplains take heart, the people can expect more cases of reclassification.

CHAPLAIN LOWE PROTESTS

Chaplain William Lowe, who is now in the east protesting the discrimination practised against him and the soldiers under his jurisdiction, cites many instances in which white officers have refused entirely to listen to or understand the viewpoint of Negro chaplains when they argue the cases of colored soldiers who have been outraged by their white brothers.

He says that the racial animosities on the part of commanding officers toward Negro chaplains make it almost impossible to perform the required duties efficiently. The morale and morality of the units suffer, and the chaplain's work is put down as inefficient.

The present trial of Chaplain Fuller and the subsequent army action in the case of Chaplain Lowe should give Negroes an intimate glimpse of how men in uniform, which includes chaplains, are affected by racial discrimination.

The Rev. A. Clayton Powell, nationally-known orator and a member of the City council of New York, will be the principal speaker at a unity rally on Friday night, October 15, sponsored by the National Negro Congress in connection with the fight against discrimination by the Chicago Surface Lines, the Chicago Motor Coach company and the Chicago Rapid Transit company.

Powell was the leader of the successful fight against similar discrimination by the traction lines in New York where the Negroes today serve as motormen, conductors and public attendants in every capacity.

WAR DEPARTMET REFUSES TO ESTABLISH MIXED DIVISION

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Reaffirming its stubbornly maintained position that it will not retreat from a policy of segregation in the armed forces, the War Department, in a letter under date of September 4, to Walter White, NAACP secretary, declared that "The suggestion contained in your letter (of July 14) for the formation of mixed units has been considered at various time by the War Department and the decisio nreached that such action would be inadvisable." The letter was signed by John J. McCloy, Acting Secretary of War.

Mr. White, in releasing the above information, revealed also that recently he had visited McCloy and thanked him o nbehalf of Negroes for the establishment of non-segregated training for Negro bombardiers, pilots, and navigators, and had at that time expressed the hope that after they had received this training in mixed units, Negro aviators would be permitted to fight in mixed units. The negative answer recorded above is Mr. McCloy's reply.

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md

Has Dixie Got to F. D. R.?

Two members of the Roosevelt administration recently set themselves to the task of thumbing their nose at the President.

Afro-American Baltimore, Md

One of them is James F. Byrnes, director of the Central Administrative Services. He's in charge of the home front, a sort of Assistant President, while F. D. R. runs the war abroad. Mr. Byrnes is a former U.S. Supreme Court Justice and a former Senator from South Carolina. In the Senate he had the doubtful honor of advising Mr. Roosevelt that an anti-lynching bill would never be passed by that body.

The other is Roosevelt appointed U.S. Comptroller General Lindsay C. Warren, one-time member of Congress from North Carolina, who, while a member of Congress, promulgated the rule which barred colored persons from eating in the House restaurant.

These two Carolina boys last week combined to nullify the Presidential wartime order affecting all Government agencies.

NOV 6 1943

F. D. R.'s Executive Order No. 9346, setting up a Committee on Fair Employment Practice (FEPC), states in part:

> "It is hereby ordered as follows:
>
> "1. All contracting agencies of the Government of the United States shall include in ALL contracts hereafter negotiated or re-negotiated by them a provision obligating the contractor not to discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, creed, color or national origin and REQUIRING him to include a similar provision in all subcontracts."

This order not only prohibits Government agencies from dealing with firms which discriminate in employment, it also expressly requires any firm which has a Government contract to see that its subcontractors do not discriminate.

Well aware of Order 9346, the Assistant U.S. President, South Carolina's Mr. Byrnes, wanted telephones installed in one of his branch offices in Kansas City, Mo. The telephone company refused to sign a contract including an anti-discrimination clause.

Mr. Byrnes, with the idea of ignoring the President's order, thereupon asked the U.S. Comptroller General, North Carolina's Mr. Warren, whether he could sign a contract without the clause and if he did would Mr. Warren, as auditor, approve payment.

Mr. Warren said that he would. He wrote Mr. Byrnes that the President's Order No. 9346 wasn't really an order at all but a "directive."

If contractors do not want to sign Government contracts including the discrimination clause, they are not required (as the President said) to do so.

NOV 6 1943

Mr. Warren said that Government agencies must try to get contractors to sign, but if they are unable to do so, they may enter into such contracts anyhow and he, the Comptroller General, will certify the bills for payment.

That brings us down to this point: the President has given an order which the Carolina boys wish to evade. To do so they cook up this hocus-pocus. The President's order isn't an "order." It's a mere suggestion. Let's forget about it.

If they get away with it, the evidence is conclusive that the South is not only in control of the Congress, but it also has its fingers on the President's throat.

BROTHER (BOTTLENECK) WARREN

Incidentally, Brother Warren has a fight on his hands with the Army, which wants to audit its own accounts. It maintains that Warren's office has 14,956,027 unaudited vouchers on his desk.

Maybe if slow, fuss-budget Lindsay Warren would put his mind on his own job, it would not constitute a bottleneck in the war effort.

Soldier [redacted] Beaten and Given '00 Months in Jail

DEC 1943

The case of Private Rieves Bell, who was beaten by four white men in Starksville, Miss., because he would not take off his uniform, and who was sentenced to 3 and a half years in the state penitentiary by a Mississippi court, has been placed before Secretary of War Stimson by the Washington Bureau of the NAACP.

Private Bell, who was attached to a Quartermaster battalion at Fort Myles Standish, Mass., was on furlough and was visiting his parents in Starksville.

The record shows that on his first evening in town he was standing on the street corner chatting with two girls when four white men passed. One of them pushed Private Bell, but Bell said nothing. A second push was given him and he was asked, "Where did you get that uniform?"

Bell replied that Uncle Sam had given him the uniform, whereupon he was told, "Take off that soldier suit." Naturally Bell refused and a scuffle ensued in which one of the white boys claims to have been cut by the soldier.

Bell was arrested and jailed. Military police entered the case but did not take Bell into military custody, leaving him to the tender mercies of the Starksville authorities.

DEC 1943

Private Bell's commanding officer was notified of his predicament but still the military authorities did not take charge. An examination into the case was made by Truman K. Gibson, Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, who told the NAACP there was some confusion about the notification to military authorities.

The next news was that of Bell's conviction and sentence to 3 and one-half years in prison.

Urban League Head Tells How War Is Breaking Race Barriers

Call
Kansas City, Mo.

DEC 31 1943

NEW YORK.—(ANP) — Beside viewing a sign of new interracial leadership and vision on the American post-war horizon, Lester B. Granger, executive secretary of the National Urban league, reveals in the December issue of Survey Midmonthly the role played by his organization in marshalling the forces of Negro labor for America's war effort and the complex race relations techniques employed to break down pre-war industrial race barriers.

Intricate Problems

The article, "Techniques in Race Relations," pictures a few of the intricate problems faced by the Urban league in securing employment opportunities for colored people in war industries.

Stating that 1,500,000 colored people are now employed by such nationally-known firms as the Wright Aeronautical corporation, Bell Aircraft, Glenn L. Martin of Baltimore, North American Aviation of Kansas City, Consolidated and Brewster Aircraft and others, Granger declared that Negro labor has a "size 11 foot in the door of American industry."

DEC 31

While the present national picture is far from one of uninterrupted unity and inspired determination, the Urban league head pointed out that America can be said to have turned her face toward victory in a sense that was definitely untrue on Dec. 7 1941, by making use of all available labor resources.

The aircraft industry has decided to go all out for victory by abandoning its discriminatory employment policies and other industries have followed.

"In 1940 there were estimated to be approximately 5,500,000 Negro workers in this country," wrote Granger. "Today, nearly 2,500,000 of these are either employed in war industry, or serving in the armed forces at home and abroad. The transformation has not been easy or sudden. It has been the result of almost heartbreaking effort by Negro and white leadership."

Telephone Case

The case of the Southwestern Telephone company of Kansas City, Mo., was cited by Granger to picture the resistance of firms who opposed the integration of Negroes in industry. This firm refused to accept a war contract containing a stipulation against racial discrimination in employment and received the support of Controller Gen. Warren who ruled that the President's Executive Order 9346 was not mandatory.

After an outburst of public indignation, the President issued a clearly worded statement upholding his Fair Employment Practice committee and declared that the non-discrimination clause was mandatory and must be included in every war contract as a part of governmental policy.

Granger referred to the speech made by A. Philip Randolph on the floor of the American Federation of Labor convention, calling for abolition of racial discrimination in AFL unions, as he charged that Negroes' employment skill is still hampered by hidden or evert management resistance as well as by the discriminatory policies of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron, Shipbuilders and Helpers of America and the International Association of Machinists. Even where Negro labor is presently employed in war industry, this has seriously affected their psychology.

"Negroes got mad when they couldn't find jobs and stayed mad even after they got the jobs," said Granger in quoting a reporter. "They are still mad to the point of affecting their attitudes on the job."

Notwithstanding the fact that the Urban league, with the cooperation of federal agencies, has been able to break down employment race barriers in Atlanta, Little Rock, Kansas City, Mo., Baltimore, Buffalo, Chicago and other industrial centers throughout the country, the post-war place of Negro labor will depend upon the labor requirements of industry, as well as upon the measure of adaptation that has been accomplished by Negro and white workers in their relationships with each other on war jobs, Granger declared.

Cadets In Southern College By 'Mistake'

Journal and Guide

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Three colored cadets, sent to the Army specialization school at the College of William and Mary, through mistake, have been sent to the University of Illinois, from where they will be assigned to another institution for their training, according to Col. F. J. Agee, attached to the Army Specialized Training Division in Washington, D. C. They reported to the college on July 23.

College and Army officials stated that the three cadets Eugene Simmons of Newark, N. J.; Vernon Graves of Milan, Tenn., and Brice Miles of Trenton, N. J., were not refused admittance because of color.

Norfolk, Virginia

However, these same officials revealed that it was the declared policy of the United States Army, through an understanding with Southern colleges, not to send Negro cadets for specialized training in institutions where the instruction of white and colored persons was prohibited by law.

Both college president, Dr. J. E. Pomfret, and commanding officer of the specialized training program at William and Mary, Major McGinn, concurred, in separate statements, that no question of color was involved in the cases of the three men.

ERROR OF ARMY

Major McGuinn said the affair "was an error in the Army. The men were misdirected or misplaced." The three colored cadets were pre-medical students, the major said, and the training at William and Mary does not provide for such students.

"White students," added the colonel, "are frequently misdirected to William and Mary." In the group with the three cadets were 20 white students who were also sent elsewhere, he said.

PRESIDENT TALKS

President Pomfret released the following statement:

"The men (the three colored cadets) were erroneously assigned to the college. The understanding is that Negro soldiers are not to be sent to southern institutions for specialized training where state laws prohibit their training with whites.

"The soldiers had not enrolled—only assembled—since enrollment does not begin until August 9: therefore, class instruction at the college was not refused."

The college head said further his position is that as president of the college, he must comply with the laws of the state.

The cadets who left the historic center of learning on July 27, four days after their arrival, were the first Negro students to be sent there for enrollment.

THE CADETS' BACKGROUND

Cadet Simmons is a graduate of West Virginia State College. He was inducted at Fort Hoga, Columbus, Ohio, and assigned to the Tuskegee Air Force in Alabama in which he served as radio operator after ten weeks training at Fort Monmouth, N. J., in the Coobe School.

Cadet Graves is a graduate of Lane College, Jackson, Tenn. He was inducted at Fort Dix, N. J. and assigned to the Tuskegee Air Force where he specialized in radio maintenance and worked in the communications department. He is a graduate of the School of Radio Technician and Telegraphy in New York.

Cadet Miles is a graduate of Princess Anne College, Md., and well known Philadelphia organist. He was inducted at Fort Meade, Md., and assigned to the Tuskegee Air Force where he served nine months in radio communication, after ten weeks training at Fort Monmouth, N. J.

These cadets were transferred with the 332nd Fighter Group, 302nd Fighter Squadron, to Selfridge Field, Mich. After successfully passing the Army specialization training program examination, they were transferred to Michigan State College, East Lansing, where they were classified for specialized training in the medical or veterinary fields.

A Second Look

By J. SAUNDERS REDDING

Journal & Guide

Norfolk, Va.

PERHAPS I CAUGHT the wrong men. Perhaps it was just my luck to approach only hungry men, or tired men, or lonely men a long way from home. Perhaps I talked only to the chronic malcontents, the men who with all sorts of privileges and pie in any situation whatsoever would still be soreheads. Perhaps. But I talked individually to close to five hundred Negro soldiers, sailors and marines in the period of eight weeks ending with September 8th. I talked with them in camps and USO Clubs. I talked with them on trains and ferries and buses; in the streets and parks and in hotel lobbies. I hitch-hiked them.

MR. REDDING

Once I was driving north out of Richmond along the pleasant boulevard that is route I near the edge of the city when I brought my car to a stop at the urgent tooting of a whistle blown by a red-faced fireman who stood squarely in the road. Standing on the pavement in front of the fire engine house were a dozen white soldiers. It seems that the firemen had set up a hitch-hiking service for service men, a kind of traveler's aid bureau, and I was stopped by the redfaced fireman to see if I would carry some of the men north in my car.

It was then that I saw the Negro soldier plodding along a couple of hundred feet ahead of me. He kept looking back, and I knew he wanted to go somewhere too. "Sure," I said to the fireman, "I'll take three of 'em back there." "Why don't you take another one up on the front seat?" he said. "Because," I answered, "That colored soldier down the road is going to ride up here with me."

Three white soldiers climbed into the back seat, and a few seconds later I overhauled the colored soldier and picked him up.

"THEY WOULDN'T LET ME"

"Why didn't you stand back there with the rest of them?" I asked him, just as we took the left turn out of Richmond.

"They wouldn't let me," he answered.

"Who wouldn't let you? It says 'Service Men's Depot' or something, and you're a service man," I said.

"They wouldn't let me just the same. I was standing there and there was that feller out in the road stopping cars, and pretty soon another feller comes out of the engine house and he comes up to me and says, 'This ain't for you, boy.' And I went on away."

After that, the colored soldier and I talked pleasantly all the way to Washington, but the white soldiers didn't say a word.

But, as I was saying, maybe I caught the wrong guys, and that was why of the nearly five hundred I talked to only one was happy about his military life. I asked all of them the same questions: how do you like the Army? (or the Navy, or the Marine Corps) the uniformity of their answers was amazing. It was this: "The hell with it!" What's the matter with it? was my next question.

A WIDE OPEN ANSWER

The answer to this was wide open, but most of them started by saying that Negroes in the Army (or the Navy, or the Marine Corps) didn't have a chance, that there was [illegible] much prejudice, and then they went on to give particulars. A lot of them complained about their southern officers who seem to have a love of addressing the men, "Hey, you G—D . . . Niggers." (This surprised me, for I thought there was something to the old cliche about "an officer and a gentleman."

It was my notion that one had to be a gentleman before one could become an officer.) One soldier told me that the Negro Px in his camp closed at six in the evening and that the white Px stayed open until nine. He also told me that the only way Negro soldiers in the camp could get certain things, which are generally standard stock in Px's, was to get a white soldier to get it from the white Px, "and then sometimes you pay double."

COMPARED TO BEING IN JAIL

Some compared being in the Army to being in jail, and they preferred jail. "Yes, even a Georgia [illegible]," one told me. Some complained that they didn't get weekend leaves and furloughs. Most complained (and among them all the commissioned officers and several above the rank of corporal) that they were not treated like soldiers, but like flunkies in uniform.

A few complained that though white boys were getting officers' training and being sent to Negro outfits, colored boys were told that the officers' quota was filled. A few complained that the Army didn't know what to do with intelligent Negro soldiers, and that the Army was afraid of brains in a Negro.

My next question was, "Aren't you glad to be fighting for your country?" But so many of them answered, "I'd rather be fighting for myself" that I changed the question to this: "Aren't you glad to be fighting for democracy?" But the answer to this, too, I found was standard. It was: "If I'm going to fight and die for democracy, I'd just as soon fight and die for it right here."

499 WRONG GUYS

But, as I say, maybe I talked to the wrong men. Maybe I didn't pick them right. You might pick—anybody might—four hundred and ninety-nine wrong guys out of several thousand.

This Happened at Utah Army Camp--A Letter from a Negro

SEP 7 1943

Daily Worker New York
N.Y.

By Eugene Gordon

Persons who wonder at the discontent or unhappiness of Negro troops may find an answer in the letters these men write. One such letter, addressed to an uncle back home and forwarded to the Daily Worker, describes the soldier's feelings and the feelings of other Negro enlisted men going to meet fascism on the battlefield.

Members of a Negro outfit, scheduled for overseas duty temporarily encamped at Kearns, Utah, sought to eat in the post exchange. They were told to get to hell out. No Negroes allowed! When they entered the post theatre they were ordered to sit on the "colored" side.

They didn't get out of the post exchange, and dire threats with clubs and guns didn't budge them. They didn't sit on the "colored" side in the theatre, so the officer in charge ordered them to leave. They refused. He called in white soldiers (quoting the letter) "with machine guns, rifles, grenades, etc., while we had not even rocks."

This ruse failed, whereupon the officer demanded of "the mob" (as he characterized the Negro troops) what it wanted. "We explained what 'this mob' wanted—how we couldn't eat in any place in Salt Lake City; how we received the worst of the food, equipment and housing facilities. He didn't like our explanations. . . . They picked up about 10 fellows to send to the guardhouse, but the entire company (about 160 men) were going to follow their buddies there. . . . There were too many for the guardhouse, so he let them go. He was angry as hell."

These soldiers, on the day following their defiance of jim crow, "were questioned by a board of officers" on the reason for their misbehavior. "The officers all agreed that there was no charge to hold us on, so they recommended our immediate release." "The men were not released, however, for three days." Says the letter:

"On the third day our squadron commander visited us at the guardhouse. His name was Captain Hill. Quite a fair-minded fellow. Although a Southerner, he would fight for us Negroes. And because he fought our internment, the post commander relieved him of his command over us. That shows the attitude of our post commander — Colonel Converse R. Lewis was his name.

"That wasn't the end of it, though. After about three days we were released from the guardhouse. I should be in the radio school at Ft. Monmouth, N. J., but I (and nearly 1,500 others) have been shipped to humble trade schools."

Many Negro Engineers Are Serving in His Seventh Army

DEC 1 1943

WASHINGTON —(ANP)— Question has arisen in the minds of many Negroes here as to the kind of treatment that has been accorded Negroes serving with the seventh army as a result of the disclosure that Lt. Gen. George S. Patton had slapped a shell-shocked private in the face in a base hospital somewhere in Sicily.

The reprimand that has since been given to Gen. Patton, popularly known as "Old Blood and Guts," by his superior, Gen. Eisenhower, was backed up by Secretary of War Stimson at his press conference, one of the largest in recent months.

But in spite of the apology that Patton is quoted as having made before the soldier and persons who witnessed the incident, as well as before other men of the division, few people are willing to dismiss the matter just that fast.

Serving under Gen. Patton are many Negro engineers and member of the quartermaster corps. It is not recalled that Gen. Patton has ever commended them for performance. The questions turn upon the point that if his disposition was such that he would lose control of himself sufficiently to permit the striking of a white private, what provocation would he have needed to strike a Negro

Further, if his temperament leans to the brutality side, some ask, "what lengths does he permits his subordinate officers to go in maintaining discipline?"

President Urged to Lift Ban Against Colored Women in WAVES, SPARS

10 POINT PROGRAM ADOPTED, PASSED

45,000 Commissioned Officers for 1,000,000 Men Now in Service

CHICAGO — A ten-point resolution which called for the outlawing of segregation and discrimination in the U.S. armed forces was unanimously passed by two groups meeting Sunday in the Metropolitan Community Church.

The groups were the Chicago Citizens' Committee of One Thousand and the National Negro

Council. Both called upon the president to issue an Executive order ending armed forces jim crow and the exclusion of colored women from th WAVES, SPARS and as nurses in the army and navy.

In order to end the war quickly and to establish justice on the home front, the groups went on record as demanding the repeal of the Chinese Exclusion Act.

The resolution demanded that the President, as Commander in Chief of the army and navy:

1. Issue a general overall, executive order prohibiting the War Department from its present undemocratic policy of segregating and discriminating against a million colored soldiers by denying colored men combat service and relegating them to engineer labor and miscellaneous divisions exclusively in the Pacific and other overseas service.

2. The army lift its quota of 202 colored nurses and provide equal training and just representations to colored women in this service.

3. Secretary of the Navy Knox now be ordered to admit colored women as WAVES and SPARS in the United States Navy.

J. C. Transportation

4. Segregation on army posts and in transportation be abolished for the duration.

5. Discontinuance of the demoralizing army practice of training a limited number of colored combat troops for a few months, only to summarily and without warning over and over again to disintegrate and break them up into new units, denying to them the right to fight.

6. Utilization of 500,000 single colored illiterates before drafting pre Pearl Harbor fathers for non-combat service and provision for primary education.

More Officers

7. Provision for one tenth of colored soldiers as commissioned colored privates and subordinate officers.

8. Equal rights at every level and commissions for colored soldiers and marines in the U.S. Navy.

9. Punishment of members of the armed services in uniform only by military authorities.

Right to Vote

10. Protection of Civil Rights of colored soldiers regardless of race, creed or color, North or South or abroad.

Another resolution demanded defeat of the Lucas-Green Soldiers' Vote Bill unless perfected to protect the rights of colored soldiers to cast a ballot in the Southern poll tax States.

Private Levy Is Freed, Moved To Southern Camp

NOV 19 1943

Fight To Have Staff Sergeant Stripes Restored

NEW YORK—(A N P)—Pvt. Alton Levy, former organizer for the International Ladies Garment Workers union, AFL, court-martialed for opposing army jim-crow, was freed Friday at 1 a. m., after serving less than three months of his four month sentence at hard labor, the Workers Defense league announced. He is now on his way to a southern army camp.

The fight to restore Pvt. Levy to his original rank of staff sergeant will be continued as part of a campaign against army jim crow, according to statements issued by Samuel Wolchok, president, United Retail, wholesale and Department Store employes, CIO ,and by Morris Milgram, secretary, and Nathaniel M. Minkoff, discrimination committee chairman, of the Workers Defense league, which led the campaign to free Levy.

The release was hailed by Mr. Milgram and Mr. Minkoff in behalf of the league as "a great victory for American democracy. This shows the power of the thousands of letters that deluged the White House, the power of the liberal, labor, Negro and religious press which championed his cause, the power of truth and justice."

The War Department declared that Levy's sentence had been shortened for good behavior. Previously Brig. Gen. Early E. W. Duncan of the Lincoln Army Air base had told the press that Levy certainly would have to serve his termite its end. Dec. 16.

War Dept. Again Bars Mixed Unit

SEP 18 1943

WASHINGTON, D. Friction Among Troops Revealed

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

SEP 2 1943

NEW YORK — (ANP)—From confidential sources which the Associated Negro Press has every reason to believe competent and reliable, and which the Associated Negro Press will not reveal, the following account of the American Negro soldiers in England has been secretly received.

"The conditions over here are getting like those in the States. White officers are doing a fair job in convincing British people about race problems. Most Negro troops are gradually being moved out and away from the cities to isolated camps. White MP's are usually placed in these vicinities and intimidate Negro soldiers as well as the girls who are seen with them.

"Last week, there were at least two riots over here. Another one on July 1 and the last of May. During the last of May, two Negroes were reported killed, more wounded and a white officer wounded. Had an awful time throughout the night. One Negro officer practically took charge of the camp. He collected about 800 rifles in two days. Started when a white MP shot a Negro soldier.

FIGHTS BREAK OUT

"Last week, one started when fights broke out between Negro and white soldiers in a small city in northern England when white soldiers are reported to have resented British girls being with Negro soldiers. In a southern England city, there were a number of fights which started when a white lieutenant made remarks about some 'Nigger soldiers and merchant men' who were passing. The soldiers resented it. A riot was prevented by some of the few Negro MP's who came up to rescue the officer. Yet an MP sergeant (white) at the time insulted a Negro officer who had tried to quiet the soldiers. At MP headquarters, the Negro officer said that he was insulted by the provost officer (white) in front of the other MP's, who were enlisted men, and arrested as being drunk. The coolness of the four Negro lieutenants, the colored MP's and the colored American Red Cross personnel prevented a probable riot during the night.

"Riots are much more frequent than the press can publish. The troops break into the gun rooms and get their rifles and ammunition to protect themselves often. If something is not done by the U. S. Army soon, I would not be surprised to see a major battle between Negro and white American soldiers. It seems that some top people want southern U. S. A. transferred over here. Even Mr. Bondy from the American Red Cross is over here trying to find reasons for moving the colored clubs (clubs staffed by Negroes) out of certain cities, because it is said that certain people must be satisfied. One of them is Mr. Gibson, the American Red Cross commissioner in Great Britain. One of his excuses is that he understood that the Negro personnel were too highly skilled in their jobs.

BLAME OFFICERS

SEP 2 1943

"White officers are behind most of the trouble. They have even canvassed communities, telling the residents and business people not to serve or associate with the Negroes (whom they command and get their promotions off). The few Negro officers are treated as bad by their fellow officers. There are some fair minded officers, but they are not permitted to do much because they are not promoted and are shifted in many instances from place to place.

"Have seen a couple of colonels who were very good, but their executive [illegible] ar[illegible]en aod slip things over. The Negro soldier is doing a job. All he wants is to be treated like a soldier. Negro soldiers want Negro officers. Their conduct on a whole is excellent.

"If you can convin[illegible] white officer that each Negro soldier wants to get home to his colored wife or friend, you cna do a good job. These boys are not excited by the white girls even though they are sought out by the girls in many cases. And the whole thing seems to hinge on the friendship of the Negro and the white girl. Many soldiers are in a new low frame of mind, and if they were not real soldiers, I am convinced that the enemy would be trying to work on them. However, it is possible that the enemy is helping these riots to break out since the tension is so great.

"The American Negro soldier is often fined his entire salary or more for the smallest infraction. Oftimes they must travel 20 miles to another town to have a little fun. The Negro Red Cross worker is being resented because the soldirs look up to them for leadership. Also the American Red Cross workers are not wearing bandana handkerchiefs. The U. S. Army is to blame for most of the trouble not the fifth column. The officers won't give the fifth column a chance."

'Sweaty Hands' Claim Barred Our Women From War Plant Work

NOV 13 1943

Courier
Pittsburgh Pa.

WASHINGTON—When representhatives of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice convinced officials of a large Eastern war plant that their reason for rejection of Negro women as employees had no factual basis, the company relaxed its barriers and has made great steps toward eliminating a labor shortage, a report filed with the committee in Washington, D. C., revealed this week.

Will Maslow, FEPC director of field operations, said that Negro girls have ben hired by the company and found quite satisfactory since the company issued strict instructions to all its supervisory and personnel staff to eliminate any considerations of race, religion or nationality in employment.

The matter was referred to the committee by the United States Employment Service after a check had disclosed that all Negro girls referred to [illegible] firm had been rejected. O[illegible] two-month period 500 white girls were [illegible]red to the company of whom 300 were hired. During the same period however, of 100 Negro girls referred, all of whom met the same basic standards, none was hired.

SWEATY HANDS CLAIMED

Investigation brought from the management the explanation that the jobs required handling of small mechanisms and that the Negroes were rejected because they "all had 'sweaty' hands." It was found that the "test" for "sweaty hands" was superficial and questionable as to its validity.

When these findings were presented to the management at later confere[illegible] officials of the campany admitted the po[illegible]ity of error in the original belief and promptly moved to correct practices which might in any way violate the principles of the Executive Orders 8802 and 9346. As a result, a number of Negroes was accepted.

SEAMEN'S WIVES WARNED AGAINST WAAMMS

SEP 23 1943

New York (ANP)—The women's auxiliary of the National Maritime union last week warned seamen's wives against the newly organized women's auxiliary of the American Merchant Marine, [illegible] which bars Negroes from its membership - although Negroes constitute 20 per cent of the men at sea today.

"The formation of the WAAMMS has led to confusion in the minds of the wives and families of NMU members," said Mrs. Terry Riggs Penman, national director of the women's auxiliary of the NMU. "From what the women's auxiliary has been able to learn of the WAAMS through attendance [illegible] two meetings and a conference with one of its sponsors, it impresses us as a thoroughly undemocratic, unrepresentative and mysterious body, which should be shunned by the wives of all seamen."

Colored WACs Denied Share in Canada Trip

SEP 24 1943

FORT DES MOINES, Ia.—Reports that only white WACs were chosen, Saturday a week ago, for a trip to Canada as guests of the Canadian Government, with all expenses paid, have not been confirmed by the War Department.

Stories are current here that orders came from Washington that 200 white WACs were to be chosen, since the Canadian Government would consider it a faux pas if any colored were in the party.

WACs, longest on the post with good records, were selected. Many colored qualified. None was chosen.

SERGEANT, WHOSE COURAGE SAVED OTHERS, HONORED

FORT McCLELLAN, Ala.—First Sgt. Theodore R. Roach of Cleveland, Ohio, received the Legion of Merit Medal and was cited by the War Department because of an act of courage which possibly saved the lives of several soldiers when he refused to give an outcry after being hit as he led a group under a blanket of machine gun fire.

Sioux Falls Color Bar Assailed

Defender
Chicago, Ill.

JUL 3 1943

ST. PAUL, Minn. — (ANP) — Charges that soldiers stationed at the army air force technical training command at Sioux Falls, S. D., are addressed as [illegible] and "boy" by superior officers, denied service in restaurants and hotels, barred from USO centers and otherwise discriminated against were made in a report last week by the Rev. Clarence T. R. Nelson, pastor of Camphor Memorial Methodist church, to the regular monthly meeting of the local branch NAACP.

Rev. Nelson who is also president of the St. Paul branch NAACP, recently returned from the South Dakota city where he made a two-day investigation of soldier's complaints at the invitation of friendly whites "who wanted to do something about the unfavorable conditions faced by Negro soldiers in the Sioux Falls community."

Although there are four Negro instructors at the air base, the minister said Negro soldiers are not being given technical training, but are used as "flunkies and menials."

Barred In Pool

The largest meeting of the year sat stolidly in the H[illegible] Q. Brown Community house while Rev. Nelson delivered his bitter report that revealed evidence to indicate that Col. Cote, commanding officer, had demanded of white business men and public officials that Negro soldiers be discriminated against.

"When a white captain went out to the Drake Springs, municipally owned swimming pool, and saw several Negro soldiers and white civilians there he complained to the supervisor in charge who paid no attention to the protest," said Rev. Nelson.

"The enraged officer then went to the chief of police with his complaint, declaring that such would cause a riot. The chief of police and the mayor held a conference with the air base authorities and the mayor issued an order prohibiting the Negroes from using [illegible] city-owned swim[illegible] pool."

Rev. Nelson said that Negro sergeants cannot give orders to white privates who have been told by camp authorities they do not have to take orders from superiors in rank if they happen to be Negroes.

No Negro Nurses Are Wanted

Journal and Guide

60,000 Needed By Army, Navy But Quota "Filled"

Norfolk, Virginia

NEW YORK — The Army and Navy desperately needs an additional 60,000 nurses this year, and in New York City alone there are 2,000 nurses, fully trained, qualified and registered, whom neither service will accept. They are Negroes.

Adhering to its traditional policy of withholding officer rank from Negro Americans, the Navy will accept no Negro nurses at all.

Quota Filled

Miss Carolyn E. Dillon, a registered nurse of New York City, applied for enrollment in the Army Nurse Corps. The following is the partial text of the reply she received from Lt. Col. Ida W. Danielson, assistant superintendent of the Nurse Corps:

"I am directed by the Surgeon General to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 5 October and to inform you that your application for enrollment in the Army Nurse Corps cannot be given favorable consideration at this time because the quota of colored nurses required by the Corps has been filled."

To colored applicants for the vacant posts the Army has advised that its quota of Negroes has been filled.

That quota is 160 Negro nurses.

ABOLITION OF QUOTA SYSTEM URGED

The Joint Committee of Nurses, representing New York's 2,000 qualified members of the nursing profession, last week urged immediate abolition of the quota system following an appeal for more nurses by Col. Florence M. Blanchfield, superintendent of the Army Nurse Corps.

According to Mrs. Alvenia Feaster, chairman of the committee, such a discriminatory policy gives comfort to the enemy and is a gamble with the lives of our fighting men. "When one of our men falls wounded on the battlefield he does not care if black or white hands administer the nursing care necessary to save his life," she declared.

Write Them Now

If you agree that the restricted quota of 160 Negro nurses is undemocratic and un-American, a gamble with the lives of our fighting men, and wholly inconsistent with our war aims, write immediately to your Senator and Congressman and tell them so.

Also write: Maj. Gen. Norman T. Kirk, Surgeon General's Office, Washington, D. C.

Col. Florence M. Blanchfield, superintendent, Army Nurse Corps, Washington, D.C.

Commenting on a Red Cross meeting for nurses held on Thursday night of last week at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel, Miss Lillian Holland, one of the three colored nurses now serving at the New York Welfare dispensary, said: "It was especially heart-breaking if you listened to those speeches and knew that your application had already been refused because you were a Negro."

FOLLOW "PATTERNS OF CIVILIAN LIFE"

Appeals sent to Gen. Norman J. Kirk and Mrs. Estelle Massey Riddle of the National Nursing Council for War Services brought this reply from the War Department:

"In restricting and segregating Negro nursing enlistments, the Army was only following the traditional patterns of civilian life."

In reply to this explanation, Mrs. Riddle pointed out: "The pattern of civilian life indicates thousands of instances where Negro and white nurses work in close cooperation. They are working together at Henry street, at the National Nursing Council for War Services, at the Welfare dispensary and the City Health Department.

"Negro and white nurses work side by side at Harlem and Lincoln Hospitals, at Bronx and Montifiori and dozens of small private hospitals."

RECRUITED THROUGH SOUTHERN CAMPS

Meanwhile, it was pointed out that all of the 160 Negro Army nurses are recruited through Southern segregated camps and Negro nurses are authorized for assignment to only those stations where Negro soldiers are stationed, and according to the policy by the War Department Planning Board.

Hastie Claims Bias In Levy's Conviction

Daily World

—Atlanta, Georgia—

WASHINGTON—(A N P)—Judge William H. Hastie, former civilian aide to Sec'y of War Henry L. Stimson, and dean of law at Howard university last week cited two "particularly disturbing" disclosures which "create a strong implication of prejudice and bias" in the court-martial and conviction of Alton Levy, white, now serving four months at hard labor at the Lincoln, Neb., army air base.

Hastie, who resigned from the war department in protest against Negro discrimination, declared:

"First I can think of no proper circumstances which could have led the court, after stating before adjournment Saturday, Aug. 14, that the charges against Levy had not been proved, to decide on Monday, Aug. 16, after the week-end recess, that he was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.

"Second: It was well known to the post command that the rumors which Levy is alleged to have repeated had been circulated around the camp for months even before Levy came to that station. In such circumstances, it is disturbing that Levy was singled out for punishment.

"Such facts must and do create a strong implication of prejudice and bias in the trial and conviction of Alton Levy."

Hastie's statement came on the eve of a meeting of labor leaders at Freedom house in New York, called to map further action in Levy's behalf. The meeting, organized by David Dubinsky, president of the ILGWU, Samuel Wolchok, president of the United Wholesale and Retail Employes union, CIO, and A. Philip Randolph, head of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car porters, AFL, was held on Wednesday.

Reports from Lincoln quote the commanding officer of the base as saying that former International Ladies Garment Workers union, AFL, organizer, will not be granted the usual parole.

"Those reports," said Morris Milgram, executive secretary of the Workers Defense league, "confirm our charge that Levy is being held as a hostage in an attempt to impose silence on those who have taken up the fight for him."

Indicating that Levy had no part in the protests made in the case Milgram said investigators who had visited the base were told that the soldier, convicted of circulating "false statements" about treatment of Negroes at the base and "slanderous" rumors about the commanding officer, would be released Nov. 6, "if the agitation stops."

Sen. Wagner Joins Fight For Airing of Levy Case

PM

New York, N. Y.

JAMES A. WECHSLER

PM's National Editor

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11.—Sen. Robert F. Wagner (D., N. Y.) today pledged his aid to the drive for a full-fledged airing of the court-martial and conviction of Pvt. Alton Levy, former union organizer now serving four months at hard labor at the Lincoln (Neb.) Air Base.

In a telegram to David Dubinsky, president of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, AFL, Wagner voiced his "deep interest" in the case and promised to "do my utmost to be of assistance."

Levy was found guilty in August of circulating "false statements" about alleged mistreatment of Negroes at the Lincoln base and of repeating "slanderous" comments about the commanding officer there. He was demoted from sergeant to private. Dubinsky, whose union employed Levy prior to his entrance into the Army, last week urged Wagner to intervene, pointing out that "wide accounts of the case accentuate the angle of prejudice toward Levy because of his trade union connections and strong sentiments against Negro discrimination."

Wagner's reply said:

"I am deeply interested and will do my utmost to be of assistance."

The New York Senator's entrance into the case followed a disclosure that the presiding officer at Levy's courtmartial, speaking for the court, had expressed belief that Levy was innocent just 48 hours before the verdict of guilty was

Victor Reuther, assistant director of the War Policy Committee of the United Auto Workers, CIO, also spoke out today for Levy, declaring:

"In our war for democracy we cannot afford to allow reactionary forces inside the Army to persecute men of courage who speak out against race discrimination. Vindication of Alton Levy should be the first step toward eliminating Jim Crow from the armed services."

Leon Despres, Chicago attorney who investigated the case at the request of Levy's father, was expected here today in an effort to lay his findings before high officials. In his initial report, he asserted that "an outstanding legal error was committed" when the court martial found Levy guilty after the presiding officer declared the evidence was inadequate.

Meanwhile, the War Dept. had still failed to reply to a series of questions on the Levy case submitted by PM Sept. 29. A spokesman for the Department has said that the answers are being prepared. Among the questions were these:

¶ Has any inquiry been made with regard to the treatment of Negro soldiers at this base to determine whether statements attributed to Levy were true?

¶ Did the issue of the treatment of Negro soldiers at the base figure in the proceedings and, if so, was any testimony obtained from the Negroes themselves?

VFW Denounces Army Court Martial Policy

Tribune

Philadelphia, Pa.

CHICAGO — (ANP) — A strongly worded resolution was directed last week to the tional encampment in New tional ncampment in New York by the Charles L. Hunt

Post, No. 2024, roundly scoring the army court martial policy and segregation and discrimination practiced by the army command and civilians against colored soldiers.

Calling the recent court martial of Col. William Coleman, former commander of Selfridge Field, Michigan, "outrageous" and a "travesty upon justice" the resolution said that "millions of Americans are concerned with the type of leadership in our army if high ranking officers could indulge in drunkenness while on duty, especially if intoxication were to be used as an excuse for the wanton shooting of a private soldier. For his crime of shooting Pvt Willie McRae, Coleman was merely reduced to the rank of a captain.

Real Issue Is Jim-Crow in Army

Daily Worker

By Benjamin J. Davis, Jr.

Racial discrimination in the armed forces, particularly jim-crow mistreatment of Negro soldiers, has become one of the principal home front issues of the war, retarding the full mobilization of all our forces for a quick victory and impairing the morale of Negro and other anti-fascist citizens.

It is claimed in certain circles that the Alton Levy case symbolizes this issue. But the full facts on this case are not known and judgment on its merits must be withheld until facts have been made fully available to the public. Moreover, from the character of some of the forces which have rushed to Levy's defense and have taken over full charge of his case—among them the Trotzkyist-led Workers' Defense League—there is a danger that the case will be exploited, not against jim-crowism, but against the war effort, and therefore against the best interests of the Negro people. The Trotzkyites, the Dubinsky clique and the Norman Thomas "socialists" are notorious enemies of our war against Hitlerism. It is clear that many patriotic anti-fascists, Negro and white, have become interested in the Levy case.

But regardless of the facts in the Levy case, one thing is clear: there is widespread segregation and discrimination in the armed forces against Negro soldiers and that is the real issue. Negro troops are not given equal opportunities to fight as free and equal American citizens, and in countless cases atrocities are permitted against them even to the point of downright Scottsboro frame-ups by poll tax officials in the South. They are denied equal access to transportation facilities to and from army camps; they are denied equal recreational facilities; they are denied equal opportunities of advancement. Worst of all, only a paltry few of them are in combat duty, although they, along with their fellow white soldiers, are, by their experience against fascist-like oppression, a tremendous force for opening the Second Front against Hitler.

DEMORALIZING FORCE

The continuation of jim-crowism in the armed forces of our country is a shame and a blot upon our nation before the whole world. When our boys entered Italy, it dramatized the fact that the American army must be a liberation army. It cannot play this role effectively if within our ranks Hitlerite theories are tolerated and enforced. This is demoralizing not alone to Negro citizens but to whites as well, tens of thousands of whom are trade unionists accustomed to work side by side with Negroes in democratic equality. It is apparent too that the present mistreatment of Negro soldiers is having a profound effect upon the morale of the Negro population as a whole, who, together with colored peoples all over the world, wonder at the sincerity of our nation's war aims.

The disgraceful and humiliating status of Negro soldiers in the armed forces must be ended. All racial discrimination must be wiped out, not only as a matter of constitutional right, but as military necessity for winning the war as rapidly as possible. The way to fight this evil is not in the armed forces. There, it is the patriotic duty of all soldiers to meet the military discipline and regulations laid down by the Commander-in-Chief, a duty which they have been fulfilling with understanding and great credit under enormous provocations.

The job of wiping out discrimination in the armed forces falls upon the civilian population, Negro and white, working together with labor and all other anti-fascist sections of the population in the interest of victory both abroad and at home. It means defeating the domestic fascists and poll taxers, whose anti-Negro, anti-Semitic and anti-labor activities would disrupt our country from within.

Attorney General Biddle should be compelled to defend the constitutional rights of Negro citizens within the armed forces and to prosecute any fascist-minded individuals or groups who refuse to respect the uniform of the United States. President Roosevelt should be called upon to appoint a special committee to investigate racial discrimination in the armed forces.

Meanwhile, labor, the Negro people and the broadest sections of the patriotic citizenry should rally around the program of the National Negro Congress, worked out at its recent Cleveland Conference, to end jim-crow in the armed forces now as an integral part of the fight for an early victory.

Army Discrimination

Dear Editor:

PM is to be commended for its active participation in the Alton Levy case. Both in its news items and its editorial opinion, PM has shown that the function of a newspaper is not merely to select and report news, but also to carry on a campaign for the integration of our country's democratic ideals into society.

The case of Alton Levy is basically a legal test of the discriminatory practices of the Army in training. Levy openly in officer's meetings made charges of the discrimination practiced against Negroes in camp. Levy's charges were never investigated, but instead he was court-martialed for making them.

This case has a natural tie-up with the Winfred Lynn case, which is a test of the legality of the Jim-Crow induction of Negro soldiers. The 1940 Draft Act, Section 4A, reads: "In the selection and training of men under this Act, and in the interpretation and execution of the provisions of this Act, there shall be no discrimination against any person on account of race or color."

Winfred Lynn is at present in Camp Beale, Cal., and he has brought a "habeas corpus" action against the Army authorities on the ground that he was illegally inducted in the Army. In the brief argued before the U. S. District Court on Dec. 12, 1942, the lawyers for Lynn argued, among other points, that:

¶ Segregation is discrimination.

¶ Military and industrial efficiency is injured by segregation and discrimination.

A National Citizens' Committee for Winfred Lynn has been formed and its function is to raise the finances for the case and to popularize the issue among the people. A new brief has been filed in the Circuit Court of Appeals and the case will be heard there in the latter part of November.

We of the committee feel that nothing is more needed today than an uncompromising stand by our own government on the question of democracy. No people's war can be fought with an army raised and maintained on the principle of segregation.

Wilfred H. Kerr.
New York Co-Chairman

The War Dept., for self-protection, is probably justified in its attempt to play down the court-martial of Sgt. Alton Levy who, like American veterans who fought on the Loyalist side in Spain, is probably guilty of "premature anti-fascism."

After more than a year's service in the Army, in various posts, I can also testify that in no area where I have served were Negro soldiers treated with the respect due them as soldiers wearing the uniform of the U. S. A.

Needed: An Army orientation course that teaches Americans to live together in a democratic manner in an alleged democratic nation. A course to offset the anti-democratic, anti-Semitic and anti-Negro propaganda spread within the U. S. A. by certain officers and enlisted men—deliberately.

Labor Leaders Call Meeting To Study Levy Court-Martial

BOSTON, Oct. 9—David Dubinsky, president of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, and A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, announced today that they are jointly sponsoring a meeting of New York labor leaders on Oct. 20 to take up the case of Sgt. Alton Levy, court-martialed by the Army at Lincoln, Neb. Levy, former organizer for the ILGWU, was convicted of making false statements about the treatment of Negroes at the Air Base there.

Dubinsky on Thursday asked Sens. Wagner and Mead to demand an investigation of Levy's conviction and sentence to four months of hard labor.

In addition, the session, which will be held at Freedom House in New York City, will consider the case of Winifred Lynn, a Negro inductee who is suing the War Dept. for its alleged violation of Sec. 4-A of the Selective Service Act which bars discrimination in the selection of inductees on the basis of race, religion, color or creed.

Dubinsky said that major consideration would also be given to a proposal for making a permanent agency out of the Fair Employment Practice Committee so that it can function in the postwar period.

Did Not Leave Levy - NAACP

Never Entered, Group Asserts

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(SNS)—The NAACP refuted this week the Associated Negro Press release which stated that the NAACP had withdrawn from the case of Sergeant Alton Levy.

"This is incorrect in two respects," the NAACP wire to all Negro weeklies read. "The NAACP has never formally entered the case and could not therefore have withdrawn. In fact the NAACP still has the case of Sgt. Levy under investigation."

Levy, a white soldier, court martialed and serving four months, said in letters to friends that he was being penalized because he protested the treatment of Negro soldiers at a camp near Lincoln, Nebraska.

A JEW PROTESTED—JAILED

SEP 24 1943

According to a story released by the Workers' Defense League of New York and given wide publicity in many weekly and some daily papers, Alton Levy, a Jew, is now serving a four-months sentence at "hard labor" because he, as a soldier, protested the ill treatment of Negro soldiers stationed at his his camp.

Levy was tried by a special court martial, reduced from sergeant to the ranks, in addition to being sentenced for four months at hard labor. Based upon our information, regarding this case, we STRONGLY protest this injustice to Sergeant 'Alton. It looks to us as if the action on the part of the military court in this case was to put fear in the hearts of any who might venture to raise their voices against the mistreatment of Negroes in the armed services. It may be that because Levy 'Alton, was a Jew, and being also a member of a persecuted race, it was easy for racial prejudice to play its part in the affair. Therefore, we are wont to ask —when did it become a crime for one of a different race to protest injustices against other races, even in the armed forces of the United States?

Witnesses Testify That Bias Shown Negro Aids Axis

SEP 22 1943

Daily World
Atlanta, Georgia

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Two "breaks" in the united front, and the confidence in certain responsible quarters that others may follow, were evident immediately Saturday following the conclusion of four days' testimony before the Fair Employment Practices committee inquiring into allegations that 22 railroads and 14 labor unions had shown discrimination on the basis of color and national origin in their employment policies and practices.

The first of these appeared on Friday when the Union Pacific railroad, charged with refusing to hire Negroes, Mexicans or American citizens of Mexican descent in certain shops and job classifications, entered a statement through its counsel, F. E. Baukhages. "The summary of complaints of which we are advised by the committee counsel (Bartley C. Crum, special counsel) suggested the existence of conditions not recognizable within the employment policy of the U. P. railroad," the statement opened. It concluded with this:

"Since, however, the hearings have developed specific instances of alleged discrimination, we have obtained from the committee counsel the details of the alleged specific instances. These we will fully investigate with a view toward the speedy correction of any situation inconsistent with the company's policy."

Thanking counsel for the U. P., Crum declared that it was just the type of thing that might have been expected from a company headed by "a man of William Jeffers' reputation as a public servant," and in his opinion represented a "notable contribution" to the purposes of the executive order.

N. Y. WILLING TO TALK

On Saturday, F. B. Wheeler, general attorney for the New York Central railroad, on authority of L. W. Horning, vice-president in charge of personnel, entered this statement in behalf of the company:

"The New York Central is willing to sit down at any time with members of this committee to discuss this matter to see if there is some solution."

Wheeler's remarks were prefaced by those of Crum who recalled in his opening statement that he had set as the objective of the hearings, a determination of the facts, and the evolvement of a solution, and further that any "suggestions from the carriers' toward the attainment of this goal would be welcomed at any time during the hearing. The Central's statement was in line with this invitation.

Privately, it is understood, counsel for the carriers at the conclusion of the hearing were showing a greater disposition to approach the problem with a view toward working out a solution than at the outset. They had been accused of sitting down and permitting the proceedings to go on without benefit of comment from themselves.

Sidney S. Alderman, representing the Southern Railway company, but speaking for the group of companies represented, disclaimed this as the position of the carriers. He said that they had avoided putting "obstructions" in the way of the cases, for which they were criticized. He thanked the committee for the courtesies that had been shown, and expressed his personal view that the hearings had been "kept on a very high plane," and himself looked to a solution of the problem.

LABOR NOT REPRESENTED

At no time in the proceedings were the labor unions represented, although it is known that observers for several of the brotherhoods were among those attending. On Saturday, however, A. R. O'Brien, identified with the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, against the preponderance of the union charges had been levelled, was given permission to say for the record that he was present as an observer but could make no further representations. He asked for and was allowed until four days "after the hearing" to file what he called a "statement of position" for the brotherhood.

Among those railroads which filed answers to the bill of particulars which had been sent to them on Sept. 3 by the committee, that of the Norfolk and Western Railway company appeared to be saying with greatest clarity what evidently was in the minds of the others. The company had been charged, among other things, with refusing to fill vacancies as firemen with what are called "non-promotable men." Flatly counsel told the committee that "non-promotable men means Negroes."

Later Mr. Rivinus said, in answer to invitation to make a statement if he chose, that he preferred not. "We simply present the bold fact which we regard as completely responsible to and pertinent to the subject of the complaint. We offer no comment and we make no justification," he concluded.

PROPAGANDA [illegible]

Outside of the discussion of the specific charges involved, perhaps some of the most striking contributions to the hearing were made by the expert witnesses who testified that the treatment being accorded minority groups in the United States is being made the subject of short-wave broadcasts to South America, Africa, the far east and "even to the folks at home," for the purpose of spreading disunity.

Clyde R. Miller, associate professor education, Columbia university, and a co-founder in 1937 of the Institute for Propaganda Analysis, was the first of the two witnesses. He took the stand on the opening day, was shown sample broadcasts which had been made available to the committee's counsel by the intelligence division of the Federal Communications commission, which he identified as "typical."

"Japanese and German propagandist exploitation of feeling of racial superiority and racial inferiority is extraordinarily effective, almost immediately effective, dynamic and dangerous," Mr. Miller declared. "One of the strongest weapons in the hands of Hitler—and American propagandists consciously or unconsciously following the Hitler pattern—is exploitation of what anthropologists call the 'myth of racial superiority."

JAP DOCUMENT READ

On Friday afternoon, Otto D. Tolischus, journalist and lecturer, and for years the New York Times correspondent in Tokyo and in Berlin. read portions of a document called the "Way of Subjects" used by the Japanese Ministry of Education for the guidance of educational as well as the propaganda system of Japan. This pamphlet forth, he said, the thesis that the white man is oppressing and exploiting the all-colored races, and that Japan is fighting the white man as the champion of the colorde races.

Mr. Cum offered in evidence excerpts from the broadcasts which Mr. Miller had been shown. Some of them he read to the committee, others he told in summary form because of their "inflammatory content."

The Germans, he testified, use the material in a "triple-barreled" manner. First, he said, the Nazis point to American treatment of Negroes as supporting evidence that Americans themselves believe in Nazi theories about racial superiority. Second, they use the Negro question as indications of "discontent and possible revolutionary elements" here. The third argument, contrary to the first two, he said, insist that Negro ideas and folkways have become a part of American civilization sufficiently to "Negrofy" it, to coin a word. Jazz was the illustration given.

HAAS THANKS CONFEREES

Only four members, including the chairman, were present when the hearings concluded, Miss Sara Southall, Samuel Zemurray and and Boris Shishkin having left to keep other appointments. Mgr. Francis J. Haas announced at the conclusion that the committee was appreciative of the effort made by both sides, and that the evidence would be taken under consideration, and action in accordance with the executive order would ultimately be taken.

Section five of the order gives the committee the authority to "conduct hearings, make findings of fact, and take appropriate steps to obtain elimination of such discrimination." Section seven says the committee, in the performance of its functions and exercises of powers, may utilize such state officials (meaning government officials) "and agencies and in such manner as it may determine."

The conclusions being reached have it that the committee may pursue one or more of the following courses:

1. Present their findings to the railroads and secretly negotiate a solution.

2. Permit the railroads to reply to the findings, and then make public the findings followed by directives to the companies to do thus and so.

3. Submit the findings to the President along with recommendations as to what should be done to win compliance.

There is the feeling among one element here that the committee may not define its "authority" until it has had time to determine "what strength" it has been able to develop out of the hearings. Whatever is done, it is expected that two or three weeks at least will have elapsed before any move is made.

WMC, FEPC To Put Agreement Into Practice

Daily World

SEP 9 1943

Single Item Had Held Up Working For Over Year

Atlanta, Georgia

WASHINGTON—(A N P)—Procedures to be followed by the Fair Employment Practice committee and the War Manpower commission in line with the agreement reached by the two agencies in fighting discrimination in industry, have finally been worked out, it has been learned, and will go into effect shortly.

The single item which caused so much controversy and which has hung fire for more than a year, the famous C-45 bulletin, has now been adjusted to the point where responsibility will be divided but at the same time the objective of the President's anti-discrimination order will be achieved.

C-45, issued by the United States Employment service, a sub-agency of WMC, provided that if an emlpyoer placed an order for workers which carried discriminatory specifications, the USES was to first attempt to convert the employer to the acceptance of whatever labor is available, but if unsuccessful, to go ahead and fill the order according to the specifications.

The procedure that has been worked out now follows much the same pattern except that, when the employer has refused to change his specifications, the USES will send whatever workers are available, including Negroes. The employer will then be put in the position of refusing to accept the Negroes, thereby creating a case of discrimination.

The workers referred will then be able to file a complaint with the FEPC, and the USWS is required to file a form in which they will set forth the circumstances of the order and referrals. The employer, in the course of time, will be called upon to give explanation of his hiring policy.

Protection Sought for Group That Shunned Jim-Crow Auxiliary

WASHINGTON

The President's Fair Employment Practice Committee on Monday took action to prevent discharge of several hundred employees of the Marinship Corporation shipyard at Sausalito, Cal., for refusing to pay dues to a jim-crow auxiliary of the AF of L Boilermakers' Union.

In wires to both company and union officials on Monday, the FEPC asked that action be withheld pending issuance of the committee's findings on its recent West Coast hearings.

The Boilermakers' Union bars colored workers from membership in its regular lodges, but insists that they pay dues to Auxiliary Local 41, set up under jurisdiction of Subordinate Lodge No. 6, or be discharged from their jobs.

Requirement New

A conference of union officials, management representatives and FEPC affiliates, at which the dispute was to be discussed, was scheduled for Monday.

The telegram from FEPC headquarters called attention to the fact that colored workers have been allowed to remain in jobs at the shipyard without belonging to the jim-crow auxiliary throughout the past year, and asked that such a condition be restored for the sake of maximum production.

It was also pointed out that testimony at recent hearings revealed dissatisfaction with the system of enforced membership in jim-crow auxiliaries throughout the West Coast area, and even some doubt among white union members as to whether the practice conforms to true trade union principles.

Southern Roads Must Answer For Their Color Bias

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON—(A N P)—Barring an 11th hour-about-face, the Fair Employment Practice committee will raise the curtain here on its delayed-action hearings into the railroad industry on Sept. 15, with repeat performance on the 16 and 17.

Of all the hearings that have been conducted in the two year existence of the committee, none has succeeded so well in being the cause of celebre of the masses and at the same time the bane of the top-hat pressure boy's such as the one now about to take place.

It is the purpose of this series to discuss the subject in such a manner as to afford some understanding of the factors involved, and their broad implications. Indeed, this is no ordinary hearing. Was it not twice postponed and later the rock that wrecked the original committee?

HELD TEN JOBS

When the average person thinks of the Negro as a railroad worker, his first thought is of the redcap who carried his bag or the sleeping carporter who made down his berth or the waiter who brought him his meals. While redcaps, pullman porters and dining car waiters are the primary classifications of Negro railway workers, they are not the only ones. As late as 1924 there were at least 10 other major jobs held by Negroes.

Exact figures on the employment of Negroes past and present have never been complete or even adequate except possibly the estimate made in 1937 by the Railroad Retirement board, which claimed that of the 1,957,688 persons engaged in rail transportation, 180,535 were Negroes. There is no breakdown to show the distribution of these workers. The bulk, however, are common laborers and assorted types of porters.

WORTH THE EFFORT

Even among the men whose efforts precipitated the demand for a hearing into the industry, the firemen and brakemen, there is little agreement on estimates. The figure varies anywhere from 1,200 to 6,000 workers, depending upon the source of information.

Nevertheless, while the actual number of the jobs involved is uncertain, there is little doubt as to the worthiness of the effort to determine whether or not there has been discrimination in certain job classifications based upon race, creed or color, all with an eye to eliminating this discrimination.

Before touching on the complaints that have been filed and which are the bases for the hearing, everyone ought to have a smattering of knowledge at least of what the employment situation was 40 or 50 years ago and right down to the present. Highpoints are adequate.

ONCE IN MAJORITY

In this, the day of the diesel engine, those who handle the powerhouse of our modern streamliners are almost in the class of white-collar workers compared to the character of the job years ago. Then, locomotive engines sped down the right-of-way only because a man was in it shoveling coal for all he was worth—which wasn't much as wages will bear out.

This type of work was hard, hot and dirty. A fireman had to shovel from 12 to 15 tons of coal any day on a regular run. The jobs of brakeman and switchman also were no desirable types of work. Naturally, it being below the dignity of the white man, Negroes were used largely in these tasks.

At one time—and this was before and including the period of World War I—Negroes were in the majority on southern lines as firemen, switchmen and brakemen. Ninety percent of the firemen were said to be colored at one time on the Seaboard Air line, Atlantic Coast line, Georgia railroad, Louisville and Nashville, and the Southern Railway company.

PICTURE CHANGES

Switchmen and brakemen were in relatively the same position. In the Florence, S. C., yard of the Atlantic Coast line, all switching was done by Negroes; today there are hardly any. Terminal yards in Houston once had 85 percent Negro switchmen; today there are about 15 percent.

The bureau of labor statistics of the department of labor got up some figures in 1924 to show that throughout the United States, Negroes were engaged in the railroad industry to this extent in the seven major categories:

Laborers 95,7[illegible]; Porters [illegible] in and pullman 20,224; Firemen 6,478; Brakemen 4,485; Switchmen and flagmen 2,874; Boiler washers 2,377; Foreman and overseers 1,195.

Others were in baggage, and freighting, conductors, engineers, inspectors, telegraphers, and telephone and telegraph linesmen.

A study made by Dr. Robert C. Weaver, Dr. Charles S. Johnson, Dr. Ira De A. Reid and Dr. Preston Valian for the period 1925-36 showed there to be 1243 Negro firemen throughout the country which is quite a contrast to the labor department figure. Whatever the case might be, the number is shrinking—and rapidly.

The coming of the diesel engine has given impetus to the drive.

In 1909 the Georgia railroad replaced 10 white hostelers with Negroes at a reduced rate of pay. This antagonized the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen—in which Negroes were barred from membership—and they called a strike. The effect was to crystalize the sentiment among white railroad men to eliminate the Negro as a competitor. Two years later, another strike took place on the Cincinnati, New Orleans and Texas Pacific railroad, and 10 firemen were killed with many injured. The strike was provoked by the hiring of Negroes for the first time.

Gradually a campaign of intimidation developed that began to reduce the ranks of Negro firemen, switchmen and brakemen. The trend was accelerated by the change to war work where better salaries were to be had.

But those who were to remain behind decided to organize and to fight the fight. The first organization of Negro railway workers, the colored Locomotive Firemen's association, was formed in Georgia in 1902 or 1903. In May, 1915, the Railway Men's International Benevolent and Industrial association was organized in Chicago for the purpose of forming "one big union." Robert L. Maye headed it.

Six Basic Complaints Against 23 Railroads and 14 Unions

PROMOTION CLAUSE MAIN GRIEVANCE

Wage Differentials, Five-Day Rule Also Cited as Unfair

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — Charges of discrimination in employment because of race or color lodged against twenty-three railroads and fourteen labor unions, will be examined by the Fair Employment Practice Committee at public hearings to be held here September 15-18.

The hearings will be held at the departmental auditorium, Department of Labor, Twelfth and Constitution Avenue, Northwest.

Promotable Clause

Chief among the practices coming under scrutiny of the committee is that of considering colored railroad workers "ni'n-promotables." This is alleged to have railroad workers "non-promota- of agreements between union and railroad which set certain restrictions on the percentage of colored workers which may be employed in a stipulated category.

At the same time, all wage contracts carry what is known as a "promotable clause." One agreement between a union and Southeastern rail companies said that "all new runs and all vacancies shall be filled by promotable men," thus eliminating all colored workers.

SEP 11 1943

Wage Differentials

Another of the six basic complaints is wage differentials which are existent particularly on the Louisiana and Alabama Railway Company.

SEP 11 1943

For five classes of service among firemen on the L. and A., whites get an average of $5.78 per diem, colored get $3.83. For brakemen, five services, whites get $6.44, colored, $4.09.

5-Day Rule

The five-day rule, although not listed on the colored firemen's schedules, has caused many of them on the Illinois Central system to be thrown out of work, and hence is another source of grievance.

This rule provides that when a furloughed fireman desires to retain his seniority rights, he must within five days file his address and telephone number in writing with the officer notifying him of the furlough and furnish the local chairman a copy of the notice.

No Upgrading

On three or four railroads in the north, waiters are objecting because they cannot become stewards. There are complaints elsewhere that colored men may not proceed automatically from the ranks of trainmen on some railroads into the ranks of conductor.

Colored employees are complaining too that in the shops in which a number of them find employment, they are not given the privilege of being upgraded. And still others are peeved because they cannot hold any of the clerical jobs with the carriers.

COAST WATCHES FEPC BOILERMAKERS' HEARINGS

Courier Pittsburgh Pa.

LOS ANGELES—The entire Pacific Coast is watching the coming FEPC Boilermakers' hearings to be held next Monday and Tuesday in Portland and the following Friday and Saturday in this city. The paramount issue of whether Auxiliary unions shall continue to exist for Negroes in this AFL body will be of vital importance to thousands of persons employed in the various shipyards from the Northwest to Southern California where the Auxiliary set-up exists. Added interest in the controversy has since come with the recent dictum by Federal Comptroller General Lindsey Warren, that the FEPC does not have the power to enforce non-discriminatory practices.

N.Y. State Tells War Plants How to Hire Colored Workers

JAN 9 - 1943

JAN 9 - 1943 By ARNOLD BEICHMAN

The New York State Committee on Discrimination in Employment, which enforces State laws against biased hiring policies, today issued a pamphlet advising management on the most efficient methods for bringing colored workers into war industries.

The committee is part of the New York State War Council and is headed by State Industrial Commissioner Frieda Miller. Labor, management, and the public are represented in this group.

The pamphlet, prepared by Prof. John A. Davis, of Lincoln University, ex-assistant secretary of the committee, is a frankly written, practical handbook. It doesn't minimize the fact that, even where a company adopts a nondiscriminatory hiring program, rank-and-file workers may react unfavorably.

The contents, according to the committee, are based on the accumulated experience of many war plants, including, Ford, Bell Aircraft, Grumman, Republic Steel, Wright, Winchester Arms and others.

JAN 9 - 1943

Where to Get Copies

JAN 9 - 1943

Copies of the pamphlet can be obtained from Commissioner Miller, 80 Centre Street.

The pamphlet, divided into six sections, deals with:

Selection, introduction, and placement of the colored worker.

Methods for overcoming the resistance of the white worker to the employment of colored persons.

The role of the labor union in meeting this problem.

Shove Negroes In Cargo Hold, Oiler Charges

N.Y. "Amsterdam"

Whites Fraternized Freely Despite Bad Morale Conditions

STAR NEWS.
New York, N.Y.
JAN 2 - 1943

"Negro soldiers are quartered aft, Jim'd in the C deck cargo hold, but white soldiers, even Southerners, fraternize freely with them."

This paragraph, lifted from a story which appeared in the current issue of the Pilot, official publication of the National Maritime Union of America, served to highlight anew the rigid segregation policy of the United States Army.

According to the Pilot, the story was written by Ed Silver, professional writer, former employee of U. S. Treasury Department. He is just back from Casablanca. He kept a log—just for the fun of it, and it is this log, published in full in the Pilot that tells a revealing story.

Shipped as Oiler

JAN 2 - 1943

Part of the log reads:

Oct. 5-Nov. 1 — Went to work Monday, Oct. 5. Signed the ship's articles on Tuesday, Oct. 6. Lay there for three weeks with rumors about departure arising every other day. Said goodbye to Natalie a dozen times, but the final farewell came on Saturday, Oct. 31. Although I was not at all certain our crew passes would not be renewed."

Ed went to sea shortly after his graduation from New York University in 1926 when he shipped out as an oiler on the Guantanamo of the Ward Line. He later made a trip on the El Estare of the Southern Line. So, in returning to the sea, rather than sticking to his "essential war" job in the United States, he was going back to his early love.

On Sunday, Nov. 1, Silver wrote in his log: Troops are streaming on the boat—troops from everywhere—North, East, South, West. A large contingent of Colored troops is quartered aft. On the C and D decks. (These boys weren't taking any chances. Had their life preservers on a half hour after being ferried to the ship, even though they were still tied to the dock.)

It was on Thursday, Nov. 5, that he entered the notation quoted at the beginning of this story. The day's entry began: Thursday, Nov. 5. Tandom notes: The ship's swimming pool is the soldiers' latrine. The first-class dining salon is the messhall where the boys file through practically all day and eat standing up.

JAN 2 - 1943

"Negro soldiers are quartered aft, Jim Crow'd in the C deck cargo hold, but white soldiers, even Southerners, fraternize freely with them."

Damaging to Morale

The full story in excellent reading, but the reports disclosing the treatment of Colored soldiers under official policy as they move closer into the actual fighting zone, is most damaging to the morale of soldiers still in the camps at home as well as civilians who are constantly being besought to made additional sacrifices in a fight for a free world.

Fact that white troops ignored the implication of the jim crow arrangement and fraternized with the Negro troops seem to prove that the soldiers themselves, white and black could and would solve their own problems without much difficulty were it not for the sinister practices that prevent them from working, playing and fighting together.

"We can never make any substantial improvement in our race relations in this country," said the Rev. John H. Johnson, distinguished Episcopal minister," as long as Jim Crowism remains a national policy."

L.A. DELEGATES PROTEST TO CHIEF AT BASE

Commander Orders Petty Officers To Change Attitudes To Men

JAN 2 1943

By LAWRENCE F. LaMAR

PORT HUENENME, Calif. —Jim Crow signs separating Negro and white sailors in training here were ordered taken down on Monday by Capt. R. N. Needham, base commander.

When informed of the signs by a committee representing the press, N.A.A.C.P. and the Los Angeles Ministerial Alliance, Commander Needham, who is new at the base here, was very cooperative in investigating and acting to help break down the smouldering feeling of resentment in the camp.

The committee consisted of this writer, Herman Hill, and the Rev. A. Wendell Ross, pastor of Pleasant Hill Baptist church and president of the Los Angeles Ministerial Alliance.

The report carried charges of "systematic employment of southern practices against the Negr sailors by segregative and discriminatory methods designed to insur white supremacy at the camp These charges heard from Negr sailors, who filtered into Los Angeles on leave, said that officer and petty officers "freely used th term 'nigger' in referring to them. White petty officers assumed "domineering attitude and me were being thrown into the bri because of expressing their resentment against these policies," i was charged.

Charges Denied

JAN 2 19

Lieut.-Com. J. P. McBean, Jr commander of the 4th battalion o Construction Battalion, known a the Seabees of which all of 120 Negro sailors here are member expressed surprise at most of th charges, and questioned the committee as to the identity of th men making the charges. Th committee refused to do this, explaining that some time ago whe a few Negro sailors aboard a shi had complained of treatment a the hands of their superiors an their names were published in paper, they were all subsequentl disciplined.

JAN 2 1943

McBean denied ever hearing an officer use other than courteou language toward any enlisted man He did admit, however, that sign segregating the men by race had been tacked in a number of places about the camp. He claimed that 80 per cent of the Negro sailors came from the deep south, and that a large percentage of the whites also came from the same section of the nation. He said the men from the south understood the separated status of the races in the south and preferred its maintainance.

These remarks were challenged by the Reverend Ross, member of the committee, who denied the Negro favored segregation. "I wouldn't attempt to break the law or the custom of the south, but I do, and every other sensible thinking Negro in this state does also, resent and challenge men of the south who come here to bring their southern system to California."

Morale Question

JAN 2 1943

The minister went on to point out the tremendous task that has befallen the Negro press and the pulpit to keep up the morale of the Negro in face of such attitudes which appear to be increasing rather than decreasing.

The committee closely questioned McBean on charges that Negro Seabees had been restricted to limited areas of a few blocks in the nearby city of Oxnard, and were being declared "out of bounds" by members of the shore patrol when found anywhere else. The officer denied any knowledge of this.

At the conclusion of the two-hour interview, Commander Needham told McBean to take down jim crow signs. The base commander informed McBean to address the officers and petty officers to refrain from addressing men under them other than by their name or as sailor. It is generally believed by the committee that conditions in the camp, now that Commander Needham has taken a hand, will greatly improve in the near future.

NEGRO LAWYER QUITS FAIR PRACTICE GROUP

Fight for Democracy Must Begin at Home, Stevens Asserts

JAN 18 1943

Harold A. Stevens, one of the two Negro attorneys for the President's committee on fair employment practice in its proposed hearings on complaints of discrimination against Negro firemen and brakemen on railroads, resigned yesterday in protest against an order by Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission, for indefinite postponement of the hearings.

Mr. Stevens charged in his letter of resignation that the order was "a blow to the Negro railroad workers who looked to your committee for some solution or adjustment of their problems for which courts refused to take jurisdiction and which other governmental agencies avoided" and was regrettable because of its wider implications.

"The order," he added, "is some evidence of a flagrant disregard by Mr. McNutt and the WMC of the problems and rights of minorities. It establishes a dangerous precedent and causes some speculation if principles are not being sacrificed because of political pressure.

"Certainly, unless effective action is undertaken immediately, the Negro railroad fireman and brakeman will soon be a thing of the past. The fight for democracy and justice, like charity, must begin at home."

JAN 18 1943

Mr. Stevens's resignation followed that of Henry Epstein, former Solicitor General of New York, as chief counsel for the committee in the railroad case.

The Negro in War Industry

'42 Saw Jim Crow Walls Dented

The Negro people during 1942, assisted by the people's anti-fascist organizations, blasted the idea into hundreds of industrialists' heads that it was not the "usual" war but a people's war they were fighting and that usual habits could no longer prevail. Industrialists, however, continued to discriminate in the hiring of Negroes, both ingrained personal prejudices and the customs of their prejudiced class dictating policy.

When they were cornered, as they frequently were during 1942, by the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee or by delegations of Negro citizens or groups of trade unionists, the industrialists or their spokesmen would protest that white workers wouldn't stay on the job if Negroes were hired.

HARD VICTORIES

The attitude the Negro people and their friends faced here was the normal or usual one. But the situation was not normal or usual. Unusual methods, therefore, were necessary in fighting this attitude. The National Negro Congress, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Greater New York Coordinating Committee for Employment, and other organizations, continued for a while to fight on the basis of the Negro's right, as a citizen in a democracy, to do the same work, at the same pay, as white ctiizens.

PARTIAL GAINS

The Greater New York Coordinating Committee for Employment's fight to get Negroes into decent jobs at the New York World's Fair in 1939 succeeded, in part, because placard-bearing Negro and white pickets in front of Grover Whalen's offices were too open a challenge to be ignored by "The World of Tomorrow." The public supported them. That same Committee's, the National Negro Congress' and the Harlem Labor Union's bitter struggle to place Negrose on buses was successful because the Fifth Avenue Coach Co. and the New York City Omnibus Corp. were losing about $3,000 daily through boycott by the Negro people.

The organizations that won those magnificent fights had a more difficult struggle than did the union of department store employes at Macy's, Bloomingdale and Hearns. The local in each of these stores demanded of management that Negroes be integrated in all phases of work, including sales at counters and clerical. The union argued that Negro boys in the service of these stores were going into Uncle Sam's service and that, preparing now to fight for democracy on the battlefield, they should be given a demonstration of it at home.

The three stores signed contracts with the union, promising to hire Negroes.

JAN 14 1943

The Communist Party, followed by the trade union movement, first projected the idea now being accepted by larger numbers of industrialists and by management in general—that the question of jobs for Negroes in war plants was not one of "justice" or of social reform but of winning the anti-fascist war.

War-contract holders who formerly had refused to hire Negroes now found their position considerably weaker. Their old arguments would no longer fit.

JAN 14 194

LEGISLATIVE AID

The people's loss of patience with prejudiced industrialists helped passage of laws in New York against discrimination by plants involved in war contracts. It backed up President Roosevelt's Executive Order 8802 "reaffirming the policy of full participation in the defense program of all persons, regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin, and directing certain action in furtherance of said policy." That "certain action" was the establishing of the Committee on Fair Employment Practice in the Office of Production Management. (The FEPC has since been removed to the Manpower Commission.)

The Negro people (through their organizations and their newspapers), the CIO trade unions (which, in turn, inspired the leadership of the AFL), and the Communist Party, provided the enlightenment which changed the attitude of some sections of management.

Management today is becoming so deeply interested in the question of integrating the Negro in war industries that it makes speeches and writes booklets about it. "The Negro Worker, An Analysis of Management's Experience and Opinion on the Employment and Integration of the Negro in Industry," is the latest contribution to management's understanding of this question. It is put out by the American Management Association, 330 W. 42nd St., New York City.

INDUSTRY LEARNING

JAN 14 1943

Has management, then, been convinced that the war we are fighting is not the usual war and that business as usual is out? A considerable portion of it has been so convinced, as is proved by this statement from management's "Negro Workers" booklet:

"Industry's pressing need for the services of able-bodied persons—irrespective of the color of their skin—effectively and happily removes the problem from the province of social reform, paternalism, or other sentimental considerations. It is no violation of the ideal of objectivity and freedom from sentiment to say that the advent of the Negro into the industrial picture on a larger scale is intimately tied up with our democratic system. . . ."

The fact that it is a belated discovery makes it none the less a welcome one.

Bledsoe Refused Chance to Train As Mechanic

KANSAS CITY, Kas.—(Special) —"Sorry, we didn't know you were colored," are the words which dismissed Raymond Bledsoe, 2028 N. Tremont, from a chance to work in aeronautics.

Bledsoe received a letter Wednesday from the Kansas City division of the American Aeronautical Institute, Inc., 2425 McGee Trfy., Kansas City, Mo.

The letter goes:

Dear Mr. Bledsoe:

There is such a serious shortage of skilled mechanics in the Aircraft Industry in Kansas City that some of the factories have asked us to locate persons who would be suitable with proper training to qualify for higher paid jobs.

You have been investigated and approved tentatively for such training if you are interested.

Please call HA. 5332 for appointment.

The letter was signed J. F Driesbach, personnel officer.

Bledsoe got his appointment and went to the office Wednesday afternoon, aglow with an opportunity in a field in which he is much interested. He told The Call that when he went in to see about the job the secretary in the outer office stepped into another office, came out a minute later and told him that it was not known that he was colored and "we haven't enrolled colored up to now."

Bledsoe, who is "airminded," was actually disappointed. He said he has always been interested in "that sort of thing." He now is employed at the Quartermaster depot, Independence and Hardesty.

The Call contacted the institute and was unable to reach Driesbach at press time. A reporter was told that the school did not enroll Negroes.

OWI Says Registrants Being Chosen On Fair Percentage Basis; More than "Fair" In South

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Negroes are being inducted into the Army through Selective Service in the same proportion that Negro registrants bear to total registration, and Negro soldiers are now on active duty in most of the overseas theatres where other American troops are stationed, the Office of War Information announced today.

The OWI cited official records of the Bureau of Selective Service, War Manpower Commission, which reveal the following facts about Negroes in the armed services.

(1) Although Negroes constituted 9.8 percent of the total population in the last census, Negro selectees and volunteers constituted 10.1 percent of all persons inducted into the Army through Selective Service by October 31, 1942.

(2) In 9 out of 14 southern and border states, the percentage of Negroes inducted into the Army through Selective Service exceeded the percentage of Negroes registered in those states.

(3) During the 1940-41 period, Negroes constituted 16.1 percent of the total number of volunteers entering the Army through the Selective Service System.

OWI pointed out that there are Negro units in Great Britain, Ireland, North and West Africa (including Liberia), Australia, New Guinea, Hawaii, Alaska and the West Indies.

JAN 1 - 1943

Rumors that Negroes were not being inducted into the Army in comparable percentages have been circulated in various sections of the country, OWI declared.

Bureau of Selective Service statistics reveal that in the southern states on October 31, 1942, Negroes constituted 38.4 of all Selective Service inductions in Louisiana; 34.5 percent of all similar inductions in Florida, 34.5 percent in Alabama, 27.8 percent in North Carolina, 27.2 percent in Virginia, 19.4 percent in Texas, 19.1 in Maryland, 9.1 percent in Kentucky and 7.2 percent in West Virginia. In each of these states, the percentage of Negroes inducted exceeded the percentage of Negro registered under Selective Service.

In four states the percentage of Negro inductions either equalled the percentage of Negro registrations or closely approximated the proportion. Negroes constituted 44.2 percent of all Selective Service inductions in Mississippi, 34.0 percent of all similar inductions in South Carolina, 32.5 percent in Georgia, 21.3 percent in Arkansas and 18.5 percent in Tennessee.

Discussing the high percentage of Negro volunteers during the first year of Selective Service, the Director of that agency declared in an official report to President Roosevelt:

"One state with a large Negro opulation over a period of several onths filled every call made upon for Negro selectees by volunteers. n large sections of other states lso this has been true. The Ne- ro has availed himself as freely as ossible under the conditions to vol- nteer for service in the armed orces."

Felt He Was A Figure Head

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20 — Judge William H. Hastie, handed his resignation to the War Department Saturday. It was reported that his action was caused by dissatisfaction with cooperation given him by the department.

It was known that the ex-Judge of the Virgin Island, had not received a response he awaited from a detail report of observations and recommendations and he felt he was only being used as a figurehead. Lack of action on the part of the department in certain complaints concerning Negro soldiers also irked him. He is expected to return to the Deanship of Howard University Law School.

ANP's Confidental Source Fears Riots As Officers Force Discrimination

SEP 2 1943

Bystander
Des Moines, Iowa

New York (ANP)—From confidential sources which the Associated Negro Press has every reason to believe competent and reliable, and which the Associated Negro Press will not reveal, the following account of the American Negro soldiers in England has been secretly received:

"The conditions over here are getting like those in the states. White officers are doing a fair job in convincing some British people about the race problem. Most Negro troops are gradually being moved out of and away from the cities to isolated camps. White MP's are usually placed in these vicinities and intimidate Negro soldiers as well as the girls who are seen with them.

"Last week, there were at least two riots over here. Another one on July 1 and the last of May. During the last of May, two Negroes were reported killed, more wounded and a white officer wounded. Had an awful time throughout the night. One Negro officer practically took charge of the camp. He collected about 600 rifles in two days. Started when a white MP shot a Negro soldier.

"Last week, one [illegible] when fights broke out between Negro and white soldiers in a small city in northern England when white soldiers are reported to have resented British girls being with Negro soldiers. In a southern England city, there were a number of fights which started when a white lieutenant made remarks about some 'Nigger soldiers and merchant men' who were passing. The soldiers resented it. A riot was prevented by some of the few Negro MP's who came up and rescued the officer. Yet an MP sergeant (white) at the same time insulted a Negro officer who had tried to quiet the soldiers. At MP headquarters, the Negro officer said that he was insulted by te provost officer (white) in front of the other MP's, who were enlisted men, and arrested as being drunk. The coolness of the four Negro lieutenants, the colored MP's and the colored American Red Cross personnel prevented a probable riot during the night.

Riots Frequent

"Riots are much more frequent than the press can publish. The troops break into the gun rooms and get their rifles and ammunition to protect themselves often. If something is not done by the U. S. Army soon, I would not be surprised to see a major battle between Negro and white American soldiers. It seems that some people want southern U. S. A. transferred over here. Even Mr. Bondy from the American Red Cross is over here trying to find reasons for moving the colored clubs (clubs staffed by Negroes) out of certain cities, because it is said that certain people must be satisfied. One of them is Mr. Gibson, the American Red Cross commissioner in Great Britain. One of his excuses is that he understood that the Negro personnel were too highly skilled in their jobs.

"White officers are back of most of the trouble. They have even canvassed communities, telling the residents and business people not to serve or associate with the Negroes (whom they command and get their promotions off.) The few Negro officers are treated as bad by their fellow officers. There are some fair minded officers, but they are not permitted to do much because they are not promoted and are shifted in many instances from place to place.

Want Negro Officers

"Have seen a couple of colonels who were very good, but their executive officers are rotten and slip many things over. The Negro soldier is doing a job. All he wants is to be treated like a soldier. Negro soldiers want Negro officers. Their conduct on a whole is excellent.

"If- you can convince the white officer that each Negro soldier wants to get home to his colored wife or friend, you can do a good job. These boys are not excited by the white girls even though they are sought out by the girls in many cases. And the whole thing seems to hinge on the friendship of the Negro and the white girl. Many soldiers are in a low frame of mind, and if they were not real soldiers, I am convinced that the enemy would be trying to work on them. However, it is possible, that the enemy is helping these riots to break out since the tension is so great.

"The American Negro soldier is often fined his entire salary or more for the smallest infraction. Oftimes they must travel 20 miles to another town to have a little fun. The Negro Red Cross worker is being resented because the soldiers look up to them for leadership. Also the American Red Cross workers are not wearing bandana handkerchiefs. The U. S. Army is to blame for most or the trouble not the fifth column. The officers won't give the fifth column a chance."

Lawyer Reports Soldier Held Innocent, Then Convicted

PM
New York, N. Y.

PM Exclusive

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7.—A new mystery today surrounded the court-martialing and conviction of Alton Levy with the disclosure that the Army court found him guilty 48 hours after the presiding officer, speaking for the court, had expressed the belief that Levy was innocent.

The unexplained reversal is cited in a report submitted to Levy's father by Leon Despres, Chicago attorney who investigated the case at the elder Levy's request. His findings were submitted to the Workers Defense League which made these facts available to PM.

In a letter accompanying the report Despres declares that "an outstanding legal error was committed when the court, after announcing it believed Levy innocent of the specifications, entered a finding of guilty two days later."

Four-Month Sentence

Levy, Bronx-born former organizer for the ILGWU (International Ladies Garment Workers Union), was convicted on three counts on Aug. 16 and sentenced to four months at hard labor at the Lincoln (Neb.) Air Base, where he was stationed. He was also stripped of his sergeant's stripes and demoted to a private.

According to Despres' report, the second of the three charges alleged that Levy "wilfully and maliciously" made "false statements" about the mistreatment of Negro soldiers at the Base. The other two counts accused him of circulating slanderous remarks about the commanding officer and his wife.

The American Civil Liberties Union, Freedom House, the American Labor Party and a number of other groups have protested the sentence, asserting that Levy was punished as a reprisal for his reported concern over handling of Negroes.

PM last Wednesday submitted a series of questions on the case to Adjutant-General James A. Ulio and a spokesman for the War Department said yesterday that a reply to these inquiries was being prepared.

Sequence of Events

The sequence of events in the closing days of Levy's court-martial is described this way in Despres' report:

"On Saturday, Aug. 14, the court reconvened and the president, Major Washington, said that the court believed Levy to be not guilty of the specifications as charged and asked whether he might be found guilty of a different offense.

"After receiving a negative answer, the court retired again. Everyone present congratulated Levy and he believed himself acquitted.

"On Monday the court again reconvened, over defense counsel's objection, recalled Miss Armstrong, a civilian, and then found Levy guilty of all specifications. Levy says that Miss Armstrong's oral testimony on Monday added nothing to her written statement which had previously been admitted into the record."

Rumors Rife

Despres, who conferred with officials at the Lincoln Base in the course of his inquiry, also said in his letter introducing the report that rumors such as those which Levy was convicted of circulating were rife throughout the camp. He said that he tested this out with soldiers he met near the Base and found that they quickly repeated the same gossip. In view of the wide currency of such rumors Despres asked in his letter:

"Why was Levy chosen to be court-martialed?

"Did the difference lie in Levy's background as a labor organizer and a champion of Negro rights?"

The Chicago attorney is coming to Washington next week in an effort to lay his defense of Levy before military and civilian officials.

Despres attached to his letter the text of the appeal which Levy made to the reviewing authorities after he was found guilty.

Statements Denied

In his appeal Levy again denied making the statements about the commanding officer and his wife attributed to him at the trial. With reference to his statements on the treatment of Negroes, he said:

". . . I did say the Negroes were mistreated. I did say only 40 were allowed passes each night. I did say that my training group, not the base, had about 200 Negro soldiers. But here's the strange thing: Although these are allegedly false statements, at no time did the prosecution attempt to prove or establish that they were false statements. Yet I was found guilty of this specification also.

"I submit that in the absence of any proof that these statements were false I should not, indeed, could not properly have been judged guilty.

'Slander' Answered

Answering the charge in the third specification that he had "wilfully and maliciously" slandered the military record of his commanding officer, Levy wrote:

"Specification No. 3, in that it attributes to me a flat direct positive statement is also untrue. Here again I admitted to having discussed the rumor with Miss Armstrong and Sgt. Bolton. But only as a rumor. We all three discussed it briefly and went on to other subjects.

"Significant here is the fact that Sgt. Bolton was originally listed as a witness against me. The prosecution refused to call him, so defense called him as a witness."

Levy said that Bolton's testimony showed that Levy, "far from spreading or lending credence to the rumor," had actually proposed that the camp paper take active steps to explode false reports.

Summing up his plea Levy pointed out that his past Army record was spotless.

OCT 7 1943

"I want to be able to continue with my plans for advancement in the service," he said. "With the black mark of a court-martial against me I cannot do so. I am aware that this is a lengthy communication. It is no exaggeration to say that upon the remarks contained herein hangs my future."

This is Levy's own version of the court-martial's abrupt reversal, as depicted in his appeal brief:

"On Saturday, Aug. 14, the second day of my trial, the court was declared open. The following announcement was made by the president of the court:

" 'The court does not believe that the accused is guilty of any of the specifications as drawn but desires to find out if he could be charged with an offense based on Exhibit C.' The answer of the trial judge-advocate was: 'It is the opinion of the prosecution that no further evidence has been introduced which would warrant any further charges.'

Counsel's Objection

OCT 7 1943

"The court then adjourned until Monday, Aug. 16, and returned a verdict of guilty on all counts. When it became clear that the court intended to reopen the case on Monday, my defense counsel objected on the grounds that since the court had openly announced its belief in my innocence, it could not validly reopen the case. He quoted an opinion of the judge-advocate general which held that, if the findings had been guilty reopening the case would be permissible but since the finding was not guilty, as stated in open court, reopening was not permissible.

"He was overruled.

"Nothing that Miss Armstrong said on Monday differed from her statement already accepted as evidence. Nothing was introduced that could possibly have changed the court's verdict of guilty. I believe the objection of my defense counsel should have been sustained."

Officially the War Dept. has taken the stand so far that since Levy's conviction was sustained by the Army Service Command no further review is possible. Levy's defenders, however, have urged President Roosevelt to exercise his authority as Commander in Chief to reopen the case.

WASHINGTON PARADE

By GLADSTONE WILLIAMS.

PSYCHIATRIC REJECTIONS WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—Much of the present manpower muddle in relation to Army plans for drafting fathers may be attributed to two factors: (1) The work of the psychiatrists in rejecting an inordinate number of would-be selectees because of minor nervous conditions, and (2) the influence of various pressure groups in objecting to the use of Negro troops as labor battalions.

SEP 23 1943

Between these two factors lies much or most of the problem. But for them there would be less of a demand for drafting fathers.

Selective service officials complain that the psychiatrists are placing entirely too much emphasis on nervous disorders found in selectees. Whether this is the fault of the specialists as a professional group or the Army itself is not known, but the fact remains that a very considerable number of younger men are being turned down for Army service because of some slight nervous condition.

For the country at large, the number of such rejections made by the psychiatrists is running at about 23 per cent of the total acceptances. In the last war only 5.1 per cent of those coming under the draft were rejected for similar causes.

On the surface, it appears that the psychiatrists are leaning over backwards in an effort to avoid a repetition of the conditions which we found after the last war. Many or most of the veterans' benefit cases which the government had to support as a result of World War I casualties were attributed to "shell shock" or other forms of nervous disorder.

SEP 23 1943

MAY GO TOO FAR When we began building up the present Army under the selective service system the psychiatrists sought to eliminate that future load on the government by weeding out the nerve cases in the beginning. It was a scientific step in the right direction. The only trouble is, it is believed, that the psychiatrists are carrying the theory too far.

A common complaint heard among selective service officials is that the doctor specialists, who sit in at every induction center, are guided too much by theory and not enough by practical sense.

Some rather extraordinary cases are cited in proof of the charge. There is, for example, the case of a soldier who was turned down twice by the psychiatrists as unsuited for the nervous strain of combat service. He finally got in by appealing over their heads and has since been decorated twice for bravery in action.

Another case involved one of the psychiatrists themselves. After turning down a number of draftees as unfit for service, he finally got in the Army himself and in time was assigned to duty in the South Pacific. In his first combat experience he went completely to pieces. It fell to the lot of one of the men he had formerly rejected to bring him back safely from the front lines.

Selective service headquarters here has the record on both cases. Others they have are equally interesting.

FEW HAVE COMBAT EXPERIENCE One fault with the psychiatrists, officials here believe, is that too few of them have had combat service. Unofficial estimates are that not more than one in one hundred of those now assigned to induction centers has seen action under fire. The result is too much theory.

To correct this, informal proposals have been made for the assignment of a board of veterans at each induction center to pass on every case turned down by the psychiatrists. These veterans of the battle front, it is argued, would be more able to judge of a man's fitness for combat duty than a mere theorist.

As regards the colored troop situation, there are said to be some 500,000 of these lying around Army camps of the country doing little or nothing because they are not being used for actual combat service. Our overseas commanders do not want to use them for front-line operations, and various pressure groups, consisting of left-wing political organizations, object to them being used exclusively as labor battalions.

The pressure organizations have insisted that the colored troops be not used as labor outfits in excess of their ratio to the whites, which is roughly 10 per cent. Thus far they have been able to bring enough influence to bear, it is said, to prevent their use exclusively in labor battalions. They are supposed to be receiving just enough preliminary training to keep them occupied.

POLITICAL FEARS Because of the political implications of the question no one in congress thus far has seen fit to discuss the matter openly. It is expected to come out into the open in time, however.

If the colored troops could be employed in the manner in which our Army commanders think they are best suited for service, and if the psychiatrists were less finicky in their requirements for men free of any trace of nervous disorder, then the whole manpower problem would be greatly simplified. Much less of a demand would exist for drafting fathers.

CREAM ALREADY TAKEN In mitigation of the present muddle which the psychiatrists have contributed to, however, there is this much to be said. We are now scraping the bottom of the manpower barrel, and naturally the cream of the crop has already been skimmed off. It is to be expected that a larger number of rejections will appear now than in the beginning.

Still it seems possible to improve the situation by having the psychiatrists adopt a less stringent policy and dealing with the colored troop problem in a more practical way.

WASHINGTON DAILY FLAYS ARMY OVER WAY NEGRO SOLDIERS ARE MISTREATED IN MANY SECTIONS

WASHINGTON. — In a forthright editorial statement, the Washington Post, leading capital daily, last week charged that the "humiliation" and "violence" visited against Negro soldiers by both white soldiers and civilians, and the consigning of colored troopers to an 'inferior status" is "one more manifestation of a dangerous disregard of democratic values which has been carried over from civilian life into the armed services."

SEP 15 1943

Declaring it the inescapable duty to the army to "promote among its enlisted personnel a decent regard for the rights and feelings" of Negroes in the service, the Post suggested launching of educational programs among whites to afford a "greater knowledge of the Negro's contribution to the war effort, of his legitimate aspirations. They simply cannot effectively wage a united nations war with color prejudices in their minds."

Continuing the widely read daily stated:

"Efforts must be made at the same time to make Negroes feel that their contribution is appreciated. They have shared in some of the toughest fighting of this war. They are entitled to hope that this world struggle for human liberation will open up to them richer opportunities for advancement and education than they have hitherto enjoyed. They can scarcely be expected to give full devotion to the democratic cause unless it affords some recognition of their legitimate aspirations.

"Any such program of education obviously must be accompanied by a firm insistence on the part of the army that Negro rights be respected by men in uniform and civilian alike. There are many ways in which any intelligent camp commander can act to erase the causes of friction between white and colored troops.

"He can see to it, if Negroes are segregated, that adequate recreational facilities are available to them, not only inside the camp but also in the community near which the camp is located. He can act to secure reasonable transportation service for his colored soldiers in places where jim crow traditions prevail. And, above all, he can insist that civilians show respect to the uniform his men wear, whatever the color of their skins. Officers should not be placed in command of Negro troops unless they have a sympathy for them and a willingness to safeguard their rights.

"It is not part of the army's business, to be sure, to remedy all the defects of American life. But is a part of the admy's business to set an example of devotion to democratic principles. And it is high time now for the army to do this in regard to its Negro soldiers."

Baptist Clergy Endorses Action Of Chaplain Fuller

Tribune
Philadelphia, Pa.

Local Baptist clergymen on Monday "went to the bat" for Chaplain L. M. Fuller, who was court martialled recently and who is awaiting the sentence of the trial body.

In identically worded resolutions to President Roosevelt and Secretary of War Stimson, the clergymen, through the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Philadelphia and Vicinity, condemned the treatment of Chaplain Fuller and requested that colored chaplains be "given the same and equal opportunities for rank promotion as given to chaplains of other races."

The action of the chief of Army chaplains, Gen. William R. Arnold, in first trying to dismiss Chaplain Fuller without a hearing and then attempting to persuade the Ecclesiastical Endorsement Committee to withdraw its endorsement, so that he might be discharged without a hearing, was criticized.

The Conference endorsed "Chaplain Fuller's courageous stand in exposing the unrighteous and un-American brutality and abuses shown Negro soldiers in America and abroad."

Levy Released

NEW YORK—Pvt. Alton Levy, white, court-martialed for opposing army jim crow at the Lincoln (Neb.) air base, was freed Friday after serving less than three months of his four-month sentence at hard labor.

The Public Relations Office at the base said he had been released because he had earned time off for good behavior.

NOV 20 1943

Seeks Vindication

Leon Depres of Chicago, Levy's attorney, said he would continue his efforts to obtain complete vindication for the soldier.

"We should like to obtain for Levy not only vindication, but restoration to his rank of sergeant and reimbursement of lost pay," he said.

CAMPAIGN TO ABOLISH JIM-CROW IN ARMED FORCES LAUNCHED BY NNC

Weekly Review
Birmingham, Ala.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Sept 26 — The National Executive Board meeting of the National Negro Congress here today adopted a six-point program to eliminate jim-crow in the Armed forces, called for the speedy termination of the war by the immediate opening of a Second Front in Western Europe and launched a national campaign to defeat the enemies of the Negro people in the 1944 elections. The program outlined to abolish discrimination in every branch of the fighting services embodied in the report of Edward E. Strong Executive Secretary of the Congress, and unanimously supported by the more than 70 Board mmebers and visitors present, called for:

1. Issuance of an Executive Order by the President to abolish jim-crow in every branch of the fighting services.
2. Introduction of a Congressional bill to outlaw discrimination in the Army, Navy and Air Corps.
3. Establishment of a National Committee to Abolish jim-crow in the armed forces consolidating the efforts of those organizations having this as a common aim.
4. Petitioning the national bodies of the CIO and the AF of L to incorporate in their legislative programs the campaign to democratize the armed forces.
5. The publication by the NNC of literature on all phases of Jim-Crow in the armed services and outlining specific proposals to remedy these conditions.
6. The organization of a national delegation of fifty leading Americans to visit Washington for one week to consider the problems of the Negro and the armed forces with the Navy and War Departments as well as with President Roosevelt.

Stimson Says Local Commanders Must Solve Race Troop Problems

Journal and Guide
Norfolk, Virginia

Secretary Of War Discloses Much Progress Is Being Made

By ERNEST E. JOHSON

WASHINGTON—(ANP)—It is up to the local commanders concerned to "face and solve" the problems arising out of inadequate transportation and recreational facilities for Negro soldiers, Secy. Henry L Stimson of the war department announced Thursday at his regular press-radio conference.

"I am very glad to say that very considerable progress has been made toward such a solution of these problems," he added. "Of course it is my desire that this improvement be continuous."

Thus for the first time, the war department appears to have publicly indicated that there has been an adjustment in policy with regard to the handling of two of the sore spots of army life which have been pointed to by leaders the country as basic to grievances of Negro soldiers.

EXPLAINS COMBAT QUERY

The secretary did not explore the situation too thoroughly, but did recognize the "ever recurring" character of the problems developing adjacent to army camps.

Attempting to meet the criticism that the war department refused to use Negro troops in actual combat assignments, Stimson said the department did not intend to put men into the field until they had passed rigid tests and were ready.

"Our units are sent to theatres (of operations) as they are needed and when they have demonstrated their readiness for combat by successfully completing the war department rigid tests with respect to all arms and services,"

"Those are the lines that govern their being sent to theatres of operations. The war department feels that our present occupational policies are serving the war effort to the best advantage, and that a deviation from it is not feasible at this time."

RACIAL BOOKS ISSUED

The secretary was queried on the dissemination of reading material among men attending army war colleges, the subjects of which deal with of a "longstanding policy" to suggest reading matter of "timely and professional interest" to all officers.

The department prepares booklists reading, he said which is circulated to the college libraries. While the lists are officially considered beneficial, they do not necessarily represent by their contents the expression of the policy of the department, he said, nor is ita part of a "scholastic program."

"They are informative only, and the war college program has lately issued such a list as I have described on the subject of race relations," he asserted.

SCOURGES RACIAL THEORISTS

OCT 2 1943

NEW YORK—Morris M. Levy, father of former Sgt. Alton Levy, pleaded to President Roosevelt for an "immediate review" of his son's case "and justice."

Alton Levy is the soldier who was court-martialed at the Lincoln, Nebraska Air Base on alleged charges of slandering the Commanding General and criticizing the treatment of colored troops.

In a letter to the President, Levy's father said in part:

"It was reported to me that my son, Alton Levy, a Sergeant in the United States Army stationed at the Lincoln, Nebraska Air Base, has been court-martialed, demoted to Private, placed in the guardhouse for four months at hard labor, and fined $18.00 reduction in pay a month. My son, Mr. President, is suffering all of this because he dared to speak up for the rights of other American citizens who were being abused because they were black or because they were of the colored race. My son did the same as I would have done because I have taught him that America is the home of the free regardless of race or color. If this were Hitler's Germany, I know there would be no need to write you—because I would be ignored. But this is America—and my son is in the Army to fight to destroy the brutal racial theorists of the Fascist war monsters, and yet my son is being punished for fighting the same type of theorist here at home.

"My son spoke the truth—has the truth no virtue? Is the truth not to be given justice? He said nothing in secret. He made his complaints concerning the treatment of colored soldiers at every staff meeting."

Asking for an immediate review of the Alton Levy case, the letter concluded. "Let it not be said that the United [illegible] is no differen[illegible] the "Nazi hordes which we fight."

At the same time that Mr. Levy's letter was released by the New York office of the Workers Defense League, A. Philip Randolph, Willard S. Townsend, William M. Agar, Laurence T. Hosie, Nathaniel M. Minkoff, H. L. Binsse, and Morris Milgram, National Secretary of the WDL, sent 50,000 letters to liberal Americans calling for letters to President Roosevelt on the Levy case. They also called for donations to help free Levy and announced that this "is our opening gun" in the fight to end U. S. Army jim crow.

FDR's Aid Sought for Soldier Who Fought Discrimination

By James A. Weschler
PM's National Editor

SEP 30 1943

PM
New York, N. Y.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—The War Dept. has officially buried the vase of Alton Levy.

The Department's stand was revealed today amid mounting appeals to President Roosevelt and Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson for a full-fledged investigation of charges that Levy was court-martialed, demoted and sentenced to four months at hard labor because he protested mistreatment of Negro soldiers at the Army Air Base in Lincoln, Neb.

Responding to inquiries on the status of Levy—Bronx-born sergeant who lost his stripes and was sent to the guard-house on Aug. 16—a spokesman for Col. Thurston Hughes, in the office of Adjutant-Gen. James A. Ulio, told PM that the case was closed and that "there's nothing further the Department can do about it."

SEP 30 1943

No Higher Review

The spokesman said that the verdict of the courtmartial had been upheld by the Army Service Command at Denver, Col., and that no higher review within the War Dept. was possible in a case of this kind.

Levy, it was stated, was tried under a "special" court-martial, involving a maximum sentence of six months, and decisions in such cases cannot be appealed to Washington. Only a "general court-martial carrying the penalty of death or dishonorable discharge, may be contested here, the Department said.

Appeals to FDR

Although a War Dept. press-relations officer said that the proceedings of court-martial may be made public except where issues of "security" are involved, PM was informed by Col. Hughes' office that the record in the Levy trial could not be disclosed.

It appeared today that any future move in Levy's behalf would have to come directly from President Roosevelt, acting as Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces.

The American Civil Liberties Union, the Workers Defense League, Freedom House and a number of other organizations have already urged the President to intervene and scores of individual appeals have been addressed to the White House and the War Dept.

Queries in Writing

Morris Milgram, executive secretary of the Workers Defense League, declared today that his organization would continue its fight for a "full airing of all the facts" despite the ruling of the War Dept. A. Philip Randolph, leader of the March-on-Washington Movement, said that a mass meeting protesting the treatment accorded Levy and other cases of alleged bias in the armed forces was being planned.

SEP 30 1943

Some confusion still remained over the exact counts on which Levy was tried and convicted. Col. Hughes' office denied at first that his complaints against Negro discrimination were involved in the punishment. It was said that Levy was found guilty of "slandering" the commanding officer and his wife.

In response to a request for a full statement of the charge and conviction, however, PM was told that further questions would have to be submitted in writing because "the matter is controversial." These questions have been submitted.

Levy's defenders assert that the "slander" charge was window-dressing for the trial and that the crux of the case revolved around the accusation that he made "false statements" about the handling of Negro soldiers.

Letters from Levy to friends, written before and during the trial, indicate that he was deeply concerned about the way in which Negroes were being treated at the Lincoln base. In one letter, written on July 28, he said:

"Most of the whites in charge of them (the Negroes) are Southerners. Naturally, as a result, they are treated like dogs. They are kept in camp while the others are allowed out. They are hounded and harassed and yelled at and cursed and insulted and generally treated abominably."

SEP 30 1943

PM's Questions

Early in August, Levy informed friends, he was interrogated by Army Intelligence officers about objections he was quoted as making about the treatment of the Negro soldiers. Following the court-martial he was reduced to the rank of private, with an $18-a-month forfeiture of pay.

A former organizer for the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, Levy, who is 29, attended DeWitt Clinton High School and CCNY.

In line with the Department request for written inquiries on the case, PM has submitted the following questions to Adjutant-General Ulio:

¶ What were the specific charges on which Levy was tried and convicted?

¶ Has any inquiry been made with regard to the treatment of Negro soldiers at this base to determine whether statements attributed to Levy were true?

¶ Col. Hughes' office informed us that the full court-martial proceedings are secret. Is there any way in which we can obtain access to the testimony on which Levy was convicted?

SEP 30 1943

¶ Did the issue of the treatment of Negro soldiers at the base figure in the proceedings and, if so, was any testimony obtained from the Negroes themselves?

Investigate Officer Who Struck Unshaven Soldier

DEC 4 1943

FT. DEVENS, Mass., Dec. — (ANP) — Quiet satisfaction that the army will attempt to make amends in cases of flagrant mistreatment of soldiers is permeating the ranks of the 650th Quartermaster troop transport group here. Several weeks ago, one of the men in the outfit was struck over the head with the butt of a rifle reportedly because the man would not shave. The soldier is said to have contended that it was against his religion to shave and refused to do so. The officer who struck the man, allegedly a Capt. Walton is rumored under investigation. Gen. B. O. Davis and Civilian Aide Truman K. Gibson visited the post shortly after the incident.

Mistreatment Of Troops Stirs Attorney General

Tension Rising; Both Races Cautioned To Unite Before Recurrence of Riots Start

New York, N. Y.
Amsterdam News

By ULYSSES S. KEYS
(Special to Amsterdam News)

DEC 4 1943

BALTIMORE—"Evergrowing racial tension" has Attorney General Francis Biddle fearful that a recurrence of race rioting will break loose any place at almost any moment. This was the context of his address here last week at the 18th annual convention of the National Bar Association. Over 200 lawyers present heard Mr. Biddle list, without elaboration, the following major causes of unrest in Negro-White relations:

Treatment of Negro servicemen, general war tension, reduced police protection—due to the man-power problem, bad housing, and the "contradiction between our (whites) profession of faith in democracy and our (their) acts" in reference to the Negro.

Nation-wide Problem

The Attorney General declared that the acuteness of racial friction is no longer a local or geographical matter, but a national problem. Leaders of both races should act at once to alleviate the pressure which may probably occur. This should be done by local communities, he pointed out.

White and Negro citizens who seriously study ways to relieve the rise of racial strife should form committees to achieve these ends, he suggested. The formation of a national committee to aid in improving better undertanding between the races, was also stressed. In fact, Mr. Biddle expressed disappointment in finding such few interracial groups in various parts of the country.

Questions Justice Dept.

Responding to the address by the Attorney General, Charles H. Houston of Washington said the Department of Justice should let it be known that it will prosecute inefficient police where their action tend to produce or intensify racial friction. He declared further, that the government should not call on its citizens to fight without protecting them from abuses when they are in the uniforms of the armed forces.

He called attention to the fact that Negro soldiers are not being used in actual combat and are not "in the fight" but constitute the "scrub team" of the Army. Before the war is over, he added, it is likely that the "scrub team" will be called upon to play a major role.

Serious Session

The delegates, representing some 1400 Negro lawyers, went into session on Friday at the Masonic temple when its president, Euclid Louis Taylor of Chicago, in a militant address, told the conferees that the colored people of the nation are expecting them to fight for the protection of their civil rights and liberties.

The lawyers, who came from all parts of the country, went into one of the most serious sessions in the association's history. They discussed the problems affecting the Negro people in interstate transportation, the armed forces, war industries, at the polls, in government positions and segregation and discrimination based on color. They discussed laws, decisions and technique dealing with these issues and put into effect machinery calculated to solve the problems.

DEC 4 1943

Hastie Addressed Lawyers

Ex-judge William H. Hastie at the opening session delivered an address on the "Legal aspects of racial discrimination in the armed forces." George W. Johnson, deputy chairman of the FEP committee, on Saturday spoke on the "Current efforts of the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee to prevent discrimination in industry."

DEC 4 1943

Other Speakers

At the public meeting held at the Sharp Street Methodist church Friday evening Governor Herbert R. O'Connor, governor of Md., Mayor Theodore R. McKeldin, Judge Charles E. Moylan of the state Supreme court, and Willard W. Allen, representing fraternal and business groups, gave welcoming addresses to the visiting lawyers.

Judge Francis E. Rivers of New York City and Thurgood Marhall, special NAACP counsel, addressed the meeting.

The convention closed Saturday following the election of Charles W. Anderson, state representative of Kentucky, as president.
